Leaves from the Journal of a Subaltern during the Campaign in the Punjub. Blackwood.

THESE "leaves" consist of extracts from the Journal of a young Company's officer, who has jotted down, for the entertainment and information of his friends at home, the incidents of the late decisive campaign in the Punjab, beginning with the march from Subathoc, in September, 1848, and ending with the arrival at Peshawur, in March, 1849, comprising the most stirring events, —the battles of Ramnuggur, Chillianwalla, and Goojerat, and the pursuit of the flying enemy by General Gilbert's force, to which the writer was attached. The descriptions have all the freshness of everything that is done at the moment; they are faithful transcripts of what the writer saw, felt, and heard,latter, of course, subject to future corrections,-in a dashing, sprightly, and graphic style. Take, as a short specimen, his account of the result of the fight at Chillianwalla:-

"The enemy were 60,000, all arms-which was fearful odds. They overlapped us in numbers on each flank. Such a mass of men I never set eyes on, and as plucky as lions: they ran right on the bayonets of the 24th, and struck at their assailants when they were transfixed. Men, who have seen many a campaign, say it was the ugliest piece of fighting they ever had anything to do with—a general action in a jungle, where you couldn't see twenty yards, and were pelted at from every bush. My leaping powers were in great requisition, and saved me many a scratch. Every one fought as if the blood of kings was in his veins, and each man emulated his fellow. If we had only had two more hours of daylight, we should have taken every gun they had, and smashed them altogether; but, even as it is, their loss must have been tremendous. In front of our regiment they lay in heaps of thirties and forties; and in other parts of the line, where our artillery was thicker, the carnage was immense. I had two or three very nurrow escapes; a man's arm was taken away with a round-shot, touching me; I had one shoulder-knot shot off; and a fellow who was lying with a leg smashed, about ten yards in front, was taking a steady aim at me, when I rushed forward to disarm him. He fired, and the ball whizzed past my ear; I tried to save him, but before I could interpose he was riddled with bayonets, and so, I am sorry to say, were almost all the wounded. There is no holding in the men when their blood is up. Our loss was somewhere on three thousand killed and wounded; and the slaughter amongst the officers is very great. Thirteen officers of the 24th Queen's alone are lying dead in one tent, and three more are dving. Nightingale's wound is very dangerous; the ball of the line, where our artillery was thicker, the carnage was immore are dying. Nightingale's wound is very dangerous; the ball went in over the eye, and traversed round the skull. But I am sick of the details of slaughter; our victory is dearly purchased."

Parts of the Journal had been previously published in the

On the Extraction of Teeth, with an Account of a much less painful mode of operating. By HENRY GILBERT, M.R.C.S., &c. Renshaw.

MR. GILBERT, in order to remedy the injurious consequences which may follow the ordinary mode of extracting teeth, proposes a chair of peculiar construction, with an apparatus, by which teeth can be drawn perpendicularly, or in the direction of the axis, thereby, amongst other advantages, avoiding injury to the jaw-bone, gums, or adjoining teeth, and saving a large amount of pain to the patient.

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutle), or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—it is valuable for present and permanent reference .... Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical student, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh."—John Bull.

poincy of Hunjeet Singh."—John Bull.

"The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the diligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

"It is an authentic work, and its statements are perfectly trustworthy. Indeed, it will be necessary for every one having a library to add this to the historical department, while the miscellaneous reader will find a powerful claim in its novel and stirring information."—Cheltenham Journal.

TO LADIES travelling, or while otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, RO VLANDSY RALYDOR will prove a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all best and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity and healthful state of the skin. Composed of choice exotics of balsamic mature, utterly free from all mineral admixture, and pleasing and delightful in tits effects, Rowlands' Kallydor tends to neutralize the action of the atmosphere upon the skin, and to promote that healthy action of the microscopic vessels, by which its general well-being and the beauty of its appearance are so essentially promoted. Freckles, tan, spots, pimples, flushes, and discolorations, fly before its application, and give piace to delicate smoothness, and the glow of beauty and of bloom. In cases of semburn, or stings of insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged, Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by Her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several courts of Europe, together with the title of the aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India to the frozen realms of the Car.—*** Beware of spurious "Kalydors" for sale, containing mineral satringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellent action endangering health. It is imperative on purchasers to see that the words—"Rowlands' Kalydors" are on the wrapper, and "A. Rowland & Bon, 20, Hatton Garden," also engraved on the Government stamp affined on each bottle. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Sold by the proprietors, and by chemists and perfumers.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer greet, advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profits to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a fiberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

In the Second Part,—English and Hindustani words, as are really of common use, in correspondence to the English, as well as to discriminate the various meanings which certain English words may bear, and to appropriate to each a suitable Hindustani word or explanation. The labour and reading required to effect these objects, as well as the accuracy sought to be secured, have occasioned some delay in getting this edition through the press; as, indeed, the time needed to collect a multitude of words for the First Part led the Author to put off, during some period, the commencement of the impression. It is, however, hoped that, by the course pursued, the utility of the work will be found so much increased as to prove that the time and pains thus taken have not been wholly misapplied.

HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

**On This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and unwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

"Dr. Forbes, by his Grammars and other works on the Hindustani and Persian Languages, has heretofore conferred an invaluable boon on all the students of Oriental Interature; but this Dictionary crowns the series as his magnum opus, for a great work we have no hesitation in pronouncing it, whether we regard its vast utility to the learner, or consider the immense amount of labour and practical skill brought to bear upon it by the author."—Calcutta Review, No. 19.

HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing.

To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persi-Arabic and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes.

By Duncan Forbes, LL.D. 8vo. cloth. 19x.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: a Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.—In Two Parts.

PART I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English.

PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustani; shewing at the same time the difference of idiom between the two Languages.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bound, 5s. 6d.

The BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales in the Hindustani Language. A new edition, carefully collated with onginal MSS., having the essential vowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Vocabulary of the Words occurring in the work. By Duncan FORBES, LL.D. Royal 8vo. cloth, 15s.

*6.* The Bagh o-Bahar is the test-book in which cadets and assistant-surgeous have to pass an examination in India. This edition was prepared under the authority of the Hon. the East-India Company.

GRAMMAR of the PERSIAN LANGUAGE. To which is added, a Selection of Easy Extracts for reading, together with a copious Yocabulary. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. Second edition, greatly improved and considerably enlarged. Rojal 8vo. cloth 12s. Gd.

*** A knowledge of Persian is absolutely necessary for reading the best compositions in Hindustani. The preceding Grammar, with its Selections, will amply suffice for this purpose: when the student has finished the Hindustani Grammar, with its Selections (in the Persian character), he will find it greatly to his advantage to devote a month to the Persian before he commences the Bagh-o-Bahar.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE short interval betwixt the arrival of the present and that of the preceding mail could not be expected to furnish matter of much interest. Nevertheless, the accounts from she western part of India being in arrear, there is no positive lack of intelligence.

The Punjab continues quiet. The defences of Mooltan had been repaired; at Peshawur the people continued to flock thither from the country districts; and with the exception of the expiring struggles of the Rohilla insurgents in the Nizam's dominions, and a slight disturbance in the Gwalior territories, India is in the same satisfactory state.

Official and fuller details of the insurrection of the socalled Appah Saheb and his Rohillas, and of the operations of the Ellichpore and Hingolee forces, enable us to lay before our readers a more correct narrative of this affair than appears in a previous Summary.

The self-styled Appah Saheb, in the garb of a Gosain, presented himself at Nagpore, and claimed the rai, as the true heir. He was seized and confined by the rajah, but subsequently released and sent across the Wurdah, where he was suffered to remain unmolested at Ajunter, representing himself to the Mahratta families as the rightful owner of the raj, and collecting armed followers, who were invited by the money he had at command. When his force became formidable, the Nizam applied to the Resident for the aid of the contingent, and Brigadier Onslow, commander of the Ellichpore division, was ordered to suppress the insurrection. Having instructions not to interfere with the Rohillas unless Appah was with them, the brigadier did not immediately act, but it being known that the pretender was collecting his army, numbering upwards of 2,000 men, the Ellichpore force marched against him, Brigadier Hampton, with the Hingolee troops, being directed to co-operate. By the combined operations of these troops, the rebels were ultimately routed, and the pretender was captured. Brigadier Hampton's despatch, detailing the action, is given under our Madras head.

Since then the troops of the Nizam's contingent have had other slight affairs with the insurgents. A body of 500, who had taken possession of and fortified a village called Woordee, to the west of Mominabad, was dispersed, and another large party of Rohillas collected to the south of the Cavalry Division cantonment, against whom its brigadier directed his march. The Ellichpore force, under Captain Ramsey, and the Hingolee force under Captain Stoddard (Major Hampton's severe wound having compelled him temporarily to relinquish the command), moved against the insurgents. The former had disarmed 120 Rohillas, and Major Beetson 130, and Captain Bullock, commanding the Hill Rangers at Booldanna, had captured 150. These miscreants are represented to have committed outrages upon the inhabitants of the most horrible character.

A private letter of a more recent date reports a gallant affair under Captain Howorth, of the contingent

"Captain Howorth, commanding at Worungall, proceeded lately, by order of the Resident at Hyderaody to a piaca called Budeeracheelum, with orders to seize and make prisoners of a body of Rohillas who were committing depredations there. A despatch has just been received, reporting that complete success has crowned their efforts. Before the enemy were aware of the approach of the troops, they found themselves surrounded by the cavalry, who, by a rapid move, under Lieutenant Willan, had covered the place the enemy occupied, and prevented their escape. On the arrival of the infantry, the enemy were summoned to surrender, and had an hour to deliberate. At the expiry of the appointed time, our troops advanced, and were met by a most severe fire from the loop-holed ghurree which the Rohillas had taken possession of. Two men were killed and Lieutenant and Adjutant Griffin and eight men wounded. There was an old gun in the village, which the two young artillery officers got hold of, and placed in position; another one inspired dread by its formidable presence close on the enemy's stronghold; by this means the desired effect was produced, and the enemy agreed to surrender, provided their lives were spared. This was granted and they marched out, to the number of about eighty."

In the Gwalior territory, a refractory thakoor, named Rao Booshan Singh, having taken possession of some forts, about 25 miles from the capital, was joined by the disaffected, and commenced levying exactions upon the people. A detachment, under Lieut.-Colonel Graves, consisting of a regiment of infantry, half a regiment of cavalry, and six guns, marched on the 25th May to reduce him. After an exchange of shots, the rebel offered to surrender, but he managed to escape. Another disaffected chief, named Goolab Singh, was also up, and had attacked and burned a village near Sepree. Three troops of cavalry had been despatched against him from Gwalior.

The Mofussilite announces the death of the heir apparent to the King of Oude, on the 26th May, of small-pox. The intelligence of his death had not been conveyed to the King, as his physicians suppose it might bring about a relapse of the melancholy state of mind from which he was recovering.

The trial of Moolraj, of the proceedings at which we have given a digest elsewhere, had not closed at the date of the last accounts. So far as the case had gone, the evidence appears rather favourable to the ex-Dewan, and shows some degree of indiscretion and blind confidence on the part of the two young officers. There is no reason to believe that he meditated bad faith, or that there was any understanding or conspiracy amongst the Sikhs at the end of April, 1848. The people were clamorous against the surrender of the government by Moolraj before our ambassadors arrived; the encounter with them was a haphazard one, and Moolraj afterwards placed himself at the head of a commotion which had arisen without his concurrence. The only evidence of his Dewan's complicity in the transactions which led to the death of the British officers is his having made a sign to the man who first attacked them, and allowed him regular pay after the murder had been committed by other hands. "The whole of his troops at that time," observes the Bombay Times-

"Were from 500 to 1,500, so that the insurrection might at the outset have been suppressed with the most moderate effort of vigour. Had the force of 6,000 men ordered on the 6th April by Sir F. Currie, when he first heard of the disturbance, to hold themselves in readiness, moved immediately, they would have been ready to act in concert with Edwardes by the middle of June, and most probably have had Mooltan made over to them without resistance."

The chief topics of discussion at Calcutta are the untoward arrival of Sir Wm. Gomm, and the intelligence received from Europe that Sir Thomas Turton's frauds are to be made good out of the Indian exchequer. As Sir S. Cotton, it is said, perseveres in his intention to resign, Sir Wm. Gomm would probably not refuse to take the command at Bombay, though he will certainly have good reason then to complain of his treatment.

The subject of Sir T. Turton's defalcations has been brought prominently forward by an application to the Government of Bengal by the Calcutta Trade Association, representing the losses which eight firms connected with the association had suffered from the "gross breach of the trust confided" to that person as a public officer, "owing to want of precaution of the proper officers of the Supreme Court," and praying that, in the terms precisely similar to that of the late Gilbert Ricketts, the deficiency may be made good out of the Indian revenues. The answer of the Government was, that "the President in Council cannot recognize any claim on the Government arising from Sir Thomas Turton's alleged defalcations as Administrator of the Estates of Intestates, but that the memorial will be forwarded for the consideration of the home authorities."

The Friend of India remarks, that if the precedent of Ricketts is considered binding,

"The prospects of the petitioners are sufficiently bright, although the sum now to be awarded is double that which was given in the case of Mr. Ricketts; but if the Parliament should listen to the voice of reason, justice, and equity, small indeed will be their chance of success. If it was the intention of Parliament that the East India Company should be considered perpetually accountable for all the defalcations which might occur in the offices of the Supreme Court, they should, in all justice, have given the Government of India some control over the nomination and the conduct of the officers. To give the patronage of the appointment to one party, and to make another party responsible for the misconduct of the officers, may be considered equitable within the walls of Parliament, but will be regarded as most iniquitous beyond them."

The Englishman takes the same view of the subject, and casts blame in the matter, not constructively, but directly, upon the Supreme Court.

"With regard to the Chief Justice, he is very far from being exonerated, nor was he powerless to stop the abuses which were going on in his court. The proof of this is, that he did stop them when the public scandal was so intense that he felt it impossible to shut his eyes to them any longer. He was publicly warned of what was going on years before, but he would not interfere. Above all suspicion of corruption himself, he showed an extraordinary sympathy for it in others, which we sincerely believe arose entirely from a kind disposition and reluctance to injure those with whom he was on terms of friendship. As for calling on the Government, it was only when the exposure had lowered the Supreme Court in public estimation, and made the judges feel that their own reputation was concerned, that any attempt was made to transfer the responsibility to the Government."

The Hurkaru regards the question differently, and argues that, "if the local government becomes aware that the property of its subjects is endangered by the incapacity or negligence of the Supreme Court, who shall say that it is not the duty of the Government to interfere for its preservation; and when the Supreme Court confesses its inability to protect that property, who will tell us that the responsibility does not devolve on the Government which can protect it, and whose duty it is to do so?"

In the meanwhile, it is consolatory to find that an Act has been prepared for avoiding loss by the default of public accountants—in which denomination are included all parties intrusted with the receipt or control of any money or securities belonging to her Majesty or the East-India Company, or as official assignee or trustee over any property whatever, to whomsoever it may belong.

The taint of mercantile immorality seems to have extended to the Mosussil. The Bombay Times, June 20, contains a disclosure of irregularities in the management of the Bank of Benares, founded on a letter of Mr. J. A. Sharman, a missionary, to the following effect:—

"The bank has been but a few years in existence. The stock at first was paid up in monthly instalments, and while a good flow of cash was coming in, and something like economy and prudence prevailed at head-quarters, all went well. In an evil hour the bank departed from its legitimate functions, and invested in the Ganges Steam Navigation Company not only the whole of its paid-up capital, but as much more as it could borrow. An increase of capital was now proposed, to conceal as well as make up for that which had perished. The increase was agreed to, and rumour having been loud as to the unsatisfactory state of the bank, auditors were appointed to report on its affairs. Their report was a most favourable one; but it was remarked that, notwithstanding the flaming representation made by them, one of the auditors lost no time in quitting the concern, though compelled to sell at a loss of 25 per cent on each share. The bank, Union fashion, purchased up the stock; and it now appears that, besides the report referred to, meant for the public eye, a faithful report was drawn up for the use of the directors, to whom it was sent privately, giving a true and miserable picture of the position of affairs. The shareholders meanwhile had become suspicious, and refused to pay up their instalments. Benares Bank stock had now sunk to half price, and the directors, finding themselves unable to cajole the shareholders, at once cancelled 1,067 unchased stock with money borrowed at 12 per cent. interest from the bank, and they now accordingly sold them to the bank at par when they were at from 30 to 50 per cent. discount in the bazaar; and this, too, when they refused to purchase on similar terms the stock of other shareholders. The directors had hitherto exercised absolute authority by reason of the votes of the holders of the 1,067 shares just referred to; when these were cancelled, the holders escaped scatheless—the instalments paid by them from loans received from the bank were allowed to be set down in full to their credit. The dividends before this given on the shares had of course been duly drawn and spent."

There is no dearth of news from the other Presidencies, but no incident at Madras or Bombay calls for particular remark.

TRIAL OF MOOLRAJ.

The long-expected trial of the ex-Dewar of Mooltan commenced at Lahore on the 31st May, before Mr. C. S. Mansel, C.S., President, Mr. R. Montgomery, C.S. and Colonel Penny.

The counsel for the prosecution was Mr. J. B. Bowring, C.S., and for the defendant, Capt. G. W. Hamilton.

The trial was conducted in the Dewan-i-Am, or hall of the Durbar. Two sides of the raised platform, on which were seated the members of the commission, the counsel for the prosecution and defence, prisoner, English recorder (Captain Wakefield), &c. were lined with troops, European and native; one side was set apart, and provided with chairs, for spectators. A few ladies, and several Sikh sirdars of note were present, and the centre of the large hall was nearly filled with natives.

Moolraj entered the court guarded by some European soldiers of the 98th regiment. He appeared nervous on first entering, and seemed care-worn. He was placed close to the table at which were seated the president and members of the commission, but with the exception of addressing, occasionally, a few words to his vakeel, he paid apparently but little attention to the proceedings.

After the Court had been sworn, the charges against the dewan Moolraj were read:—1st. For the murder of Agnew and Anderson. 2nd. For being an accessory before the fact. 3rd. For being an accessory before the fact. 3rd. For being an accessory after the fact. To all of which Moolraj pleaded "Not Guilty," with a wave of his hand. Mr. Bowring then addressed the Court as prosecutor, detailing the circumstances of the case in much the same manner as they were given to the public a short time ago in the Friend of India, in a letter signed "Ultor." Mr. Bowring stated that Moolraj had not, on the approach of Agnew and Anderson, quitted Mooltan to give them the customary Istiqbal, which was the more remarkable, as but a short time before, he had paid that compliment to one of those very same officers going out to meet him three or four coss. The address was delivered in good plain intelligible Hindustanee. After this, the first witness was called in and sworn.

Saluq Moohummad described himself as the son of Sur Boolund, an officer of the Sirkar, and Jagheerdar of Mooltan. He is a stout burly looking man, with an intelligent eye. He was, it is said, a sort of aid-de-camp and confidential adviser of the dewan; but finding that his advice was disregarded, and Moolraj embroiling himself with the British, he took the opportunity, when troops were sent from Mooltan against Edwardes, who was at Leia, to effect his escape, and got clear off with his family. This man gave his evidence in a very clear, straightforward manner, apparently speaking the truth whether for or against his late master. Thus, after Agnew and Anderson had been wounded, and Saduq Moohummad asked Moolraj what had taken place, the latter answered: "What has taken place, has happened contrary to my wishes;" and when he advised the Dewan at once to go to the Eedgah and visit Agnew, Moolraj said that he could not, for Rung Ram, who wished to go, had been cut down, and that if he attempted to go, he should be cut down also. Subsequently, when Moolraj called upon his followers to swear to stand by him, and they did so, affixing their seals, the Mussulmans to the Koran, and the Seiks to the Grunth, Saduq refused, remarking that such as were determined to stand by him could do so unsworn, while those who might be inclined to desert him would not be restrained from so doing by the ceremony. He then remonstrated with Moolraj on entering into a war with the Sahiban, without an army, and without munitions of war, Moolraj instantly answered:—"There is plenty of powder, ball, and grain." "Yes," said the witness, "but there is no army." To which the Deewan replied, "It is now the hot season (tapish) and the Sahib log cannot come. Before the cold weather, I will have the whole of the Punjaub for an arm.' Describing the commencement of the firing on the Eedgah, the witness said that a number of Moolraj's officers and soldiers were collected at the Am Khas, his residence, when some person whose name I did not catch, told Moolraj that, as he had begun, he should now go on vigorously and give them (Agnew and Anderson) no rest—'Foor sut.' 'Such bat,' said Moolraj, and immediately gave orders for the two guns in the Am Khas and the four outside to open their fire on the Eedgah, in which those gentlemen were both lying wounded. So far as this witness's evidence goes, it does not appear that Moolraj made any attempt to exert that influence which he undoubtedly had over his followers and soldiery, to prevent the murder of our countrymen; and, judging from the little which has come out, unless he can prove that circumstances were too strong for his control, his case will be a bad one. Such persons as had not seen Moolraj before, were disappointed in his appearance. The confinement, care, and anxiety of the last few months must have worked a change in him, but he never could have had saything remarkable in his appearance. He is frequently called 'the Bunya,' but there is nothing of that in his looks; he is thin (his legs very thin), sallow and rather hatchetfaced; but his eyes have a sharp look, and brightened up when he recognised and saluted an officer, with whom he became acquainted on his march from Mooltan to Lahore."

[The trial was proceeding on the 5th of June. The details of the evidence are too long and many of them too trivial to be given fully. When we are in possession of the whole, we shall lay a faithful summary of the evidence before our readers.—ED.

THE NAGPORE PRETENDER.

The Appah insurrection having been put down by the combined operations of the Ellichpore and Hingolee forces, so ably planned by the late much lamented commander of the former, Brig. Onslow, and ending in the capture of the pretender, and the destruction of the greater part of his band, so gallantly achieved by Brig. Hampton at the head of the latter, it will not be uninteresting to take a retrospect of the affair from its commencement, leaving it for those interested in the question to judge upon whom the blame ought to rest for both the Nizam's and Nagpore governments having been kept in a state of alarm for the last few months, and for considerable expense having been incurred in moving large bodies of troops on two or three occasions. That the self-styled Appah was released from confinement, and sent across the Wurdah, was confidently stated by men who were in his confidential employ; and this fact being believed by the people in this part of the country, in which he first tried to gain adherents to his cause, it was a difficult matter to make them believe also that he held correspondence with the person who acted such a friendly part towards him, and that he was supported by him. That he was allowed to remain unmolested for months at Ajunter, collecting followers, is too well known to admit of doubt. A man in the garb of a Gosain, stating himself to be the veritable Appah, presented himself at Nagpore and laid claim to the raj. He was seized by the Rajah and confined in irons, it is said, but report says was released at the intercession of some man in power, and sent across the Wurdah in a palkee. No sooner at large in the Nizam's dominions, than he made himself known to the old Mahratta families, zemindars, heads of villages, &c., by whom he was believed (or, at any rate, they pretended to believe him) to be the rightful owner of the Nag They in his behalf commenced collecting armed folpore raj. lowers, and established his head-quarters at the village of Ajun-Having a small sum of money at his command. - how come by is not known,—he was able to make advances of pay to some, and, by being most liberal in promises, numerous armed men of various descriptions flocked to his standard. It must be borne in mind, that while this was going on, all his movements were watched and reported on by Brigadier Onslow, but from some unaccountable cause or other he was told not to intersome unaccountable cause or other he was told not to interfere,—that the Nizam's government had given orders to the talookdars to seize the pretender and disperse his followers. Of course, under these circumstances, nothing was done, or at any rate nothing to effect the object in view, though he was openly collecting followers, and with the avowed purpose of attacking a neighbouring and friendly state. The country people saw how matters stood, and being told how the impostor was conveyed across the Wurdah, as a matter of course imagined, that, if not befriended by the British or Nizam's government, they at least did not intend to interfere in the matter, and consequently, as no plundering is allowed in the Nizam's villages, concluded there was nothing wrong in his proceedings. too late, that is to say when a considerable body of men had been collected, composed of Arabs, Rohillahs, and Dukhunees, the Nizam thought fit to call upon the Resident for the aid of the contingent, and orders were sent up to Brigadier Onslow for him to suppress the insurrection; but the orders were of a nature not likely to effect any other object than that of allowing Appah to escape and his followers to disperse. The orders were, we believe, that Appah was to be invited to Ellichpore, there to state his reasons for assembling troops; in the event of his not coming, troops were to be ordered out against him, and he was to be again summoned, and his followers told to disperse, and on refusal to do this he was to be attacked. might have been expected, it all turned out a failure. Whether Appal had any information that he was about to be interfered with or not, we cannot say, but it is supposed, and more than probable, that he had. On the message (a written one, we believe) being delivered to him by a Naik duffaldar of cavalry, he said, that had the summons arrived a little earlier, he should have been most happy to comply with it, but he was then pre-paring to cross the Wurdah to take possession of his country; pointing at the same time to some armed men who were then in the act of crossing. The subsequent events of this first insurrection have already been published. The grand army was met and repulsed by the Nagpore local troops, and the whole dispersed, Appah himself lying concealed during the time a most strict search was being made for him by Captain-commandant Stoddart and the men of his regiment. It was not to be wondered at that the search was ineffectual, when it is taken into consideration that he was favoured by every Deshmook, &c. in that part of the country in which he took refuge, and that from high to low every man did his best to mislead us, or withhold any information he might be in possession of. The troops having returned to their respective cantonments, and everything being again quiet, reports soon came in of numbers of Rohillahs collecting from all quarters at Kullum, and of Appalı being again in the field. Brigadier Onslow having orders not to interfere with the Robillahs unless it could be fully proved that Appah was with them, did not immediately act, but it was very soon known for certainty that he (Appah) was again collecting an army, and his force this time was said to amount to 2,000 Robillahs and 200 or 300 Arabs and Canaras. force marched on the 25th, and instructions were sent to Brigagadier Hampton to march as soon as possible, with the Hingolee troop, towards Woon, as it was supposed to be Appah's object to invade the Nagpore territory near Chandah. combined operations of the two forces Appali was captured, and his Robillah band—the most desperate one that had been known in the Deccan-completely routed, many of them being killed and wounded and taken prisoners. It was the greatest mistake Appah or his agent ever made enlisting such a desperate band of Robillahs as that which was the means of his capture. gang had for months been the terror of the country round Koorubguh, where it had committed all manner of excesses, and it was said, with what truth we cannot say, had collected considerable property in jewels, gold, shawls, &c. Having once got hold of a man possessing such influence over the people of the country as Appah had in olden time, they were able to collect supplies of grain, &c., and they knew too well what they were about to allow him to quit them. It is said, and fully believed by many, that Appah would have given anything to have been able to release himself from the army, which clung to him as "the old man of the sea" did to Sindbad; and that when the Ellichpore force first came upon him he tried every means to escape and give himself up to Brigadier Onslow, but a guard of four Rohillahs with drawn swords was constantly kept over him, and no communication allowed with the camp. supposed that this gang of robbers having Appah in their possession, would endeavour to make terms for themselves with Government by delivering him up; and, as on former occasions bodies of Robillahs had been treated with great leniency, and their claims been listened to, even when they were taken in arms, this supposition was not much out of the way. Great therefore was their surprise when they had the impertinence to plant their standard in bold defiance, and to fire upon the advancing troops. They however paid for their temerity, and we may thank them for the capture of Appah, and at the same time for the opportunity of giving the tribe at large a lesson long required by them, and which will be long remembered. Though this insurrection has been the cause of much evil to the country, it cannot be denied that good results have been derived from it. In the first place, the most stringent orders are at last in force regarding the expulsion of Rohillahs from that country, and already several bands have been disarmed preparatory to their being conveyed to their own country; and secondly, the good use made of the contingent, which we fear the Nizam was taught to believe was nothing more than an expensive toy, kept for the amusement of the Resident, and the means of providing for any friends for whom the Governor-General might not have it in his power to provide in the regular army; and which, though he had the pleasure of providing funds for its payment, he had not the use. The British Government should, we think, feel itself bound to acknowledge its obligations to all concerned, but more particularly to Briga-dier Hampton, who, by his gallant attack on the Rohillahs, so effectually brought matters to a close. To him something more is due than mere thanks, and we feel assured that he will not go unrewarded. Swords have been presented for acts of a trifling nature compared to that referred to above, by which a most dangerous and troublesome character has been secured, and one whom the Nagpore Government's, to say the least of it, want of foresight allowed to go at large, aware, as it was at the time, of the man's pretensions and of the consequences likely to ensue. Brigadier Hampton's character, both public and private, is too well known to make it necessary for us to enlarge on this subject; but we trust his claims on the British Government will not be overlooked.—Bombay Times, June 24.

BENGAL. RAILWAYS.

If the object of the Court of Directors were simply to expend one million sterling on an experimental rail, and to relinquish the enterprise altogether if it was not found to be profitable, it would, of course, be better not to commence operations at all, which must necessarily end in disappointment, and, by throwing discredit on the undertaking, retard its eventual accomplishment. If the rail, as Mr. Simms estimates, is likely to cost £15,000 a mile, no experiment of a million sterling will carry it to any point of sufficient commercial importance to secure an adequate return. The coal-fields of Burdwan are 140 miles from Calcutta, and a rail to them would cost more than two millions. Rajmahl is 170 miles from the metropolis, and the rail to that distance would require more than £2,500,000 sterling. One million will, therefore, of itself do nothing effectually. But we conceive the object of Government to be to lay down a great trunk line, throughout this presidency, with the necessary branches, and to expend one million sterling by way of an experiment of the cost and the peculiar facilities or difficulties connected with the establishment of the rail in a country yond the point at which a million sterling would leave it, to like India, without making the continuation of the rail beplan which has hitherto been considered the right one, is that of laying down one grand trunk line from Calcutta to Mirzapore, and of continuing it from thence to Delhi, and as much farther asmay be desirable, establishing branch rails to Benares, Patna, and, probably, to Rajmahl. This great undertaking would embrace all the political, military, social, and commercial interests of this presidency. Another plan, of which we have indistinct rumours, is that of making the communication from one end of the presidency to the other, partly by rail and partly by water; that is, to run the rail to Rajmahl, then transfer the goods and passengers to steamers, to be conveyed some three or four hundred miles, to some point near Benares, where the rail is again to take them up, and whirl them on to Delhi. Of course, the idea of confining the railto Delhi. Of course, the idea of confining the rail-road enterprise at this presidency to the short distance between Calcutta and Rajmahl can never have been dreamt of. The project of the Rajmahl party is simply to employ steamers between Rajmahl and Benares, to connect the upper and the lower ends of the rail. But this plan appears to be beset with the most formidable impediments arising out of the state of the river. Nearly all the difficulties of navigation which the steamers encounter lie above, and not below, Rajmahl, and those difficulties are annually increasing. The bed of the river is gradually becoming choked up with sand, and the rivers themselves are more and more shallow every year. The experience of all the steamers demonstrates this lamentable fact. During the present year, for many months, the river has in many places become unnavigable. Steamers, even of small draught, have been detained for days in particular localities, and it has been only through the most strenuous efforts that they have been able to get over the shoals and flats of the river. The attempts which were made by Government to keep open the channel have been given up in despair. The editor of the Benares Recorder has written largely and well on the subject, and shown that the same result is experienced in almost all the rivers of India. They are all gradually filling up; and if the facts which he brings forward can be depended on, it would appear as though railroads had been thought of for India, just at the time when the increased and increasing shallowness of the rivers had rendered them in-dispensable. The writer attributes this to the deficiency of rain occasioned by the country being denuded of trees, and he is not alone in ascribing the decreased fall of rain, which is now experienced, to the same cause. It is, moreover, generally supposed that, when the Ganges Canal is complete, and so large a supply of the water which replenishes that stream is directed to purposes of irrigation, it will become more shallow than ever, and that steamers will find it exceedingly difficult to make any progress at all, except during the rains. All these circumstauces must be carefully weighed, before Government determines on the line of the rail, and authorizes the expenditure of the mite which the home authorities have guaranteed. - Friend of

When we take into consideration the large sums about to be subscribed for the furtherance of railway projects in India, we can but feel some surprise that so little should be known as to the existing want of this means of conveyance, or the extent to which it is likely to become available. We do indeed hear of the instantaneous concentration of troops affording to Government the "benefit of ubiquity," but, commercially regarded, the data so far before the public are of limited extent. Yet every river choukee, every thannah on the road, must contain good evidence for or against the extension, as a profitable speculation of the rail to this country. We are in possession of information regarding the river trade which may form a useful item in such a collection.

In the year 1817-48, means were adopted to ascertain the extent of the carrying trade on the river at Benares, upwards and downwards. The yearly registry of boats proceeding upwards from the 1st July, 1817, to 30th June, 1818, exhibits in number 6,359 boats, with a tonnage of 49,79,875, to which must be added 58 budgerows, 17 pinnaces, 11 bauleahs, and 17 steamers making 74 trips. The downward register during the same period gives boats in number 7,022, tonnage 54,82,525, added to which passenger boats 49 budgerows, 9 pinnaces, and 4 bauleahs, with 16 steamers making 73 trips. In the downward register we have the number of flats attached to the steamers stated as 33. Unfortunately, as to the upward register, the number of flats is not mentioned, but doubtless it will be within one of those proceeding in the contrary direction.

We have thus done something as to data not only having reference to railway matters, but as to the expense which Government may feel itself called on to incur in the clearance of river obstructions in the neighbourhood of the Bulleah flats. When the reader is informed that Mr. Simms's estimate of the cost Government would have to incur in clearing the navigation from Buxar to the old mouth of the Surjoo amounts to not less than 60,000! per mile, and that the obstructions extend no less a distance than twenty miles, he will be inclined to coincide with us, that the river, as to artificial remedies, will remain as it is until the railway is completed, when the navigation will be viewed with more indifference than at present.—Benares Recorder.

THE BENGAL AND BOMBAY REGIMENTS AT PESHAWUR—ALLEGED FAVORITISM.

We have had many complaints from the force beyond the Attok of the length of time which has elapsed without pay being issued, and have alluded to it more than once; we are still led to understand that, up to the latest dates, pay for January had not even yet been issued to some of the Bengal regiments at Peshawur.

To say nothing of the extreme hardship this must be to the officers who have to build houses and protect themselves as soon as possible from the inclemency of the weather, it is not only unjust, but impolitic to treat the sepoys with so much neglect and indifference; the remittances the men are in the habit of making being stopped or not made, and for which there can be no excuse for such a period of time, must have a very injurious effect on their temper, as it must affect their home interests. Many of them are zemindars holding small shares in villages, and all have, more or less, a right to a piece of ground for which they have to pay rent, as well as near relations to support. A rapacious zemindar will only be too glad to oust his hereditary tenant on any pretence, and he could not have a better excuse than the non-receipt of his rent. In addition to the delay complained of, we are sorry. to hear there is an amount of official discourtesy shewn to those who plead for their men quite intolerable. Surely if no blame attaches to the paymaster, he could reply to the official applications made to him; his silence only leads to the belief that the neglect and indifference to the interests of the force lie with him.

We have been slow to believe that the brigadier commanding at Peshawur would make any marked distinction between the troops of the Bombay and Bengal services placed under his command, but from the numerous letters we have received, all to the same tune, we are compelled to come to the conclusion, that there is a display of partiality and favouritism made towards the Bombay troops, which we were not prepared for. If the amount of this partiality is anything approaching to the rumours which have reached us, they are such as imperatively demand the interference and check of superior authority; one great hardship the Bengalees complain of, and which doubtless is the prolific source of many other annoyances, is the exclusively Bombay Staff of Brigadier Dundas. The duty of the station is said to be most unfairly apportioned, the Bengal troops who never complained of being footsore, who never halted short of Peshawur, who were the first in Peshawur, and whose ranks are weaker than the Bombay regiments, have had all the heavier duties given to them, whilst it is said no Bombay regiment has furnished a company for any work, " certainly not for command." The manner in plained of, we shall let one correspondent speak for himself here:—

"The 31st N.I. the senior infantry regiment of the senior presidency, and entitled to choice of quarters by havin arrived before the Bombay troops, and yet the only infantry regiment without any kind of lines allotted to it, having returned from escorting the heavy guns from Attok, on the 26th ultimo, encamped on ground which they were informed would be permanently theirs, a space being reserved on the right for the Bombay fusiliers and on the left for the Sindh horse.

"It being so late in the season, the commanding officer, as quickly as possible, marked out the proposed lines for the men, and the miniature compounds for the officers, and the latter set to work to get some cover to shelter themselves from the proverbially hot sun of Peshawur. Materials and workmen were scarce and expensive, owing to the extensive Government works now being carried on, but most made some little progress, and nearly all had collected bricks, beams, &c. when judge of our dismay yesterday on being told that Brigadier-General Dundas directed us to move on the 5th to the other side of the city, between the 70th N.I. and 13th light cavalry, a distance of three miles.

"The reason assigned for this unwarrantable tyranny is, that the Brigadier-General thinks it advisable to have the Bengal troops together (as if he could not have thought of that before), but the real reason is strongly suspected to be, that the ground on the left of our present camp is not quite so good as the Scinde horse would wish, and we are to be turned out after having gone to trouble and expense, to make way for that corps."

We hope there is some exaggeration in the statement, and that the writer is smarting under the vexation he has undergone; but making allowance for this, there is still much ground for reasonable complaint.

In the Bengal provinces all line duties of sepoy regiments are relieved weekly. Brigadier Dundus insists upon guards of every description being relieved daily, guards have therefore to be marched to posts upwards of a mile distant daily, needlessly and contrary to all custom harassing the sepoys.

When guards are relieved weekly, the sepoy can take his charpae and utensil with him so as to make himself comfortable; under this Peshawur system there is nothing but discomfort, inconvenience and annoyance; in the very hot weather the health of the troops must suffer under this inconsiderate treatment.

One grievance more we must mention and be done with them. Among other novelties which the Bombay commanding officers have introduced, Brigadier Bradshaw has ordered a weekly return of all men who have been punished with three drills, with a statement of the offence. Surely this is a very improper interference with the internal discipline of regiments; we believe this is a practice unknown on this side of India, and that it is unheard of in her Mejesty's service.

These are some of the complaints which have reached us, and which disclose a system of martinetism, partiality, and abuse of authority at Peshawur, which cannot be too much reprobated.

This ill-judged partiality to the Bombay troops, and oppression of the Bengal, must foster the very worst feeling between the two armies; we need not descant on the impolicy of such conduct, but leave it to the authorities to see to the matter. It ought to be one of the first questions for the consideration of Sir Charles Napier, than whom no one knows better the melaucholy consequences to the morale of an army which arise from the growth of jealousy and bad feeling between two of its branches, such as the foolish measures of the brigadiers at Peshawur are sure to lead to.—Delhi Gazette, May 19.

PUBLIC OFFICERS IN JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

A CONTEMPORARY states that the last mail has brought intelligence that the Court of Directors have determined to order all the officers in their service to relinquish their connection with joint-stock companies within a twelvemonth. This order, which has long been expected, cannot be supposed to imply the sale of all the shares they hold in the Mofussil banks and all other unchartered institutions. This would be an act so repugnant to every principle of justice, and so contrary to the usual proceedings of the Court, that we may, with perfect confidence, dismiss the possibility of it. The shares of these institutions are so low at the present time, owing to the depression of all mercantile interests, and they are likely farther to experience so heavy a depreciation if two-thirds of them should be thrown upon the market, that an order of this kind would entail the most deplorable consequences on a large portion of the service. The mere fact that the Court of Directors have knowingly allowed so considerable a body of their servants to take shares in these banks creates a moral necessity for their being allowed to sell out at their own convenience. Government has no right to inflict a loss of half a million sterling on its servants, simply to establish a new principle, even if it should happen to be a sound one, which, in the present instance, it would not be. Neither can we suppose, from the analogy of circumstances, that any such measure has been in contemplation. Members of the public service are at present at liberty to hold shares in all our chartered companies, and there can be no public grounds for refusing them permission to maintain the same kind of connection with institutions which are not blessed with a charter. The Government does not interfere with the mode in which private funds are invested, except when it appears detrimental to the public character or usefulness of its servants, — and no public interests are compromised by their becoming proprietors in any unchartered bank. At the same time we must confess that there would have been manifest impropriety in allowing any civilian to become a shareholder in a company like the Bengal Indigo Company, the proceedings of which might come judicially under his cognizance.

The object of Government is evidently to prevent any of its public functionaries from becoming directors, or taking an active share in the control of any of the Mofussil banks and companies. They have long since been peremptorily forbidden to take office in any chartered or unchartered institution in Calcutta; and the anomaly of allowing them at the same time to undertake the management of large banking establishments out of Calcutta has long been a subject of remark and of censure. The object of the present order is to correct this anomaly, and to establish the same rule throughout India. The propriety of it is unquestionable. Officers who receive large allowances for serving the public ought not to be at liberty to appropriate a large portion of their time to the superintendence of unofficial institutions. It is scarcely possible for them to bestow that care and attention on these commercial establishments which they always require, without a corresponding neglect of their public duties. Neither is it consonant with that regard for its public character which Government should scrupulously maintain, that its officers should be involved in the responsibility of institutions which are exposed to all the fluctuations of commerce. Whatever opproblum might arise from the embarrassments or the failure of companies in which a public officer was a director would be indirectly reflected on the Government itself. These risks should be sedulously avoided. The Bengal Bank furnishes no case in point, which can be drawn into any thing like a precedent. Three of the Directors are appointed by Government, but no other member of the service can be elected into the direction. The Bengal Bank has the entire direction of the paper currency of this Presidency. Its notes are a legal tender; Government is identified in public estimation with its stability; and it is, therefore, not only eminently proper, but absolutely indispensable, that the three financial officers of Government at the Presidency, the Financial Secretary, the Accountant-General, and the Sub-Treasurer, should be placed in a position to control its proceedings. No other institution stands in the same predicament, and therefore none other has a right to demand that Government shall lend it the services of its public functionaries.—Friend of India.

THE GANGES CANAL.

THE third or Ganges Canal is in course of construction-it is proposed to carry it through the entire length of the Doab to Allahabad, where it will fall into the Jumna; it will be navigable for rafts and boats of appropriate size, but its main object is irrigation - for which purpose there will be branch cuts to Cawnpore, Etawah, Boolundshuhr, and Futtehgurh. extreme length of the canal, we believe, will be 453 miles. four branches are the Futtehgurh 160; the Boolundshuhr 70; the Etawah 172—and the Cawnpore 43½, giving a total over all of 443+455½=898½ miles of canal. The head of the canal is at Hurdwar, and the water will be directed into it by means of an embankment, which, we presume, will have to be thrown up every year, as in the case of the Delhi and Doab canals. The supply of water for all purposes is estimated at 6,750 cubic feet per second. Whether this immense volume of water will affect the streams in the Ganges appears to be the point at issue, and upon this opinions vary—for our own part we believe, that whatever effect it may have for the first two or three years, until the country in the immediate vicinity of the channel be thoroughly saturated so as to prevent evaporation and absorp-tion, it will in no way reduce the volume of water flowing in its natural channel. We do not believe that the Delhi and Doab canals have lessened the water in the Jumna. The extreme shallowness of both rivers, which has yearly been on the increase, must be attributed to other causes, the principal of which is the filling up of the bed with sand, the same as in all the larger hill streams between the Ganges and Sutledge, which are now completely dry during eight months out of the twelve. The same phenomena may be seen in all the rivers running from Central India, either empty-ing themselves into the Ganges or direct into the sea, such as the Kurrumnassa, Durgowtee, Soane, Poonpoon, Lellajhum, Morher, and Boorhee; the Barrakur Damooda, Suburnreeca, Brahmeni, and Mahanadi. This latter river, which at the present time has not more than a foot of water, and even less over the shallows at Cuttack, must have been navigable for large craft from the sea up to the Burmool pass, a distance over 200 miles, at no very remote period; that the Gauges was navigable for large craft up to Patna in the reign of Akbar is, we believe, an established fact; if we admit this, we must at once decide that the canals have nothing to say to the decrease of water. That less water reaches the seat than in former days we are equally indisposed to believe, or at any rate that it should be so from any but natural causes. We have had opportunities of knowing that an actual current exists under the surface of the sand at Gya, where canals are scooped out in the bed of the Phulgo to admit of the pilgrims bathing, &c. &c. for distances of 100 yards, more or less, in different places. This current is quite perceptible by the drifting of leaves and other light things to the lower end. The same is perceptible in the other rivers in that neighbourhood. The decrease in the volume of water is attributable to the want of rain of late years, and this want of rain may be attributed to the gradual clearing of jungle and trees throughout the country, which is a subject demanding the most earnest attention of the rulers of the land. It stands to reason, further, that the more the country becomes denuded of trees and vegetation, the greater the degree of absortion and the suddenness of evaporation after rain.

We believe that the same causes and effects have led to the drying up of rivers and canals in Persia—Babylon to wit—and the consequent reduction of a once fertile country into a desert.—

Benares Recorder, May 26.

THE NEW SIKH REGIMENTS.

The order has just been issued for the organization of ten Sikh regiments, five of horse and five of foot. It appears unlikely, after this increase of expenditure has been incurred in this arm of the service, that any augmentation of the regiments of the line will be sanctioned by Government. Our anticipation has, therefore, proved correct, that Government would endeavour to maintain British authority in the Punjab, in the first instance, by the same force which was thought sufficient to guard our frontier against aggression, with a slight addition of six or seven thousand Sikh troops, to be commanded by our own officers. Should this arrangement be found adequate for the purpose, Government will have reason to congratulate itself on having withheld its sanction from the proposal of an augmentation, which would have benefited the officers of the army to a small extent, but would have saddled the Government with a permanent charge equal to a fifth of the present revenues of the Punjab. Should it be found eventually that nothing short of a large increase of the regiments of the line is sufficient for the maintenance of our authority in the Punjab, nothing will be easier than to disband the newly-raised Sikh corps, by giving the men a donation and dismissing them. In all the arrangements regarding the Punjab, Government is bound to consult primarily the public interests of the country, whatever may be the disappointment of individual But why should we talk of disappointments, when the officers of the army have benefited so largely by the conquest? One half the civil appointments in the country have been given to them, and the new regiments provide staff appointments for forty more. Although, therefore, the expectations of the army at large may not have been gratified by the general promotion which an increase of the regiments of the line would have created, the distribution of the personal advantages of our success has been so equitably made as to remove all real cause of dissatisfaction. The fidelity of these Sikh regiments is doubted. But there is every reason to believe that our former experience will be verified in this instance, and that that which has occurred in every other part of India will be exhibited in the Punjab also. As the hope of successful resistance dies out, the spirit of acquiescence in our rule and of fidelity to our salt, will ripen into a habit, almost as strong, and quite as valuable, as a principle. The Goorkahs who drew forth all our skill and courage in the days of Ochterlony, shed the last drop of their blood in our service at Charekar, under the noble Eldred Pottinger. Nor have we ever had any occasion to doubt the fidelity of any of the various tribes whom we have enlisted under our standard when the inhabitants of the country to which they belonged had once become ac-customed to our rule, and all hope of a change of masters had become extinct. It is only when our government is not fully established in a country, and the hope of regaining national independence does not appear forlorn, that we have felt the feebleness of the new tie of allegiance. The Affghans we had enlisted deserted us in 1841, when Akbar Khan called on them to expel us from the country, and there appeared a hope of his success. Our Sikh levies turned our own powder, and our own balls against us, when Shere Singh had taken the field and we appeared to be paralyzed; but the allegiance of the soldiers we enlist in conquered countries is a mere question of time, and every day diminishes the chance of disaffection. Even of those Sikh corps which were raised after the battles of the Sutlej, and stationed in our own provinces, not a man deserted, when the Punjab was in arms against us; and if we had more extensively adopted Hannibal's wise policy, and garrisoned our own provinces with the Sikh corps, and the Punjab with our regular troops, there would probably have been no Ramnuggur or Chilianwallah. - Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAILS.—The Haddington, with the London mails of April 24, arrived at Calcutta, June 4; and the Bombay Express, in the night of the 18th, with news from London to May 7, only thirty-four days after date.

SIB WILLIAM GOMM arrived at Calcutta by the Catherine Apcar on the 3rd of June.

COMMISSION FOR SERVICES RENDERED IN THE PUNJAR.—The son of Mr. Wale Byrne, of the Bengal secretariat, has received an ensigncy, without purchase, in H. M.'s 53rd foot, in consideration of the services of his uncle, Col. Byrne, in the Punjab campaigns.

THE HACKERYWALLAHS throughout Calcutta struck work on account of the new wheel-tax, and occasioned thereby the greatest consternation to the trade of the port. They have since resumed their employment.

TEMPERATURE DURING JUNE.—From the register kept at the surveyor-general's office it appears that the mean temperature of the air, during the month of June, at 40 minutes after two o'clock in the afternoon, was 94 deg. 40 Ft., the mean temperature at sunrise, 81 deg.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER arrived at Benares on the morning of June 2. His Excellency declined to receive visitors, and dispensed with a levee.

Punishing breaches of Trust.—The Gazette of June 6 contains several drafts of proposed legislative acts. The most important of these is one "for punishing Breaches of Trust," which is very general and stringent in its application. Had it been in force a few months back it would have consigned a few of the citizens of Calcutta to prison or exile.

CAPT. E. ONSLOW, harbour master at Calcutta, has been allowed to proceed to Ceylon, for the benefit of his health.

SIMLA, May 30.—" I have nothing to tell you in the way of news. Simla is full to suffocation, but is notwithstanding somewhat dull. There are dinner parties in abundance, and balls to come, but people are strangers to each other. It is hot even here; I conclude therefore you are grilling. You were wrong about Mr. Thomason being about to leave Simla; he is better, and I have not heard of his having any intention of going back to Agra."

A Ferozerore letter says, "I hear that our movable brigade is to consist of the troop H. A., 8th light cavalry, H. UMBALLA, May 25.—"Our station was enlivened last evening by a ball, given in honour of Her Majesty's birthday by General Sir D. Hill,  $\kappa.c.B$ . It was attended by all the beauty and fashion of Umballa, and I assure you that few stations in this country can boast of a larger assemblage of than were seen in the hospitable bungalow of our divisional commander, the rooms of which were tastefully decorated for the occasion. Soon after midnight a general move was made to the supper tent when, after allowing the devoted votaries of Terpsichore sufficient time to refresh themselves, the general proposed, in his usual happy style, 'the health of her majesty,' which, of course, was duly honoured. Then the 'governor general,' and 'Sir Charles Napier,' were drank in solemn silence; after which Lord Gough's health was proposed and responded to with an enthusiasm that I have rarely seen equalled. Three times three, and several editions of one cheer more, illowed rapidly. The good wishes of our sweet sisters were followed rapidly. equally hearty, though, of course, not expressed so noisily; but exclamations of 'Dear old Lord Gough,' and 'brave old fellow, I am so glad to hear him cheered in this manner,' reached my ears, and were no doubt universal, for are not virtue and heauty always opposed to calumny? Indeed, I am writing this at the command of a fair friend, who said, 'she wished all India to know that his brothers in arms at Umballa loved him better in proportion as others left him to worship the rising sun.' The last toast, 'the ladies,' was proposed by the (acting) Deputy Quarter Master General (Capt. Burne). Those indefatigable individuals before mentioned then retired and recommenced their labours; only fancy dancing a polka or valse a deux temps with the thermometer at 96! Most of the guests departed soon after, highly gratified and delighted with their host and his amiable family. The band of the 18th Royal Irish contributed to our enjoyment by the performance of some most beautiful and carefully-executed valses, &c. There was a full-dress parade in the morning, attended by the general and his staff, when the usual salute and a feu de joie were fired; after giving three cheers for her Majesty, the troops marched back to their lines. A Bhagulpore letter says:—"The blue prospects of this district are very bad indeed, and I do not think there is one concern better off than another; we have had very little rain, and the showers so many days distant from each other that the spring sowings are good for nothing. The rain of course has done good to the October, but where can a return come from that alone; here is the lst of June, and manufac-turing ought to commence about the 10th."

THE GRAVES AT CHILLIANWALLAH.—A correspondent has addressed us (the Delhi Gazette) on the subject of protecting, in some suitable manner, the graves of the brave men who fell at Chillianwallah, and whose mortal remains, interred in a comparative wilderness, have been hitherto, necessarily, left exposed to the attacks of the beasts of prey that abound there as well as in other parts of India. The suggestion made by our correspondent, and supported by a donation of Rs. 16, is one deserving the attention of the friends of those who died nobly doing their duty on the battle field. The enclosure required is, we believe, not a large one, and the addition of a small stone obelisk, with the names of those who lie buried within the enclosure, engraved thereon, would not very materially increase the expense, and hand some permanent record of the battle of Chillianwallah down to posterity.

LIEUT.-COLONEL GAVIN RALSTON CRAWFORD WAS a cadet of 1810, and promoted to 2nd lieut. fireworker in the Bengal Artillery, June 28th of the same year. In November, 1810, joined 5th company 2nd battalion at Dum-Dum, and in March, 1812 proceeded to command the post guns at Midnapore. In November, 1814, joined General Sullivan Wood's division of the army in the Goruckpore Serai, and continued with it until May, 1815. During this period was engaged with the enemy (Goorkhas) at Bootnall, in two affairs. December, 1816, joined Major-General Sir John Adams' division of the army of the Deccan at Secundra, and appointed adjutant of the artillery division in January following, cantoned at Hoshungabad during the rains, and in the field again until the end of May, 1818, appointed field engineer to the division; present at the defeat of the Peshawur's whole force, near Sconee, 17th April, 1818. At the storming of Chanda, 20th May, thanked in orders by Major-General Sir John Adams, and in general orders by the Marquis of Hastings. Left in charge of the fort of Chanda, and in civil charge of the district. Nearly the whole of 1818 and 1819 was out with regular and irregular troops suppressing rebel chiefs and banditti, particularly as on one occasion, where as the only European present, with a force of sixty sepoys and fifteen suwars, he carried by a coup de main a small fort garrisoned by 150 men, principally Mussulmen, with a few Chuttrees and Gossains, and subsequently captured the notorious rebel chief, Balla Moor-In 1825, appointed to command a battalion of sepoys called the Cheetees Ghin Batalion, with a civil situation. June, 1830, appointed principal assistant to the Governor-General's agent, Saugor and Nurbudda territories—and in 1834 proceeded to England on medical certificate; returned from furlough, and joined 3rd company 3rd battalion artillery, with No. 12 light field battery at Dinapore. In January, 1838, appointed to command let troop 2nd brigade horse artillery - promoted to regimental majority February 1842, and in 1844 appointed to command horse artillery division, Loodianah. On promotion to regimental lieut.-colonel in July 1845, appointed to command 1st battalion artillery at Agra. Died at Mussoorie on the 5th of May, 1819."

AURUNGABAD.—A letter from Aurungabad (dated 28th May), says, "On Saturday, the 5th regt. and four guns of Lloyd's battery, returned to cautonments. Capt. King, who had been detached towards Julnah with two companies, followed. To-day. Brig. G. Tiverton, and part of the 4th cavalry, under Capt. W. R. Strange, with two companies under Capt. Wm. BARRE DOAR.—" Nothing can be quieter," says a writer in one of the southern stations in the Baree Doab, "than this district, which is capable of great improvement by attention to the canals. These have of late years been neglected, and the people complain bitterly of drought. A friend at the provincial capital informs us, with reference to this important subject, that an engineer officer had submitted to the board of commissioners. or to the government, a plan, prepared during idle moments between the action at Chillianwallah and the victory at Goojerat, for irrigating the Rechna and Chuch Doabs, by which he proved, that a revenue of at least three krores of rupees might be derived from them alone!—Delhi Gazette, May 19.

NATIVE "MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE."—The following, extracted from an account—written "for the Hindu Intelligencer"—of the doings at a native "marriage in high life," shows the orthodox scale of Hindoo liberality and charity :-

" Presents were given to about 600 learned Brahmins from 7 to 25 rupees each, to about 500 koolin brahmins from 7 to 25 rupees each, to about 420 kinsmen and relatives from 5 to 15 rupees each, and to about 1,155 Ghuttucks from 4 to 10 rupees each, and to about 9,000 poor who had gathered on the occasion, at the rate of l anna each. Besides this presents were also made to many rich men of Calcutta at the rate of 15 or 16 rupees each. Somajick, at the rate of 20 or 22 rupees, was given to the Brahmius residing in the same locality."

Here we have an interesting contribution to the statistics of native benevolence. Taking the number of recipients and the average of the amounts given, we find that nearly Rs. 30,000 was bestowed on 2,655 "learned Brahmins," Koolin dittoes, Ghuttucks (marriage and scandal mongers) and kinsmen-while Rs. 562, or about a fifteenth part of the above sum, is doled out to the 9,000 poor who had gathered on the occasion, at the rate of one anna each! Thirty thousand rupees expended in the encouragement of idleness and something worse, not to speak of the presents to "many rich men of Calcutta,"—and against all this Rs. 562 to 9,000 poor people, many of whom, doubtless, proved the depth of their poverty by walking miles and waiting hours for the liberal largesse of four pice! This is probably all strictly in accordance with the sacred writings of the Hindoos; but if so, it shows how widely these scriptures differ from those which speak of "filling the hungry with good things and sending the rich empty away."

SOLDIERS' GARDENS IN THE PUNJAB.—We are happy to make it known, more particularly to that noble body, the European soldiers in India. that the Right Hon. the Governor-General has been so pleased with the success which has attended the soldiers' garden, established at Lahore, in 1847 (by that true soldier's friend, Sir Henry Lawrence), that he has instructed the Board of Administration of the Punjab to establish similar pleasure grounds at every station for European troops, which is under their control. This is both kind and wise.

MOOLTAN BOOTY. - Some of our friends at Mooltan, we fear, are too sanguine about the amount of their prize-money. have heard one friend assert positively, that thirty seven lacs of rupees had been collected by the agents. We can assure the Mooltan field force that this is quite unfounded. The three prize agents at Mooltan have officially reported to government their inability to collect the ransom, at least without aid being given by the authorities in this matter; the whole of the prize property is estimated at less than sixteen lacs, in fact much less if it be decided in England, that the military stores are not legitimate prize, and which question has been mooted by the Govern-Moreover, Lord Gough has made a claim on account of the whole army employed in the Punjaub, in which case the shares will be hardly worth having. We, however, apprehend that the question will be decided in favour only of those who were present during the second siege from the 25th December to the 22nd January. — Delhi Gazette, June 9.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS. THE ARMY.

Simla, May 12, 1849.—His Exc. the Commander in-Chief, with the sanction of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, is pleased to permit such officers of the Bombay army as were withdrawn from staff employ to join their regiments on service, and are now in garrison in Mooltan, to return to their respective staff appointments.

For the duties of the garrison of Mooltan, a major of brigade or garrison staff officer, an assistant or deputy assistant quartermaster general, or brigade quartermaster general, or brigade quartermaster, with one or two engineer officers, as the brigadier commanding may deem most desirable, are sanctioned, under the authority of his lordship the Governor-General; and any staff appointments in excess, connected with the exclusive military duties of the fortress, will cease from the date of the receipt of this order at Mooltan.

A better feeling has arisen in the Import market in regard to Cotton Goods, the market for which displays a more lively aspect, but prices have not as yet revived. Manchester Fabrics have sold freely at previous value. Mule Twist has rallied a good deal, and sales of that Yarn have been on a larger scale than they have been for some time previously,—50s. and upwards are chiefly in demand at improved prices, while 40s. and lower counts are more abundant, and if anything a little lower in value. Coloured Yarns are neglected. The sales of Copper have been small, but the market is firm. Iron is quiet. A sale of 750 mds. Spelter is reported.

MADRAS.

ACTION WITH THE ROHILLAHS.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

From Brigadier Hampton to the Military Secretary to the Resident, Camp Gowrie, May 6, 1849.

Sir,-I have the honour to inform you, that, on the arrival of the force under my command at Kyer, on the morning of the 6th May, after two forced marches of at least twenty-five miles each, I received intelligence that the person styling himself Appah Sahib, with the insurgents, was at Narunda, eighteen miles in advance of us, the day before, and that probably he had moved again the same evening, direction not known. I determined on making as long a march as I could, and started a little before sunset. On proceeding some distance, I obtained intelligence from people who had been sent out by the local authorities, as also from some men I had sent out, that Appah and his insurgents had made a halt at Narundu, and that I should find him there. On arriving at that place, I learned that they had moved off some hours previously, towards Rajoorah, I consequently determined to pursue him. After having gone some ten or twelve miles, we heard some hackeries moving on in advance of us, there being heavy jungle. Here I determined upon halting the force until daylight, when, throwing out flankers well into it on either side, to prevent any of the insurgents escaping to the rear, we proceeded in this order, until we came up to the first hackery, pertaining to the Robillahs. I immediately went on with the cavalry, and took some prisoners, and as some shots had been fired at this period, and fearing that they might have heard the reports and get away, I advanced at a gallop with the cavalry some eight miles, taking some more prisoners en route, and arrived at Ballapett, where I lost all traces of the insurgents. Having halted here, I then ordered a party of a duffadar and twenty horsemen to proceed to Gowrie, to ascertain if the insurgents had taken that route, but in the mean time, a horseman who had been sent to deliver over charge of the prisoners who had been captured by the cavalry on the road to the infantry who were coming up close in the rear, in returning to join the cavalry, came to the village of Gowrie, and there discovering the insurgents, crossed over to Ballapett (these two villages are about two miles apart), supposing the cavalry to be there, and reported the circumstance to me. I immediately ordered the men to mount and come on to Gowrie, in the Talooka of Manuck Droogh, and ten miles from Chandah. On seeing the insurgents in two bands, amounting from 250 to 300 men, I advanced the cavalry at a canter, and on coming up to them, I called on them to lay down their arms. As they did not, they were attacked and completely routed. I am happy in saying that amongst the prisoners is the self-styled Appah, who is wounded. The cavalry on this occasion, under their com-manding officer, Capt. Commandant Yates, who has been se-verely wounded, and Lieut. and Act. Adj. Harrison, behaved most nobly. Though they had made a march of about fifty miles, and amounted to only about 114 sabres in the field, they pursued, killing and capturing the insurgents, to the number of ninety-five of the former and 105 of the latter—of whom fifty-one are wounded—for some four miles more. Words are inadequate to express the manner in which they distinguished themselves on this occasion. Though the infantry and artillery were not present at the attack, they came up shortly after: the former killing and capturing upwards of thirty of the insurgents, who were effecting their retreat. Capt. Commandant Stoddard and Lieut. and Adj. Hamilton, 2nd Russell's, on hearing the firing, galloped up too, and Capt. Orr, commanding 3rd company artillery, who had come on with the cavalry, joined in the fight, and greatly distinguished themselves, the latter receiving a slight wound, and wounding Appah in the action.

My brigade-major, Major Lysaght, rendered me most valuable assistance; and whilst gallantly engaged in the midst of the conflict, received a most dangerous wound. Dr. McEgan, who had advanced with the cavalry, considering that his services would be most required with them, joined gallantly in the action, having his horse wounded; and since, his exertions have been most unremitting to the wounded. I would beg to bring to the resident's notice the gallant conduct of Licut. Hugh Robinson, of the 7th N.I. Bombay army, who volunteered his services on the occasion, and was very forward in the fight. In conclusion I beg to bring most especially to the notice of the resident, the most able services of Naib Duffadar Wyud Ally Beg, of the second cavalry, who has in this, as on many former occasions, obtained the very best intelligence. During the action, he behaved most gallantly, killing six men; and I beg most strongly to recommend him as a very deserving officer. To the names above mentioned, and the troops, more especially the cavalry, my cordial and grateful thanks are due. I beg to enclose a return of killed and wounded, and as it is late in the day, and I am desirous of not delaying the despatch, I will do myself the honour of forwarding to-morrow an order which I considered due to issue to the forces on the occasion.

RAILWAYS AT MADRAS.

MADRAS has at the eleventh hour begun to bestir herself once more on the subject of railways. She ran on before now with the throng, but the difficulties which presented themselves, and delays which intervened, caused her to abandon her schemes in despair of success. We forget whether our benighted brethren, like the earlier friends of railways, in Bengal and Bombay, started under the conviction that large profits would be derived from the fair returns of the adventure, or whether they ever got the length of a survey, or an estimate. Many of the schemes of those days seemed to have been started on the general impression that railways were a blessing to a country—that as many of them paid, why should not they all? And that if the Manchester and Liverpool yielded a profit, why should not the Madras and Bombay? Railways were railways all the world over; why should they not be over all the world remunerative? Whatever may have been the steps formerly taken, or the nature of the estimates made, they were not such as to induce the shareholders of the South-Eastern presidency to cling so tenaciously as others have done to the scheme,-or to wait in hope that the good day would come when the Court would help those who could not help themselves. The Court, however, having assisted Bombay and Bengal, Madras once more starts forward to claim a share of their consideration and regard. They condescend on no particular line, but wish to penetrate into the interior; and the cost of the construction, estimated by Mr. Simms at 15,000/. a milefor Bombay, and 12,000/. for Bengal, is set down by the same gentleman at little more than half for Madras-the estimate on the spot being somewhat about a half even of this. It is, we observe, now resolved to apply to Government for the services of engineers to complete the survey at the public charge: by this means they will probably save a lakh or two of rupees to start with, and have the work quite as well performed as it can be by any other whatever. A revised estimate on details by a railway engineer will probably make as close an approach as can be made to truth. We have our doubts, we confess, as to the appearance of the capital; but this remains to be seen: we have no doubt but that the Court of Directors will allow the same terms of guarantee to Madras as have been allowed to Bombay. The shrewdness and tact of Sir H. Pottinger even in the small matter of the place of assembly of the meeting, was worthy of his sense; and we have no doubt that twice as many assembled at the banqueting-room as could have the meeting been wound up with a banquet, the affair would have been complete. Men are often judged of as well by their conduct in little matters as in great; and this was excellent so far as it went. The manly and straight-forward manner in which Sir Henry Pottinger came forward to support the scheme—to commit himself outright, not as the Governor, but as the individual, was worthy of the character of the man, who never feared to speak his sentiments, and rarely thought amiss on any subject. His defence of the Court of Directors is exactly that which on a dozen occasions has appeared in our columns. From the time railways were mooted with any chance of success, the Court has been most warm and hearty in the cause. With the exhibitions of scheming, of jobbery and delusion which some of our earlier projects showed, no wonder they were cautious. How is it that we hear nothing of the exertions of the native community on this occasion? Railways savour of no sect and no party: they need occasion neither fear, suspicion, nor jealousy: they unite the ends of the land with each other,—bring strangers face to face,—extinguish geographical divisions-carry the produce of the grower to market,-the consumer, if he wishes it, to the fields of the producer, -and confer advantages on the community at large too gigantic to be imagined by those who have not seen their results at home. We should, under circumstances such as these, have expected to have seen the Madras native community crowd to a scene where for once there could be no difference of opinion-where for once the advantages promised through European aid were as stupendous in magnitude as they were free from all taint or alloy. We trust that as our benighted brethren have been left somewhat behind in the startthey will redouble their exertions to make up for lost time, and that their first sod may be turned, "if sod it can be called where there is none," not very much later than those of the Calcutta and Bombay works.—Bombay Times, June 9.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NIZAM'S DOMINIONS. - At present the worst governed territory of our allies is that of the Nizam of Hyderabad. The new minister from whom much was expected, and who is considered both able and honest, has not found that support from his master which is essential to the reforms required to bring the country into order. Its natural productiveness would soon clear it of debt under vigorous and economical management, but where every one is striving to promote abuses in order to profit by them, things can only go on from bad to worse. A wellinformed correspondent assures us that the debts of the state might be cleared off in three years under a vigorous administration. The debt due by the Nizam to the East India Company now amounts to fifty four lakhs of rupees, and a proposition to pay it off by instalments of five lakhs a year has been declined by the Governor-General, who has signified that if it cannot be liquidated, territory of equivalent revenue should be ceded to the British Government. This proposition is peculiarly distasteful to the Nizam, as all cessions have always been, and will always be, to weak Governments. The question is whether the demand will be persisted in or not? If it be, and of course it cannot be resisted, it will be considered as the beginning of a dismemberment of the Nizam's territories, and will add to the distrust and general want of confidence which prevail there. The arrangement would nevertheless be a good one for both parties, and for the oppressed people, who would at least be immediately relieved from the extortions of armed bands, which are now traversing the country to obtain by pillage what they have been defrauded of by those they served.—Englishman.

MILITARY FUND.—At a meeting of the officers of artillery at Saint Thomas's Mount, held on 28th May, to consider the proceedings of the Directors of the Military Fund, with reference to the proposed alteration of article thirty-four of the regulations, it was resolved,—" That it is very desirable to be understood, that in voting in favour of the proposed amendment of the regulation in question, we have been influenced not by the principle that benefits should be commensurate with contributions, for by paras. 217 and 218 of Mr. Griffith Davies' report quoted by Major Stafford, the benefits derivable by the married members are mainly contributed by the unmarried, but by the conviction of the injustice of excluding a section of any class from the benefits enjoyed by their brethren of the same class, although like contributions are required from all." Signed by 18 Madras officers of the rank of major, captain, and lieutenant.

NAWAB OF THE CARNATIC.—The Madras Circulator asserts that the Nawab of the Carnatic has appointed a commission for the purpose of examining and liquidating his debts. We can scarcely credit the assertion, except on the supposition either that the Nawab has been awakened to a sense of the singularly undignified position in which he has placed himself, or that he has listened to certain private representations from the powers that be, and arrived at the conclusion that honesty is the best policy, an adage which no prince of Indian origin appears to comprehend.

A SALUTE of 11 guns from the battery early yesterday morning announced the arrival in the roads of H.M.'s ship Cambrian, bearing the flag of Commodore J. H. Plumridge. The compliment was of course returned by the Cambrian. 'The commodore landed yesterday evening, under a salute from the garrison.—Alhenæum, June 12.

THE GUJERAT COTTON SCREW PRESS.

We present our readers with an account of the method adopted in Gujerat for packing the valuable staple cotton. It shows clearly how the process is conducted. A great facility of transport, and economy in various ways, is effected by the simple machine used. That "knowledge is power," will be seen nowhere better applied, or more strikingly illustrated, than in studying the common native inventions of Western India. If we compare the districts of Gujerat with those of the Soutlern Mahratta country and Khandeish, all very similar in extent, and equally well adapted by nature to yield good cotton, which is their staple article of produce, it will be seen how true is the remark.

The published report of the Bombay Cotton Decline Committee, among other interesting facts, contains the following averages of the annual supply from each of those districts, estimated from thirteen years, ending 31st December, 1846.

is, thank ofthe becomes, fore.
Gujerat	76,369
Khandeish	32,239
Malabar	14,904

The whole annual imports into Bombay amount to only 137,537 candies, of 784 lbs. each; so that Gujerat supplies rather more than the half; and this superiority is, we think, to be accounted for entirely by the much greater facilities afforded in Gujerat for applying that knowledge which gives power.

It may be urged, perhaps, in refutation of this, that Gujerat has a more favoured climate and richer soil, but this alone would not account for the superiority. The black cotton soil abounds in all, and the quality of their cotton, when carefully cultivated, is nearly equal. We know that the inhabitants of Gujerat are better agriculturists; they have got their "churka," their cotton screws, their superior carts, and their cotton boats, all of which afford them facilities, and give them power, the want of which renders dormant both the people and the resources of the other two districts. And to this we attribute, more than to anything else, the great discrepancy in the amounts of produce.

Suppose the agricultural system, and the miserable foot-roller of the Southern Mahratta country, were to be forced on Gujerat, what would be the consequences? We should find very soon that not more than one-fourth, if so much, of the present produce could be raised: the whole country, however favourable its soil or its climate, would be reduced to a par with Dharwar or Khandeish. And what, we may ask, would be the effect of introducing the Gujerat system of agriculture, and the machines there found to be so efficient, into Khandeish and the Southern Mahratta country? No doubt, improvement, and similar results to those met with in Gujerat: at least we are clearly entitled to assume this, until the contrary be proved. The people of the Southern Mahratta country have only the foot-roller to clean their cotton with; they have nothing like the Gujerat churka in point of efficiency, and they have no screws whereby to reduce the size of their bulky cotton bales. We may say nearly the same of Khandeish, where they have only a churka of inferior power. How much better it would be for the cotton trade of the country were Government to look to the introduction of such machines as Gujerat affords, into these backward districts, and try to raise them in importance, rather than go on with the attempt of forcing American cotton seed and saw-gins everywhere upon the

The screw press for packing cotton is in common use throughout the districts of Gujerat. It is of the greatest service, as it enables the people to compress and pack their cotton into bales of a more portable and economical size, than could otherwise be done. From the above sketch the whole process will be apparent.

There is a set of three boxes, or jointed frames, between the two vertical screws, into which the cotton is put, and trodden down hard by the men; first filling the lower one, and in succession the two upper ones, which are fitted loosely over each other as the cotton is filled in. When filled to the top, a piece of wood, corresponding with the size of the bale, is then placed with a piece of cloth over all, and the large horizontal beam, through which the two screws pass, is made to descend slowly by the men turning them round. As this beam descends, the framework of boxes is removed in succession, the drawing shows the top in the act of removal; and lastly, the wrappers and ropes, which had been spread at the bottom, are then sewed up, and tied tight; thus, the work being completed, the motion of the screws is reversed, and the bale removed.

This press is made and put up ready for work by the village carpenters. It is generally placed in a shed, or under cover; bute it may be seen worked in the open air at some of the poor villages. The screws are the most important parts. They are made from the wood of the Acacia Arabica, or the tamarind-tree, asbeing tough and strong. The screw part is some five or six feet in length, and the truth and accuracy of the cutting is remarkable, seeing it is all doneby the eye, and with only the common cutting-tools of the native mechanics.

By means of this press the cotton is reduced to one-third of the duty that could be attained by any other equally simple method. The size of the bales varies a little, but the average dimensions may be taken at five feet long by three broad, and four deep. They weigh from 370 to 530 lbs. Those from Surat and Broach average nearly 400 lbs. each. On the opposite side of the gulf, at Bhaonuggur and Dholera, the largest sized bales are made. It must not be supposed that screws are used in all the cotton-producing districts; on the contrary, they are met with in Gujeratonly. In the large districts of Khandeish and the Southern Mahratta country, there is no such thing in use. The bales from those places are merely large loose bundles sewed up in coarse country cloth, with some strings of coir or cocoa-nut rope, tied round them in the roughest manner possible.

It is a curious fact connected with our Bombay cotton trade, that all the cloth or "gunny" covering required for the bales is imported from Calcutta. In the Bombay presidency the plant, the Crotalaria juncea, from which this peculiar coarse "gunny" cloth (as the natives call it) is made, grows very well, and is cultivated in both the Concans for the purpose o; supplying ropes for the bales, but there is no manufacture of the cloth.

Many people have become very sceptical as to the dormant agricultural riches of India. The long time apparently it has taken to discover them has given rise to this feeling of doubt. When the interesting work of Dr. Royle on the Productive Resources of India was published in 1840, much hope was excited, as it clearly showed what great things might be done. We have given some attention to the question of the capabilities of Western India to supply large quantities of cotton, and from the data in our possession we feel not the smallest doubt that, with care, it might be very largely augmented.

In the statistical memoir of the Broach zillah, by the late Col. Monier Williams, published at London in 1825, we find that in the season 1818 there was a crop of 45,582\( \frac{2}{7}\) bars of raw cotton produce, which, at the usual rate, would yield 17,433 candies of cotton wool; and from the same authority we learn that the whole amount of land capable of cultivation in the zillah amounted to 545,120 statute acres. Now if we allowed half of this land to have been under culture of cotton, we shall find that it requires fifteen and a half acres to yield one candy of cotton, or very nearly at the rate of 50 lbs. per acre.

Let us apply these data to the country above the Ghats, where the finest cotton can be produced, and see what would be the result. In Khandeish, and throughout the territories of the Hydrabad and Nagpore states, there is a district of country 67,500 square miles in extent, containing 43,200,000 acres of soil applicable to the growth of Indian cotton; now, suppose only half of this surface to be cultivated annually with cotton, as we have done at Broach, and we find that at the rate of 50 lbs. per acre, there would be a crop of 1,080,000,000 lbs. of cotton wool produced. This would he more than double the quantity of all the cotton annually imported into England at the present time, and which is estimated at 480,000,000 lbs.

Here, then, we have, on the most correct data, the strongest possible proof of what might be the produce of the extensive cotton districts above the Ghats. What reflection does not all this give rise to. Has it not been known to the Government that such mines of wealth existed only waiting to be developed? Will the authorities ever set about such development, or are these riches to remain shut up and useless for ever? We may be told the railway, "The Great Indian Peninsula Railway," will soon do all that is requisite, and we sincerely believe it will do much.

do all that is requisite, and we sincerely believe it will do much.

The cotton spinners of Lancashire, however, if they hope for extensive and permanent good, must take a far more active part than they have yet done in the welfare of this country. They must possess themselves of an interest both in the railway and the country above the Ghats, which shall insure the speedy completion of the former, as well as the development of the resources of the country, or ten years hence will find Bombay much as it is at present. We have great faith in the good which the railway will accomplish, both in a moral and physical point of view, for the natives of this country, and we hope it may prove, by its leading to the opening up of the dormant resources of the country, a source of much blessing to the inhabitants. India has long been retained much in the state of a royal hunting forest, its resources undeveloped that it might supply a field for the patronage of the India-House. It, in fact, on a large scale, too much resembles the "shikargahs" of the ill-fated Ameers of Scinde, and its present rulers have done well in now commencing something on a large scale in the way of improving the country. Let them go on, and nobly; the year for the renewal of the charter, 1854, is at hand; they must look to it, or the British Government may step in and say, "You have held those splendid territories long enough, and to so little purpose, we require them from you; your 'shi-kargah' must be cut up; we can allow the land to lay waste no longer."-Bombay Telegraph and Courier.

TRADE OF BOMBAY AND CALCUTTA.

We avail ourselves of the statistics of the trade of Bombay, published in the Gentleman's Gazette some weeks ago, to institute a comparison between the commerce of that port and Calcutta. In all previous reports, "the coasting trade has been made to appear as if it was part of the foreign imports. Thus a bagful of raw cotton from any part of the Concan or Guzerat was entered as an import, just as grey domestics from Manchester, or iron from Warwick." The present statement, however, includes only the imports from and exports to places beyond the limits of the presidency.

Our trade with the mother country appears to be far more important and extensive than that of Bombay. In the year 1848, of the total imports of Rs. 3,74,00,000, only Rs. 1,29,00,000 consisted of articles imported into Bombay from England, while of the imports of Calcutta, amounting to Rs. 4,47,00,000, not less than Rs. 3,40,00,000 worth of articles were received from home. The same may also be said with regard to the export of Indian produce to England; in 1847, the quantity sent home from Bombay is put down at 144 lacs of rupees; in the same period the exports from Calcutta were 446 lacs. In the year 1848, the disproportion is still greater; the Bombay exports having been 95 lacs, against 404 lacs from Calcutta. The country which furnishes the next great item of import at Bombay is China, and it is curious to contrast the difference of the imports into that port and Calcutta. Our imports in the year 1848 were only 13 lacs, while the imports at Bombay were no less than 73 lacs. The exports to China, on the average of two years, 1847 and 1848, were rather in favour of Bombay.

As it regards the relative quantity and value of the various articles of import and export, it is impossible to form any accurate estimate from the very loose and very unsatisfactory mode in which these statements are drawn up. It will scarcely be believed that no less a sum than one hundred and twelve lacs of imports, and one hundred and thirty lacs of exports are lumped together at the foot of the schedule under the head of sundries. In the Commercial Annual, we find that the sum thus jumbled together as all other sundries, too numerous and trifling to be enumerated, is fourteen lacs out of an import of 447 lacs; and even this is a source of annoyance to us, which Mr. Wilkinson would act wisely in removing. But it sinks into insignificance when compared with the want of care and attention exhibited at Bombay, where we find that in the case of imports out of 374 lacs, not less than 112 lacs are thus huddled together under the name of sundries too numerous and too trifling to be enumerated. The two great staple exports of Bombay are cotton and opium. Of the annual exports amounting to 564 lacs of rupees, 143 lacs consisted of cotton wool, and 209 lacs of opium. Sugar, which with us is an article of export to the extent of more than a million and a half sterling, is imported into Bombay to the extent of forty lacs, or nearly half a million, of which it appears that about sixteen lacs of rupees worth are again exported.

In the articles of cotton-twist and yarn, and piece-goods, the imports from England into Calcutta would appear to be greatly in excess of those into Bombay, which will not be surprising to those who consider that we have four times the population to clothe.

Raw silk was imported into Bombay to the extent of about 30 lacs of rupees in 1848, of which rather more than a tenth was exported. Our imports of silk in the same period amounted to just two maunds and a half, value Rs. 700 while our exports were not less than 42 lacs of rupees worth, while the preceding year it was 62 lacs. The only other items of comparison which appear to present any points of interest are those which refer to millinery and books. The import of apparel and millinery at Bombay in the year 1848 amounted to Rs. 2,25,000, while the imports into Calcutta in the same period were Rs. 14,77,000. In our Annual books are separated from stationery, the import of the former in that year having been Rs. 2,28,000, and of the latter Rs. 5,00,000. At Bombay the quantity of both articles imported was to the extent of Rs. 2,84,000.

We require a tabular statement of the external commerce of Bombay drawn up, and we do not see what obstacle can exist for the preparation and publication of such a work. Until we possess similar statements and corresponding particulars of the commerce of the four presidencies of India, we shall never be able to understand the state of foreign trade in India. Whenever Lord Dalhousie may be enabled to turn his attention from politics to commerce, we are certain that his lordship could not perform a service which would be more appreciated in this country and in England than that of commanding statements similar to those which Mr. Wilkinson gives us, to be drawn up by the officers of customs at Bombay, Madras, and Agra, and submitted to the Supreme Government. These brochures should then be committed to the press for the information of the public. If the expense of such a publication be started as an objection, we would propose that the useless folio volumes published annually at a large cost by Government, relative to the trade of the Straits Settlements, be retrenched, and the information they contain condensed into a dozen pages. The saving would more than cover the printer's charges for the Bombay, Madras, and Agra annuals. -Abridged from the Bombay Courier.

MILITARY REFORM IN INDIA.

THE Calcutta Englishman informs us that the attention of the Commander-in-Chief has been directed to the defective nature of the arms of the sepoys, and that he finds the musket principally objectionable for native troops from its weight and inefficiency. Our contemporary speaks of the fire of a native corps being proverbially ineffective, and very justly asks what can be expected from men who have no confidence in their weapons? Recent events have afforded us as striking an answer to the question as could well be desired. A Bengal cavalry regiment—we speak it without the slightest reproach to the corps—refused to draw their swords at Chillianwalla when the Commander-in-Chief was in danger, because they considered them useless; the Scinde horse at Goojerat made such a charge on the enemy as has, we believe, few parallels in history. There were many things conspiring to bring about this—but one of them doubtless was the perfect confidence they possessed in their weapons. They knew their tulwars would cut, and their carbines fire, and that they had perfect mastery of both. In 1840, when the Court of Directors resolved on introducing the percussion musket, to save the expense of new barrels, 100,000 of those fitted up for flint-locks were taken—the nipple for the cap was at first brazed on, but this being, as well it might be, considered an inexpedient arrangement for the climate of India, the rest were screwed in, and so dispatched in August. They were to be introduced gradually, as the old arms were returned into store, and they are, we presume, the same that have been in use ever since. How long they may have lain at home made up before undergoing the transformation here alluded to, we have no means of knowing, but feel well convinced that ten years since there was not a firelock, big or small, in the army, worthy of the service. When we dwelt on the matters at the time referred to, and for many a year afterwards, General Wm. Napier declared that our object was to sow discontent in the army, and make the men dissatisfied with their weapons. Sir C. Napier now examines matters with his own eyes, when the power of affording redress is in his hands, and arrives at the same conclusion we had recorded some nine years ago. We are right glad the gallant veteran is not above conviction, or disposed to permit folly to urge prescription as a plea for permanency. Much was expected at his hands in the way of reform; and, so far as he has gone, he has, at all events, promised fairly. His first address was a lecture against drunkenness, as emphatic as anything Colonel Michael Shaw himself could have delivered-considerably shorter than the usual speeches of the gallant warder of the northern marches of Scinde; his next was a formal announcement that he was determined to have discipline; his third, and best timed of all, a hearty compliment to the sepoy heroes of Jellalabad their high-caste brethren had reviled for having postponed the requirements of caste to those of military duty in the hour of extremity. Go on, Sir Charles; go on, and the "blatant beast" of the Bombay Times may once more have the pleasure of commending as loud as ever it condemned you .- Bombay Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TRANSMISSION OF LETTERS.—The Bombay Telegraph declares that a plan is under consideration by which the public of the three presidencies will be enabled to receive and answer letters from England twice a month.

GOLD ON THE INDUS. — The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette calls attention to the gold fields said to exist at Karabaugh on the Indus, and expatiates on the value of a conquest that furnishes gold in one place and pearls in another, near the mouth of the Indus.

NAVIGATION OF THE INDUS.—Four beautiful little steamers are shortly expected at Bombay, for the navigation of the Indus.

A HARD CASE. - The Bombay Telegraph and Courier relates a singular illustration of the old popular saying, that "a public body has neither shame nor mercy." The wife of a subaltern officer stationed in the Deccan rose from her sick bed, a few days after her confinement, to attend upon her husband, who had been attacked by the small pox. Her husband died, and the poor widow was left utterly destitute, while, according to the provisions of military law, her husband's property was immediately placed under sequestration. Every article of furniture, even a single bed and three chairs, was removed by order of the "Committee of adjustment," and her entreaties, backed by those of the commandant of the station, to be allowed to retain a washing stand and a piece of carpet, were refused. The correspondent, upon whose authority the editor of the Bombay Telegraph and Courier publishes these particulars, signifies his readiness to give up his name to any officer of his own regiment who may demand it. Even, however, under this authentication, we cannot but believe that there has been some great misconception as to the details of this story. It seems utterly incredible that British officers can be found who would consent so utterly to repress their own humane and gentlemanly feelings. We shall deeply regret to find that there is any foundation for the narrative, as it cannot fail to produce a most injurious and erroneous impression of the British army in India.

THE GUICOWAR, at the suggestion of Capt. French, the acting resident at Baroda, is, we hear, making a splendid road to Wassud, fourteen miles on the way to Ahmedabad.

THE CENSUS shews the population of the island, consisting of 275,190 males, and 248,931 females, or 524,121 in all—or above half a million—turns out nearly a third larger than any one supposed.

The Punjab supplies us with scarcely a single item of news. The Commander-in Chief of India had some weeks since given permission to those of the Bombay officers under command of Brigadier Dundas at Peshawur, on staff employ at the presidency, to quit the force and rejoin their appointments. The matter seems to have been imperfectly understood by the local government, and a reference was made to the Governor-General. The result was, that a month was lost, and the unfortunate parties, now set free, had been detained till close on the rains. They started in the heats, and more than one fell sick on the way down; they are mostly at Kurachee, where they must remain for two months till the season opens. The hot weather has fairly set in; at Peshawur the thermometer stood at 110 degrees in tents. The troops were indifferently enough off for quarters, but continued generally in good health. Lieut. Dilkes, of the 61st foot, had died on the 4th instant. Such had been the influx from the neighbourhood into Peshawur, that the population was said to have doubled in three months.—Bombay Times.

" BILLY BANYAN."-We have to announce the demise of one of our most celebrated native bankers, Purshotum Runsord, better known as Billy Banyan. Before the Agra Bank came into the field to afford gentlemen in difficulties accommodation on more favourable terms than in the bazaar, Billy was the grand resort to people in trouble, and was a special favourite with, as he had a peculiar favour for, gentlemen in scarlet. The terms on which he did business seem to have fluctuated, and his plan probably was to make the most of his customers. usuries have often been loudly proclaimed, acts of generosity have been mentioned on his part which would have done credit to the most high-minded and liberal. His good deeds were his own; and cases are quoted in abundance of large advances made by him to men about to return home sick, who, but for the accommodation afforded by him, must have died in India, where no security whatever could have been given him: we are bound to add, that we know of no case where this occurred in which his generosity was not met becomingly. On one occasion, it is said, he required to apply to head-quarters before he could get some pecuniary matters, of a not very promising character, cleared up with an officer belonging to the Queen's service. The matter occasioned the interference of the Duke of Wellingtonso runs the tale—and his Grace has ever since had Billy amongst the most ardent of his admirers. Gossip declares that his personal property will be sworn under Rs. 10,00,000, independent of his valuable estate and country-seat at Chimboor, and other extensive landed investments. His will is said to have been executed only a very short time previous to his demise. Two of his own countrymen have been appointed executors, under the direction of Mr. Ayrtoe, the solicitor. Billy's only son is still a youth .- Bombay Times.

THE MONSOON set in on the 15th June.

ELPHINSTONE COLLEGE.—Professor Patton has been appointed to the office of Principal of the Elphinstone College during the absence of Mr. Harkness,—Major Candy, of the Sanscrit College at Poona, preferring to remain where he is. Mr. Reid takes the place of Mr. Harkness as Professor of History and Belles Lettres; the departments of Mathematics and Physics remaining under Mr. Patton.

SCINDE.—Letters of the 6th June from Hydrabad give us an uncomfortable account of the climate. The heat is stated to be suffocating. The steamer from Sukkur for Kurrachee had passed on the 1st, with several officers on board. At Mooltan and Peshawur the temperature is described by our correspondent as extremely high; and the troops are suffering not a little in consequence, there not having been a sufficiency of time to provide them with adequate shelter.

MILITARY ITRIS.—H. M.'s 64th and 83rd regiments have been directed to be brought on the strength of the Bombay establishment from the date of the arrival of their respective head quarters, viz. 4th and 8th May last. Lieut.-Colonel W. Jacob, of the artillery, who returned to India by the Ajdoka on the 3rd instant, proceeds by the Mooruffer to England on Monday, having been allowed to resign the service from that date. This will promote Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel J. Lloyd, c. B., Capt. and Brevet-Major W. M. Coghlan, Lieut. and Brevet-Captain T. C. Pownall, and 2nd Lieut. C. J. Barton to the next superior grades. It is rumoured as likely that the civil-surgency at Kaira, and medical charge of the Goozerat provincial lastalion will be conferred on Assist. Surgeon J. T. Sanderson, now doing duty with the Indian navy. Dr. Sanderson entered the service in February, 1846, and may consider himself fortunate in coming it so early for a share of the good things of the professions, should he succeed to the berths above-named.—Bombay Times, June 23.

H. M.'s STEAM FAIGATE Inflexible, just arrived from Chine, proceeds without delay on her homeward voyage.

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF THE SHIP " LOWJEE FAMILY." On the night of the 23rd June the report of guns in the Bombay harbour led to the belief that the overland mail had arrived. turned out that these were signals that the ship Lowjee Family was on fire. Boats from the different steamers and merchantvessels around immediately put off to the assistance of the burning ship, but notwithstanding the exertions of their crews, by midnight the flames had made rapid progress in the work of destruction. By two o'clock in the morning she was nearly one mass of flames, and it became evident that all hope of saving her was past. She was accordingly left to her fate. The middle and after part of the ship continued to burn with great fury, and shortly after two the flames reached the forecastle, - when the unfortunate vessel presented one of the grandest sights imaginable. She was in flames from stem to stern,-immense columns of smoke rising from the burning mass,—and the whole sky was illuminated for a considerable distance around. A little before three the upper portion of her poop fell in, and added increased brilliancy to the flames. A few minutes after that hour her mizenmast went over the stern, and was followed almost immedistely by the mainmast. At four, when we went to press, the foremast had just fallen over the lee bow—the bowsprit appeared untouched. The hull near the stern and amidships was burnt untouched. The hull pear the stern and amidships was burnt down to within a few feet of the water's edge: the sea was apparently making its way into the vessel at the stern; and the flames were rapidly consuming the fore part of the ship. It is likely she may continue to burn yet for some hours, unless a sufficiency of water gets into her to sink her-which is not unlikely. The Lowjee Family belonged to Messrs. Forbes & Co., and Messrs. B. and A. Hormusjee. She was of 1,070 tons burthen, and was built at Bombay in 1791—being thus fiftyeight years old. She was to have sailed for Calcutta on the 1st of July with a cargo of salt, and from thence to the Mauritius. We could not learn how the fire originated—it was first discovered in the orlop deck.—Bombay Monthly Times.

BELGAUM.—We have letters from Belgaum to the 9th instant. It was rumoured at the station that Colonel Twopenny, of the 78th Highlanders, who lately returned to England, is about to retire from the service by the sale of his commission; and that Major W. Hamilton, at present commanding the corps, will shortly follow his example. Several parties who had just reached the station from Poona mention the heavy falls of rain which had overtaken them along the road nearly the whole way. We sub-join our usual correspondent's letter entire:—"Belgaum, 9th June, 1849. - On the evening of the 2nd instant we were visited by one of the severest storms of wind and rain that was ever experienced at this station. It commenced with a little drizzling rain at 4 r.m., but the storm did not occur till after 5, and continued one down-pour till half-past 8 o'clock. For more than twenty minutes of this period the fall of hail-stones was awful, being the largest I had ever seen; they were not spherical or oval, but appeared irregular shaped, as if a vast number of smaller ones had united in their descent from the clouds. The thunder was deafening, and the lightning very vivid and frequent. This hurricane has caused a general ruin of the plantain groves, and smaller fruit-trees, in all the gardens both in town and country, as well as in the fort. The fall of rain I hear was registered in the Highlanders' hospital at five, and little more than two, inches in the fort Scarcely a house escaped without having a few of the tiles carried away. Several lives were lost in the neighbourhood of the town of Shahpoor, and I have been informed the fine wooden bridge over the deep and wide nullah leading to it was carried over, but not swept away. Major Hamilton, of the Highlanders, who was out riding in the evening, had a narrow escape from a watery grave; but owing to the instinct of his horse, he escaped being immersed in a deep pool, which was not noticeable from the country being overflooded by the rain. Since the 2nd the weather has put on its monsoon aspect, a strong S.W., chilly, damp wind blowing day and night, with small searching rain. Several people who have arrived from Kolapoor and Poona within the past day or two state that the nullahs and rivers are overflowed, making travelling far from agreeable. I have heard a rumour that government contemplates locating the 2nd European L. I. at Satara, after their head-quarters have been relieved from Aden, and my informant says that barracks are being laid out, the late rajah having collected a large quantity of material for the purpose of enlarging one of his palaces. This will save honourable John's pocket a few thousand rupees. If this rumour is likely to turn out true, I would suggest their taking the European barracks at this station as a pattern for such as may here-after be built on the Bombay side. With the exception of Capt. Christie's departure on leave to Dharwar, no changes have taken place. I believe there are to be races in July, whenever a break takes place in the monsoon."—Bombay Times.

GREAT FIRE IN THE NATIVE TOWN .- We take the subjoined account of an extensive and destructive fire which occurred in the Null Bazaar, Native Town, on Monday morning, from the Telegraph and Courier of June 23. "Yesterday morning, a little before three o'clock, the neighbourhood of Erskine-street and Duncan-road was thrown into a state of great excitement by the outbreak of a dreadful fire opposite the Null Chowkee, in the vicinity above mentioned. It appears that the fire originated in a sweetmeat shop, where, it is said, a rat had run away with the flaming wick from a lamp into a quantity of grass, from which the fire spread to the wall and thence to the adjoining houses. The property burnt is estimated at more than two lacs of rupees, of which only one lac is insured. One Sullabhoy Bansalee is, by the occurrence, a loser to the amount of Rs. 60,000, of which, we believe, not a pice is insured. Six engines were promptly on the spot, under the guidance of Capt. Parr, Mr. King, and five European police constables; and soon afterwards several others arrived, making in all fifteen engines. By these the fire was ere long partially subdued. A little after seven o'clock, however, the flames again broke out, and pursued their destructive course along Jamma Moola-street. Owing to the indefatigable exertions of the police, and other gentlemen present, the flames were again checked, and hopes were entertained that the worst was over. After eleven o'clock, however, it was discovered that the fire was, with increased force, raging along the beams and floors communicating with the neighbouring houses. the engines were again in requisition, and by the immense quantity of water then thrown upon the burning masses, and the exertions of the natives, who willingly assisted in pulling down the buildings, the fire was got under, and up to four o'clock in the afternoon it did not again break out. We are happy to say that no lives were lost, though we heard that one person had been seriously injured by the falling of some timbers. During the time of the fire one miscreant pulled the ear-ring out of a Marwaddee's ear, severely lacerating the flesh. He was immediately arrested, and taken to Mazagon police-office, where he was committed to take his trial at the next petty sessions. would not have been so destructive if an abundance of water had been at hand; as it was, the engines were kept waiting for water so often, that only half of them could be kept constantly playing. They were supplied by water-bullocks. A little while after the fire broke out, Capt. Baynes and Mr. Farrant were on the spot, and made great exertions to extinguish it. Great praise is due to the European constables for their diligence and exertion throughout the whole affair.

LIBUT-COLONEL W. JACOB. — We are glad to observe the benevolent face of an old and well-known resident at the presidency once more amongst us-Lieutenant-colonel W. Jacob, better known perhaps as Major Jacob, of the powder works. He came out by last steamer, in compliance with a pre-emi-nently unwise regulation, to take up his appointment as lieutenant-colonel; he returns by the next, and immediately retires from the service. Colonel Jacob had while in India repeatedly. suffered from severe attacks of indisposition. He returned in 1842 from the Cape, where he had been for three years on sick leave, and went to England in 1844. Soon after his arrival hebecame professor of fortification at the Military College in Addiscombe,—an appointment he now holds; and so highly were his attainments prized, that in 1845 he was asked to pass the records of the Observatories at Madras, Bombay, Simla, and Singapore, through the press, the labour to be requited by a handsome allowance. Had he accepted the task, he would we have no doubt, ably discharged it; but his bands were at the time full of duty which was in some shape new to him. Magnetism and meteorology were ticklish things for a man nervously scrupulous as to the discharge of his duties, just arrived from India, and engaged in preparing future heroes for the capture of fortified of the most able and professional knowledge, he adds to these the most important attributes of a teacher—the most winning candour of disposition, fatherly kindness of heart, and in-terest in the concerns of all intrusted to his charge. We are gratified to observe how entirely his health seems restored; he has the English bloom unmixed with Indian saffron. Long may he continue in the enjoyment of the office, the honours, and the health, he possesses—a wish to which we believe every one who knows him will most cordially say amen.—Bomboy Times.

BOAT RACE.—The owner of the Blue Bell is said to have again challenged him of the Wove to another sailing match on the 27th June for the sum of Rs. 500. The Worte has heretofore beaten all competitors, the Blue Bell amongst the rest, and there can be little doubt she will do so again and again, under any circumstances that may arise, if managed with proper tact.

RAILWAY TERMINUS .- We do not know that the railway terminus has yet been determined on; we should think the expense of penetrating the native town would for the present be avoided, and that Byculla rather than Colaba would form the point of departure. The grand object will be to get as far into the interior as possible at first; it is very desirable to get as near the harbour as possible, but the cost of the three miles from Byculla would be more than that of the next twenty.

The Ajdaha, with the London mail of May 7, reached Bombay June 5.

Branch Ice-Houses.-The American residents in Bombay are effecting wondrous changes in this island: the great ice-house of Apollo-street is about to present branch depôts in various localities; and as a commencement, we are glad to notice that Mr. Summers, at Nowrojee-hill, Mazagon, has a mugasin (refrigerated, by the way) of apples, hams, and cheeses, supplied by the Columbian continent; and better than all, a supply of the "futtur-ke-pawnee" carved by Mr. Tudor from the lakes and rivers of his native land for Indian consumption!

POONA.—The following is an extract from a letter dated Poona, the 5th June:—"Lord and Lady Falkland reached Dapooree this morning at ten o'clock, accompanied by Col. the Hon. J. Ashburnham, c.B., Capts. Little and Fife, and Dr. Keith. It was expected they would have been in yesterday, but as there has been a great deal of rain betwixt Sattara and Poona during the last three or four days, I presume they were detained on the road in consequence. There has been plenty of thunder and lightning here every day and night during the present month, and I think our thunder beats yours all to sticks, for of all I ever heard in my life it outdid brought here and all discharged at one time. The lightning also was frightful to behold; and very heavy rain has fallen every day; so we may conclude the monsoon has set in here. Some two or three detachments of the newly-arrived regiments met with rain somewhere about Wargaum, and were completely drenched. A friend of mine met a very large party of them on Saturday last coming in, and to judge from their countenances, he says he should have taken them to have been as miserable as any human beings could be. He says it was a treat to see the healthy, and in many cases handsome, faces of the females. The appearance of the chubby little children also pleased him much, although the sun had tanned them a good deal."

CANTON. - Trade is nearly at a stand. The combination of the Guilds has destroyed confidence for a time, and until the new teas come forward, it is doubtful whether there will be any great improvement. The high price of rice, and the reported failure in the crop, have also had an unfavourable influence on foreign commerce. Shing-lee (the man captured by the magistrates for buying from foreigners in opposition to the will of the Guilds) has not yet returned, and his fate is still a mystery. Ahoo, the Ahoo, the broker, has come back; his price-current has been discontinued, and the unfortunate man intimates an intention of retiring to the country. An extract which follows will enable our readers to form an opinion as to the legality of these Guilds and the influence they will have on foreign trade, if vigorous steps are not taken to enforce the treaties and protect foreign merchants from illegal combinations.

THE GUILDS AND FOREIGN TRADE.—An observer of the steps taken by the Canton corporations to frustrate the right of entry to the city, and their perfect success in carrying on a system of illegal interruption to trade, cannot help coming to the conclusion, that these associations were acting in harmony with the imperial commissioner, and that not only has trade stopped in this instance in contravention of treaties, but that hereafter the same means will be adopted to coerce foreign merchants into compliance with the wishes of the people or of the government. The Chinese have fallen back upon their old plan of operations—that of stopping zrade—for submitting to which so much obloquy attached to the factors of the East India Company when that body repre-sented England in China, and monopolized a large share of the English and Indian trade.

During the supremacy of the Company, China granted a monopoly to a few Hong merchants; once admitted into the co-hong, these merchants were held in miserable vassalage by the high authorities. The money amassed by the monopolists was rrung from them by exactions, and rarely, if ever, were they permitted to retire from the co-hong. The co-hong membership was thus a dangerous and a painful elevation. That unfortunate body was held responsible for the servile compliance of foreigners with all the exactions of officials, and to save the members from consequences the most disastrous, foreigners were at times induced to succumb to humiliating stretches of authority on the t of the Chinese. The Hong merchants nominally held a nonepoly of the trade; but in point of fact they were mere agents for the corrupt officials who amassed large fortunes by their extortions. tortions. The foreign merchant never knew the tariff by which his imports and exports were taxed. That it greatly exceeded the tariffauthorized by the emperor is generally admitted; but so long as a certain annual remittance was made to Peking, the government was satisfied, and the foreign merchant having no direct communication with head quarters, was obliged to submit to a system of commercial tyranny and rapacity. The very hospitals of the provincial city were supported by a levy on foreign shipping, the proceeds of which was double the expense of the institutions, a moiety thus finding its way into the strong boxes of the mandarins. The imperial edict, publishing a summary of the treaty of Nanking, reads : -

" Hereafter there will be fixed duties at the five ports, and as to the Custom-house arrangements, the said barbarians have lived so long in China, how is it they are not fully aware of them?"

The question is easily answered;—it was a part of the co-hong system to keep foreigners ignorant of the duties, either im-port or export. The question itself proves the fact, that the exactions greatly exceeded the tariff.

The co-hong was essentially corrupt—oppressive upon the foreign merchant—and from the facility with which it admitted of interruptions, injurious to trade. Its abolishment forms a conspicuous article in Sir Henry Pottinger's treaty negotiated at Nanking, and the iniquities of the system was one of the grievances which reluctantly forced England to engage in a distant, an expensive, and then, an uncertain war. It is provided by the fifth article of the treaty that,-

"The government of Canton having compelled the British mer-chants trading to Canton to deal exclusively with certain Chinese merchants, called Hong merchants (or co-hong), who had been licensed by the Chinese government for that purpose, the emperor of China agrees to abolish that practice in future at all ports where British merchants may reside, and to permit them to carry on their mercantile transactions with whatever persons they please,

An imperial edict, dated 6th September, 1812 (the treaty was signed at Nanking on the 29th of the previous month) contains an outline of the treaty, from which edict we now quote :-

By the eighth article of the supplementary treaty it was agreed " to grant to all foreign countries whose subjects or citi-zens have hitherto traded at Canton, the privilege of resorting for purposes of trade to the other four ports of Fuchau, Amoy, Aingpo, and Shanghai, on the same terms as the English."

Further, "that should the emperor hereafter from any cause whatever be pleased to grant additional privileges or immunities to any of the subjects or citizens of such foreign countries the same privileges and immunities will be extended to and enjoyed by British subjects."

We have introduced this clause of the supplementary treaty. as the American commissioner in negotiating the treaty between the United States and China, appears to have felt the importance of providing clearly and explicitly for freedom of commercial intercourse with the people. On this head the American treaty is particularly distinct, as will be observed by a perusul of Article 15:-

"The former limitation of the trade of foreign nations to certain persons appointed at Canton by the government, and commonly called Hong merchants, having been abolished, citizens of the United States, engaged in the purchase or sale of goods of import or export, are permitted to trade with any and all subjects of China without distinction, they shall not be subject to any new limitations nor impeded in their business by monopolies or other injurious restrictions."

It is unnecessary to strengthen our position by reference to the general regulations of trade, which state, "That English merchants may trade with whatever native merchants they please." We think it will be admitted that by treaties, the monopoly system was entirely broken up—that trade should be perfectly unfettered—that it should not be subjected to any new limitations by monopolies, or to other injurious restrictions.

In defance of these engagements entered into by the emperor

In defiance of these engagements entered into by the emperor of China, certain corporations in Canton (for political purposes) stopped the foreign trade most effectually; the community, under heavy penalties, being prohibited purchasing from the foreign merchants, either by private contract or by public auction.

This interdict was in force from the 3rd of March to the 10th of April, or until the corporations had gained their object, when the embargo was removed as regards private contracts, and subsequently it was also taken off auction sales. The British acting consul protested against this violation of treaty early in March, to this protested against this violation of treaty early in March, to this protest the imperial commissioner gave little if any attention, and the inference is, that he not only approved of the stoppage, but that he sanctioned, if he did not suggest it. We are confirmed in this opinion by the fact that a dealer who had disregarded the interdict was seized and punished by the magistrates. It is nearly two months since the unfortunate man was apprehended, and to the present day his fate is unknown. Some reports say he died under torture, while the most favourable allege that he has been transported for four years. Another Chinese saved himself by absconding. His nominal offence was publishing a list of sales,—the real offence, no doubt, was his close commercial intercourses with foreigners, checking a monopoly by the corporations, which we are convinced Seu is determined to effect. This man has recently returned to Canton, intimating his intention of retiring to the country; his list of sales has been discontinued, it is asserted and believed, by order of the imperial commissioner.

It scarcely admits of a doubt that it is Seu's policy to intimidate all who deal with foreigners who are not members of the guilds or corporation; and that when these men are disposed of, the Guilds will assume the position of the old co-hong; trade will again be saddled with illegal exactions; through the guilds, Seu will have power to stop it at any time; the co-hong will again exist in spirit, and the interest of the foreign merchants be recklessly sacrificed. Such an opinion is justified by the circumstances. The freedom of commercial intercourse has been openly repudiated, and the treaties with England and America treated with contempt. To point the insult more directly, the Chinese clerks in the British consulate were arrested by the Mandarins; imprisoned, bullied, and charged with being spies. The regulations of trade provide for the employment of these men by foreigners; indeed without them it would be impossible to carry on trade, as the Custom House is within the walls of the city where a foreign merchant dare not show himself.— Friend of China.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The largest public meeting ever held here since the foundation of the colony assembled in front of the Commercial Exchange on Saturday last, to oppose by all constitutional means, the introduction of convicts into this colony. The Hon. Mr. Ebden was unanimously called to the chair, and opened the proceedings by an address to the meeting, couched in language the most firm and appropriate; after which the following series of resolutions were severally put, and carried by acclamation:—

"That this colony has never been, from the time of its first settlement to this day, a place of detention and punishment for criminals, transported from the mother-country; and that it has been preferred, as their home and the home of their children, by thousands of the most respectable colonists, on the faith and firm belief that the dangers and degradation inseparable from a penal settlement never would be forced upon it by the British Government.

"That in the year 1842, when Lord Stanley, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, proposed that certain juvenile delinquents should be sent to the Cape, there to be dispersed among the inhabitants as apprenticed labourers, the colonists addressed a remonstrance against the measure to Her Majesty and to both Houses of Parliament, setting forth the evils that such an admixture of depraved youths with the peculiarly constituted population of this colony would inevitably produce; and Her Majesty was pleased to receive their remonstrances very graciously, and to announce, that in deference to their wishes and representations, the project had been abandoned, thereby confirming in the minds of the colonists, and of all respectable persons who might be disposed to emigrate to the Cape, the conviction that the British Government acknowledged the right and privilege of the peoole of this colony to be consulted in such a case, and that their wishes and opinions would be respected in all time to come.

"That Her Majesty recognised and admitted the inherent right and privilege of the people of this colony to be consulted, through the constitutional channels, before such a measure as the introduction of convicts was finally resolved on, in accordance with the prayer of the memorialists of 1842; and that such a measure would never be forced upon their acceptance, contrary to their wishes, was farther confirmed, and, as they had reason to expect, for ever set at rest, by his Excellency's official announcement in the Gazette of Nov. 16, 1848, that her Majesty's Secretary of State for the colonies 'desired to have the opinion of the colonists at large on the subject, offering the measure' of sending convicts with tickets-of-leave to the Cape, to their acceptance and not demanding it to be carried up.' to their acceptance, and not demanding it to be carried out."

"That after this customary recognition of their right to be consulted on measures of this description; and after the customary deference paid to their wishes by Her Majesty's Government, the people of this colony promptly responded last year to his Excellency's invitation to express their wishes and opinions on this new project of sending convicted felons under the name of exiles to the Cape, and in addresses to himself, to both Houses of Parliament, and to the Queen, they ananimously declined to accept the measure, and that, not doubting for a moment that Her Majesty's reply, as on former occasions, will be favourable and worthy of a constitutional sovereign reigning over a free people, faithful to her engagements and promises, they have learned with astonishment and indignation that Lord Grey has in the meantime ordered the measure to be enforced, with a perfect knowledge that it had been rejected by the colonists, and in direct violation of his instructions to the Governor, in direct violation of his Excellency's pledge to the people, and in open violation of the right of the colonists to be consulted in such cases, as recognized by the Queen, thereby bringing the local Government into contempt, and tarnishing the honour of the British Crown.

"That the pretext on which Earl Grey is represented as excusing this violation of the custom of the Crown and the just rights of the colonists, the expenses, namely, incurred by Great Britain in the late Kafir war, is utterly fallacious, inasmuch as that war was neither caused, conducted, nor in any way controlled by the colonists, whose only share in its protracted miseries was in the loss of time, property, health, and blood.

"That the colonists of all classes have declared, and now again solemnly declare and pledge their faith to each other, not to employ, admit into their establishments, work, or associate with any convicted felon or felons seat to this colony under sentence of transportation.

"That in these circumstances, his Excellency will be fully justified in prohibiting and preventing the debarkation of the convicted felons, supposed to be on their way from Bermuda to this place; and that it is his imperative and binding duty to the Queen and to the people—to the Queen, the honour of whose crown is about to be compromised by a breach of faith committed in her name by one of her Ministers,—to the people, who have given him so many proofs of confidence and affection,—and to his own word which has gone forth, and cannot be recalled,—to suspend the publication of any Order in Council on this subject which he may receive, until Her Majesty's final determination be known, to whom the whole case has been submitted by the colonists.

"That should it happen that any surcharge should be made by Her Majesty's Government for expenses incurred by prohibiting the debarkation of convicted felons in this colony, the colonists will indemnify his Excellency for such charge incurred in the faithful discharge of his duty.

"That a protest and remonstance, founded on these resolutions, be immediately prepared, signed, and presented to His Excellency."

PRESENTS IN INDIA.—Before the prohibitory order against taking of presents from native princes was issued by the Indian Government, the following incident occurred at Mysore, which illustrates the disgraceful occurrences to which that order put a stop. At the celebration of the Dussera festival, when most of the élite of the Bangalore society were wont in those days to repair to Mysore, and some of them, it was believed, as much for gain as amusement, a lady, one of the rajah's guests at the Dussera, was accompanied by her daughter, seven or eight years of age. All received princely gifts on the occasion, and as a courtier was handing round the costly Cashmires and brilliant jewellery, the mamma, not contented with her own share, pointing to her child, inquired if she were to be passed over. The Mysore courtier bowed, smiled, and at once placed a pair of massive gold and jewelled bangles on the wrists of the child, who was then almost weighed down with a pair of the finest Cashmire shawls.

THE EAST-INDIANS. — The rising generation of the East-Indian body, viewed in the mass, are remarkable for the absence of that solidity of character which is an earnest of future greatness and ultimate success. Removed at an early age from school, they are too quickly thrown into the world, and carried away by the whirlpool of fashion. The gaieties and pleasures of this engross almost all their attention; they too frequently become mere coxcombs; plunge into debt, from which they can never extricate themselves honourably, or, marrying at an early age, the remainder of their lives is passed in providing for a large family.—Calcutta Review.

The Todass of the Neilcherries. — Captain Ouchterlony says of this people that their appearance in form and countenance is very striking. "Tall, well-proportioned, and athletic, their bold, independent carriage and finely-moulded and sinewy limbs attest that they can be sprung from no effeminate Eastern race, while their aquiline nose, receding forehead, and rounded profile, combined with their black bushy beards and eyebrows, give them so decidedly Jewish an aspect, that no beholder can fail to be impressed with the idea that they must, in some way, however remote, be connected with one of the lost and wandering tribes of the ancient Israelites." It may be added that their language, which is very peculiar, bears no analogy whatever to that of any other race in Southern India.

"Conquer anger by mildness, evil by good, covetousness by liberality, and falsehood by truth," is one of the maxims of Buddha.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The last Calcutta Review (No. 21) contains an article upon "the Periodic Literature of Ceylon," presenting a rather startling list of no fewer than ten periodical works published within the last fifteen years at Colombo, Kandy, and Jaffna, including three "magazines," and two similar publications bearing the title of "miscellany." It might be imagined from this catalogue that the opulence of this celebrated island had been transferred from its soil and sea to the intellect of its foreign settlers; that, as its "cinnamon and pearls" sunk in the market or disappeared, poetry and prose took their places, and Imagination, which had long made "the utmost Indian isle" her own, frighted away for a time by commerce, had revisited her favourite

Reading on, however, we find that the intellectual productions of Ceylon, though quick to germinate, are ephemeral; that of all these works only one survives, the Morning Star, a small work of four pages, in English and Tamul, issued from the American Mission press at Jaffna, partaking more of the character of a newspaper than a magazine, and which dates its birth no longer back than last year.

The first of these publications was the Colombo Religious and Theological Magazine, which appeared in 1833, and sustained itself for two years; it consisted of a series of essays and Bible biographies. In 1837 appeared the Friend, which, being conducted by the Wesleyan missionaries at Colombo, was likewise of a religious character, the aim of the conductor, as declared in the first number, being, "as far as his very limited influence extended, to restore the world to its original purity." In addition to European selections, it contained original articles relating to the religion and customs of the Singalese, some of which are valuable. It existed for ten years, having given birth to a Singalese publication of a similar character, named Lanka Nidhana, or 'Lamp of Ceylon,' which was carried on for two years, with very little success.

The first of these works which corresponds strictly to our notion of a magazine was the Colombo Magazine, commenced in 1939, comprising tales, essays, and poetry, of the lightest kind,so light, indeed, as to be insipid, - and in three months it became extinct; but in the following year it was succeeded by a more respectable work in the Ceylon Magazine, which was supported by the literary talent of Ceylon, and amongst its contributors was the Hon. G. Turnour, the translator of the Mahawanso. One of the objects of the work was to turn the thoughts of the community of Ceylon from "the animosities and heart-burnings" which prevailed smongst its members, to literary topics," and provide them "a salutary and harmless entertainment." This commendable attempt provoked a virulent attack from one of the factions, which had the effect of rallying round the magazine all who wished well to harmony, and it was carried on with spirit for two or three years. Amongst its most valuable articles are, a series of letters on the origin of Buddhism, by Mr. Turnour; some papers on the literature, manners, and customs of the Ceylon Tamils, by Simon Casie Chitty; and pieces in prose and werse, by the Rev. B. Baily and Dr. Macvicar.

The Ceylon Miscellany was a quarterly periodical, begun in 1842, and conducted by Mr. R. Power, of the Ceylon civil service; it contained some excellent papers, but could not protract its existence beyond six months.

The Morning Star, the humble representative of the periodical literature of the island, is, as already stated, a small, unpretending work of four pages, which circulates chiefly in the northern districts, where the population is principally of Tamul race, and far more active and intelligent than the true Singalese. Small and cheap as the work is, however, the returns do not cover the cost.

Such is the sad history of the Periodic Literature of Ceylon!

Mr. H. M. Elliot, Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, is publishing at Calcutta, in four volumes, a Biographical Index to the Histories of Mahomedan India. "It was originally suggested," says the Friend of India, "by his desire to lithograph a uniform edition of the native historians of India. It was then intimated that, as few people were acquainted with the particular works which should be selected to form such a series, it would be desirable that an index of them should be drawn up, in order that the manuscripts might be sought for, and deposited in one of our college libraries. This task Mr. Elliot undertook, under the idea that it would not be one of great difficulty; but the mere nominal index insensibly expanded into several volumes. As he proceeded with the collection, he was persuaded that it would be 'useful to append, as far as his knowledge would permit, a few notes to each history, as it came under consideration, illustrative of the matter it comprehended; the style, position, and prejudices of the several authors, and the merits or deficiencies of their execution.' The number of works thus collected, and to which the present work is intended as a key, amounts to no fewer than two hundred and thirty-one. Of these, sixty-seven are general histories, ten refer to the conquest of Scinde by the Arabs, twenty-one to the Ghaznevide dynasty, six to the Ghorian and Slave dynasty, eleven to the Khilji and Togluk dynasties, six to the irruption of Timur, two to the Sayid or Khizr Khani dynasty, and eleven to the Affghan dynasty. The third volume notices ten general histories of the house of Timur, three of the reign of Baber, three of Humayun, fourteen of Akbar, seven of Jehangir, nine of Shah Jehan, fifteen of Aurungzebe, six of Bahadur Shab, six of Ferokhshere, eight of Muhammed Shah, and sixteen of Shah Alum, the least interesting reign having the largest number of historians. The first volume comprises notices of the sixty-seven general histories, and furnishes a biographical notice of each author, and the character and relative value of his writings, which the reader is himself enabled in some instances to estimate by the extracts given from the work in an English dress. The work is interspersed with the author's own notes on events, or questions of particular interest, in which he has collected from all quarters, and all ages, and all languages, whatever was calculated to elucidate the subject."

The Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for April contains several very interesting papers. The first is an attempt by Lieutenant R. Strachey to settle an oft-disputed question concerning the snow line of the Himalayas. Years ago it was stated by Humboldt, and the assertion is repeated in Cosmos, that the limit of perpetual snow lies higher on the northern than the southern declivity of the Himalayas; or, in other words, that either less snow falls on the northern than on the southern side, or that it is much sooner melted. In Cosmos, M. Humboldt informs us-" The limit of perpetual snow on the southern declivity of the Himalaya Chain is 2,030 toises (13,000 feet English) above the level of the sea; on the northern declivity, or rather in the peaks which rise above the Tartarean plateau, this limit is 2,600 toises (16,600 feet) from 301 to 32 deg. of latitude, while under the equator in the Andes of Quito it is 2,470 toises (15,800 feet). The greatest elevation to which the snow line recedes on the Tibetian declivity is the result conjointly of the radiation of heat from the neighbouring elevated plains, the serenity of the sky, and the infrequent formation of snow in very cold and dry air." The subject has been frequently discussed of late years, but much of the difference of opinion has arisen from the ignorance of the observers of the peculiarities of glaciers, as well as from the fact that the observations were made at different seasons of the year. The existence of true glaciers in the Himalayas was first proved, and their character vas first made known, by the intelligent researches of Lieutenant Strachey, and one would naturally expect, therefore, the observations of this gentlemnn to be free from many of the errors of his predecessors. Lieutenant Strachey states "that the snow" line, or southern edge of the belt of perpetual snow, in this portion of the Himalaya, is at an elevation of 15,500 feet; while on the northern edge it reaches 18,500 feet; and that on the mountains to the north of the Sutlej, or still further, recedes even beyond 19,000 feet. The greater elevation which the snow-line attains on the northern edge of the belt of perpetual snow is a phenomenon not confined to the Tibetian declivity alone, but extending far into the interior of the chain; and it appears to be chiefly caused by the quantity of snow that falls on the northern portions of the mountains being much less than that which falls further to the south, along the line where the peaks covered with perpetual snow first rise above the less elevated range of the Himalaya."

The following description of a Malay belle, the daughter of the Dupatie of Pulo Punjan, is given by a European visitor, writing in a Madras paper:—

"On a handsome carpet of worsted-work, cross-legged, was seated a young female, evidently of no ordinary pretensions to both rank and personal appearance, with toes just peeping out, to show the rich purple dye of the nails, and leave fancy to judge of the feet. The kain sarong, or under garment, that so partially hid them, was a dark chequered or rather plaided texture of fine cotton cloth, upheld at the waist by a zone of red gold, glittering in tasteful display through the white muslin badjue, robing the person down from the neck to a little over the knee; her head without ornament, save a large golden pin, securing a mass of shining black hair in a seemingly careless, yet well arranged, fold at the back of the head, leaving a thin fringe on the temples, to contrast with their clear, dark hue of nut brown. That a mistake had been made, not a doubt crossed my mind, till the softest 'bie bie,' with a light wave of the hand, and mild glance from the eye, gave strength to my daring, still better supported by the voice of the chief and his sons, giving the 'Ujan welcome' in pleased broken English; when, at a further advance, the privilege was speedily acknowledged by a bow, denoting all due respect, and mats being the only seals present whereon to squat, to my amazement, I was invited to a seat on the carpet, and soon becoming free of embarrassment, found myself closely enthroused on the left of the lady, while the father and her three brothers and on mats in our front. Business commenced with the secry (masticatory), when seeing me unprovided, the lady set about preparing it, and gave me thereby a very fair excuse for scrutiny. Her age was about seventeen; her regular features were more those of the Battas than of the broad-faced Malay; the skin more of a brown than a red, and the teeth, though not filed to the gums, if indeed filed at all, yet most awfully black. The young lady, with another 'bie bie,' partly displayed them to honour me with the freshly-made secry, when, waving away my hand put out to receive it, astonishment, I fear, was but faintly cone aled to find it held by her own tiny fingers, and therewith most gracefully put up to my lips till I opened my mouth and allowed her to drop it therein. To pay all due honour, the jaws must be seen to move and to munch; but a few seconds at the effort sufficed to set my face in a fiery glow, and draw a stream of hot water trickling down from my eyes, which, as luck would have it, from a smile drew the young lady into a laugh, taken up by the whole of the group; but loudest of all by myself, to hide the greater portion of the compound of chunam, betel-leaf, areca-nut, and cloves, in my pocket-handkerchief, retaining sufficient still to make me munch."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, July 31, 1849.

THE instructions issued by the Board of Administration for the Punjab to the Commissioners and their subordinates (given in the last Mail) are framed upon statesmanlike principles, and have been dictated by a spirit of wise dis-To govern is not only intrinsically far more difficult than to conquer a nation, but it is an office which demands a different class of agents, whose operations are very differently conducted. An army is a machine, the motions of which are guided by a single will, which regulates its minutest functions. The civil departments of Government are but feebly influenced by the superintending authority, which can only chalk out rude outlines of action; the interior and most vital parts of the system must be filled up by the several grades of acting functionaries, and the play of the machinery will depend more or less upon their individual skill, judgment, temper, and discretion.

If this be true, as it most assuredly is, in ordinary cases, how important it is to bear the truth in mind when we are about to enter upon the government of a large territory, wrested by us from its native rulers by force, after a war in which (according to Lord Dalhousie's despatch) "the whole body of the nation, army and people alike," deliberately engaged! It is, therefore, consolatory to perceive that the Board of Administration urge the Commissioners to instil into their subordinates the true spirit in which such a country as the Punjab should be ruled by us, - a spirit of forbearance, without any relaxation of proper firmness; accessibility by all ranks; a readiness to listen and attend to their wants and wishes; a kindness and consideration towards all classes, "especially those who have lost so much by the change of rule." In short, the object—and it is the right one—aimed at is to make the people understand that they are not to be treated as vanquished thralls; that we have displaced their late Government solely because that Government abused its powers, and neglected its duties to them and to us; and a nation is quick-sighted enough to discern even the faintest difference when the balance is in favour of its own interest. The sword of Britain has conquered India; that sword, placed in the hands of natives of India, retains it in British possession; but it is the spirit of our government, at once firm and gentle, tolerant and just, which renders this rule so light and easy as scarcely to be felt as one of force. Were the hundred millions of British subjects in India to be polled upon the question whether they would continue under our sway or exchange it for that of a native chackravarta, we have no doubt that a vast majority would prefer the former.

The Board of Administration urge the necessity and policy of our officers mixing with all ranks of the people and studying their characters, to which they might have added, although it was, no doubt, meant to be included, carefully noting their habits, customs, and prejudices. These are less disguised amongst the Sikhs and the people with whom they are blended in the Punjab than in many other parts of India, where rigid rules of caste and unbending laws of etiquette establish a barrier against social intercourse between natives and Europeans. The Sikh females are not secluded; the principles of the Grant's are repugnant to caste restraints; and their Catholic spirit has somewhat modified and abated the severity of the domestic restrictions amongst both Hindus and Mahomedans in the doabs where the Sikhs predominate.

Europeans, who are not accustomed to the peculiar and various manners of Asiatic nations, are not only ignorant of the value attached by them to the observance of particular forms, but are apt to mistake their intent and meaning. A Griffin, or fresh importation from Europe, would not scruple, as an act of civility, to inquire after the health of an eastern friend's wife, which would be regarded as a pointed affront. We cannot, however, better illustrate the mistakes which may be made through our ignorance of native manners in the East than by relating an incident which occurred in Burmah, at the commencement of our war with that empire.

Two English officers, walking in the vicinity of Rangoon, met a native, who, upon seeing them, immediately turned his back, and, with his head covered, squatted down on the path before them. This was the highest mark of respect which, according to Burman manners, an inferior could pay to a superior. One of the officers, — both of whom, ignorant of the customs of the country, misinterpreted the act,—noticed to his companion what he termed "the fellow's insolence," and rewarded a demonstration of extreme politeness by a severe kick. It is easy to imagine the impression which the report of such an act must have made, for a time, upon the minds of the people.

This is an extreme case; but, in its nature and consequences, it differs from many mistakes committed by Europeans, through a want of familiarity with Eastern manners, only in degree. Such apparently trivial acts, however, as the killing of a cow, the shooting of a peacock or a monkey, the refusing to give the wall to a Braminy bull, with many other examples of error or inadvertence, have led to serious consequences.

A superstitious regard to omens is carried amongst the Punjabis to a ridiculous and even abourd length; but absurd and ridiculous as this weakness is, it would be wrong to treat it otherwise than tenderly. "A knowledge of these whims and propossessions," observes Captain Murray, in his account of the manners of the Sikhs, "is useful and necessary: they warp the opinions and direct the public and private affairs of all ranks of society, from the despot to the peasant,—from the soldier in the battle-field to the criminal at the tree of execution."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

House of Lords, July 27.

Lahore Jewels. - Indian Army. - In reply to a question from the Earl of Ellenborough, who wished to know to whom the property of the jewels taken at Lahore belonged,

The Marquis of Lansdowne was understood to say that no details had yet been received from India, but it would be satisfactory to the House to learn that instructions had been sent out to give six months' batta to the army engaged in the Punjab.

The Earl of Ellenborough said, that it was very satisfactory to hear that.

House of Commons, July 29.

Ceylon.-Mr. Baillie, chairman of the Select Committee on Ceylon, moved an address for a royal commission to inquire on the spot into the means taken for the repression of the late in-surrection in that colony. He stated the grounds on which the committee had thought it their duty to make this application,namely, that neither the minutes of the proceedings of the Council of Ceylon nor those of the Courts-martial had been forwarded; and there were, moreover, grave charges against the Governor, which could not be inquired into without the presence of witnesses now in Ceylon. The committee, in these circumstances, the Session being about to close, had instructed him to move for a commission to inquire on the spot.

Lord J. Russell said, if this commission was to inquire into the conduct of the Governor of Ceylon, with reference to ' means taken for the repression of the late insurrection," it must tend to weaken and impair the authority of the Governor, who could not carry on the affairs of the colony with a grand inqui-sitor upon the spot, taking down the complaints of individuals against his conduct in an insurrection not put down without force and summary proceedings. Very grave reasons could alone justify such a measure, and the Governor should be first recalled, in order that he might be impeached and put upon his trial. The evidence taken by the select committee had not been reported; the committee, therefore, asked the House to pursue this course blindly. A motion might be made next Session for a select committee, or articles of impeachment might be preferred against Lord Torrington; but the House should not adopt a course which would destroy the authority of the Governor without knowing anything of the evidence upon which it was founded.

Mr. Hume said, the reason why the evidence taken before the committee had not been produced was, that the charges were so serious, and the evidence was partial, minutes and other official documents from Ceylon having been withheld. The Governor ought to be recalled, and a commission issued; it behoved the House, after what had occurred, to prosecute the inquiry and obtain full information.

Mr. V. Smith asked whether any member could conscientiously come to such a vote, branding the governor of Ceylon, in total ignorance of the subject.

Mr. Disraeli said, a motion had been made in the committee by Mr. Hume to produce the evidence, which was resisted, because it was imperfect, and in justice to the governor it was unanimously resolved not to present the evidence. The argument that the appointment of a commission would destroy the legitimate influence of the governor was equally an argument against the appointment of the select committee; the moment that was consented to, the just and legitimate influence of the governor was destroyed. The question was, -would the House support their committee, who desired to prosecute this inquiry fully in a spirit of impartiality?

Mr. Villiers said, this motion would not have been made had Mr. Hawes assented in the committee to a compromise. (Mr. Villiers's) impression was not unfavourable towards Lord Torrington, and was less unfavourable than it had been, since he saw the difficult and delicate situation in which he had been placed.

Sir J. Hogg said, there were two grounds upon which to rest such a motion—one a prima facie case of gross misconduct on the part of the governor; the other, the recommendation of the committee. In the latter case, the committee should have been all but unanimous, whereas the recommendation had been carried by the voice of the chairman alone. Even if there were a strong prima fucie case of gross misconduct, the course should be to recall the Governor, and not appoint a roving commission to ferret out charges against him.

Lord Hotham, as the member of the committee who had proposed this course, justified his conduct in so doing, detailing with some minuteness the proceedings in the committee, which he was convinced could not do justice without more information, and in a matter affecting so deeply the character of the Governor of a colony and others an inquiry upon the spot was the most preferable course.

Sir J. Graham reminded the House that they were sitting in a judicial capacity, and suggested the propriety of bringing the discussion as speedily as possible to a close. The opinion of the committee, adopted by nine to one, that the evidence should not be reported, he thought, was binding upon the judgment of the House. As the matter stood, however, it was not possible that the inquiry should close; and he was of opinion that Mr. Hawes did not exercise in the committee altogether a wise discretion in declining the proffered arrangement, that the committee should re-assemble next session, and renew the inquiry, steps being taken in the meantime to secure the attendance of witnesses from the colony. He could not support the motion, which would be unjust to Lord Torrington, and he thought the ends of justice would be satisfied if the committee were to be reappointed next session to go on with the inquiry.

Lord J. Russell admitted that, as the inquiry was incomplete, the manner in which the evidence ought to be completed was by reappointing the committee next session, to which he was ready to consent.

Mr. Hawes vindicated his own proceeding in the committee, and Mr. Baillie offered, if Lord J. Russell gave a pledge that the attendance of witnesses from Ceylon should be secured, to withdraw his motion; but Lord John, observing that there would be no difficulty in securing the attendance of witnesses, would not consent to the withdrawal of the motion, and in spite of the entreaties of Mr. Law, Sir J. Graham, and Mr. Roebuck, be adhered to this resolution, remarking that the question affected the honour and character of the governor of a colony.

A division accordingly took place, when the motion was negatived by 90 against 33.

Lord J. Russell then agreed that, if the committee should re-assemble this day, and by a majority point out by name such witnesses as they desired to examine, steps should be taken to secure their attendance next session, when the committee should be reappointed.

A motion of Mr. Hume, that the evidence taken before the select committee be laid before the House, was negatived.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EAST INDIA COLLEGE. - The examination of the candidates for admission into the E. I. College next term was held at the E. I. House on the 26th, 27th, and 28th inst., when, of thirtyone candidates who were examined, the following were reported duly qualified; viz. Messrs. Agnew, Alexander, Ames, Benson, Brandreth, Capper, Clarke, Grey, Hope, Horsley, Jenkins, Lane, Lawrence, Lowis, Macnabb, Mangles, Pasley (Rodney), Pasley (George), Puckle, Sherwood, Thomas, Travers.

A Dugong was caught near Ceylon (close to Mount Lavinia, Colombo), in April, of a peculiar species, so nearly resembling a mermaid, that Dr. Macvicar, who examined it says: "There can be no doubt that a dugong, such as that caught here, if viewed in front, at the nursing season, when she rises erect in the water to breathe and look about her, would look strangely like a huge young woman with some unearthly kind of a face. The face is, in fact, an oval disk, studded with short bristles, without nose, small mouth, with hard lips, and large double chin, not unlike those toy nut-crackers one sometimes sees made like old men. And altogether, if such a lady as the one caught here were to present herself at sea to a boat's crew when they were resting on their oars, especially if she had a baby in her embrace, for which her arms or rather stumps are obviously adapted, and which she would require to do in order to give her little one breath, I think we might have the fact of mermaids asserted in the nineteenth century for the first time, if it had not been done before."

RESPECT OF THE MALAYS FOR ALLIGATORS. - In every branch of the Tampat Gaddang are alligators, which not unfrequently make prey of the inhabitants when bathing; yet, such is the extraordinary mixture of Malay fear and reverence towards the "father of the rivers,"—extended in like manner to the tiger, as "father of the woods,"—that they will destroy neither but in accordance with their custom of "life for life." Thus, recently, a young woman at Ayerbungy was carried off when bathing, when the whole settlement sallied out with clubs and spears, thrashed the river and its banks up and down, shouting and bellowing, mid the clang of gongs and yells of women and children, till at length they pounced upon a wretch some fifteen feet long, pounded, speared, and slashed him to atoms, and, revenge thus satisfied, left off further pursuit, to be renewed only on occasion of a similar occurrence, no greater slaughter being admitted by their rooted fear of and reverence for alligators. - Madras

The late Sir T. F. Buxton, in a letter, dated 1st May, 1844, to the Bishop of Calcutta, who had written to him " The Great Arbiter is prospering our arms, and thus extending our influence," and that "nothing remains but to settle the Punjab," says (Memoirs, p. 580), "I am far more of a quaker than you are as to these Indian wars; I know every one of them may be called defensive; but the principles and root of all are aggression and conquest."

BOOKS.

China and the Chinese; their Religion, Character, Customs, and Manufactures; the Evils orising from the Opium Trade; with a Glance at our Religious, Moral, Political, and Commercial Intercourse with the Country. Two vols. By Henry Charles Sirr, M.A. Off.

A very large circle of subjects is comprised in these two volumes, and the author has collected a mass of materials which entitle him to the praise of diligence and industry.

The work begins with a description of what we may term "Maritime China," commencing with the British possession of Hong-kong, "the most unlealthy spot in China," and carrying on the delineation through the other maritime and commercial localities,—Canton, the curious streets and shops of which city are very graphically described; Macao, Ningpo, Shanghae, and Chusan: this island, from its geographical position, its salubrity and productiveness, the author considers would be a "most eligible and advantageous" site for a British colony.

After some reflections upon the opium smuggling trade, our connection with which Mr. Sirr thinks (and we concur with him) a disgrace to us, and after showing the impolicy which has characterized our diplomatic transactions and relations with the Chinese authorities,—he enters upon a description of the people, their manners, customs, and social habits; their agriculture, manufactures, and industrial arts. A short sketch of the geography of China, and a still shorter summary of its history, follow. The second volume contains an account of the arts and sciences of this remarkable people; their printing, music, medicine, literature, &c.; an account of their religion and of Christianity in China; the history of our commercial intercourse with the empire; its government, revenue, population, &c.

This enumeration of the principal topics of the work will show the extent of the field it embraces. The topics are, in our opinion, disproportionately treated. Whilst the history of China, during nearly fifty centuries, is despatched in twenty pages, the account of the opium squabble is spread over upwards of fifty, tedious edicts and public documents being printed at length. Indeed, we are constrained to say that the second volume discovers unmistakable evidence of what is termed "book making."

The descriptions of objects and localities have all the accuracy of draughts from originals. Mr. Sirr's portrait of a real Chinese beauty, one who enslaved the hearts of all beholders, and was considered "the most beautiful of her sex," though doubtless drawn with a correct pencil, is not very flattering to the sitter: "feet deformed and compressed into a shapeless mass, three inches long: a fleshless figure, without the undulations we consider essential to female beauty; a dingy yellow complexion, over-plastered with white cosmetic, high cheek-bones, small piggish-looking eyes, with pencilled eye-brows meeting over the nose, low brow, oblong ears, coarse black hair, anointed with stinking pork fat until it stood on end, then drawn up from the face to the top of the head, where it is dressed in a high knot, the size of a small cabbage."

The details of Chinese cookery, viands, and banquets are curious and amusing, and the feats of a Chinese juggler (vol. i. p. 181) are positively astonishing.

We cannot pass over the statements made by Mr. Sirr respecting the conduct of Protestant missionaries in China. If these statements should be, as we can scarcely suppose them, incorrect, they ought to be contradicted; if they are true, they make a serious appeal to those who have the superintendence of missions to China in this country.

to China in this country.

"When in China, we were grieved to our heart's core to see the servants of the Romish Church indefatigably and zealously working, making converts of the Chinese, regarding neither difficulties nor discouragement, whilst too many Protestant missionaries occupy their time in secular pursuits, trading and trafficking. Periodical statements are made of missionary labours, in which are described the numbers of Chinese who have been converted by the Protestant missionaries; but wherever personal observation can be made, we fear these accounts will be found to be incorrect and exaggerated." Vol. ii. p. 215. We found, and believe to be too true, the opinion expressed by a celebrated author (in the time of Lord Amherst's embassy) in the following words: 'The conversion of a people so slenderly attached to the predominant religion would not be attended with difficulty if truth were on the tongues of those who undertook it.' He might also have added, if their life and conduct correspond with that truth. Alas! the lives of many missionaries whom we have seen in China (and elsewhere) are totally foreign and at variance with their sacred calling, much of their time being passed in attending auctions, buying at one price and transferring their purchase to a native at an advanced rate, although they receive a handsome allowance, more than sufficient for their support." "The conduct of many missionaries is most unbecoming, whether considered in a Christian or social view, and to prove the impression produced on the minds of the Chinese heathens, by the lives of the missionaries being at variance with their preaching, the common expressions made use of in reference to them are 'lie-preaching devils;' 'story-telling, red-bristled, foreign devils.' This cannot be wondered at, as we were informed by one of our servants that a missionary in Hongkong retailed opium, and from our personal knowledge of the man's character we firmly believe the statement; yet this man has been handsomely paid to devote his time to the religious instruction of the Chinese, whom he was represented to be converting; instead of which, if our servant spoke truth, he was pandering to their vices, the destruction of their immortal souls, and causing the decay of their bodies." P. 217.

THE NEWZEALANDERS, unlike most other savage tribes, show the greatest readiness to adopt European customs. Mr. Power mentions instances of old men applying themselves diligently to learn reading and writing. They readily adopt, too, the implements of husbandry employed by the settlers, and many of them keep accounts at the savings' banks. At Waikanahi, an enterprising native has set up a house of entertainment, where there is a table d'hôte for the accommodation of his countrymen, who are judiciously employed by the governor in constructing roads in the neighbourhood. Mine host very wisely chose Saturday, after the week's work was paid for, as the day for holding his ordinary. He fixed his tariff at the moderate charge of a shilling a-head, and his table, which displayed an abundant supply of substantial fare, was well attended from the first. He speedily discovered, however, that the speculation promised to be a bad It was found that his guests used to make point of eating nothing for a whole day before the weekly feast, and then they would clear the board in a twinkling, and ask for more. accordingly restricted the allowance of each man to two pounds of pork, as many of potatoes, and a pint of coffee, with sugar, to which spare diet the guests were finally compelled to accommodate themselves. Among other signs of progress, Mr. Power likewise mentions that a prospectus has been issued of a newspaper, to be published in the Maori language, to contain all the news, scandal, and gossip of the colony, and which he appears to think would meet with much success,—Col. Mag.

There is a good story told of Moolraj. His followers looted a quantity of hermetically-scaled provisions, in tiu cases, which were mistaken for canister-shot, and nothing was fired from his guns for days, but fresh lobsters, pickled salmon, potted shrimps, and other delicacies, supplying the British camp with a shower of the freshest English provisions.—Leaves, &c. of a Subaltern.

A NEW MAP OF THE PUNJAB

AND SIKH TERRITORIES.

Drawn by JOHN WALKER. On One Sheet, price 5s., or in a Case, 6s.

44 A new Map of these districts has just been published by Messrs. ALLEN and Co., of Leadenhall Street, upon which apparently great care has been bestowed. The Map is very clearly printed, and the scenes of the military operations, to which so much interest is at present attached, are laid down with such persplicitly, that it would be easy to follow almost every march of the army. The Map is said to have been compiled from the most authentic sources of information."—Times, March 1, 1849.

"A new Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, just completed by Messra.

ALLEN, and compiled from the most authentic sources of information, with great care, contains all the places mentioned in the accounts of the military operations. At the present moment, it is a most valuable publication, and we heartily recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

"Messra. Allen have just issued a finely-engraved Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, with due attention to the spots where our gallant troops have so valiantly fought. Who, at the present moment, would not pore over such a Map,—with interest point out where the brave Cureton fell, or where Edwardes earned the wreath that now adorns his youthful brow? Or, if we take a more painful glance, how many mothers, sisters, friends, will not, with mourned eyes, wander in their imagination along the banks of the Chenab, and mark the spot upon the Map where a son, a brother, or a friend lies buried in an honourable grave on the bloody field of Chillianwallah? And such a Map was wanting, and Messrs. ALLEN have at once provided one with great care and skill. This Map folds up in a neat cover, and can be carried in the pocket."—Morning Chronicle, March 6, 1849.

"Messrs. Allen's Map is mounted on cloth, and compactly folded in a book-cover. The whole of the places on the banks of the Five Rivers are carefully and accurately indicated. The progress of the campaigns can be traced without the slightest difficulty."—United Service Gazette, March 10, 1849.

"This new Map of the Punjab, which has just been completed, is compiled from the latest and most authentic sources of information, and is unquestionably the fullest and most perfect Map of that, at the present period, most interesting district of India hitherto published. It has evidently been executed with great care, and contains all the places named in the accounts of the recent military operations clearly laid down."—Herald, March 14, 1849.

** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a smail, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustanisals by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

In one of the Calcutta papers the present state of India is described in a very few lines, but those made up of very stately words. "We introduce to our readers," says the Harkaru, "the annals of an almost eventless fortnight. Peace broods over the land from Cashmere to Cape Comorin, from Peshawur to Pooree; and our congratulations on this happy state of affairs must be blended with regrets for the consequent dulness and monotony of the times." We suppose our magniloquent brother would not desire a supply of wars and outrages, for the sake of giving to his columns interest, and providing his readers with excitement. If he do, there is, notwithstanding the apparently unruffled state of the surface, some probability (if rumour may be credited) that a little tailpiece to the late operations in the north-west may gently agitate the political and military world of India, give employment to those who ply the quill, whether there or at home, and slake the feverish thirst for news which the placidity of the present calm appears to render almost unbearable. Gholab Singh, a chief whose movements can rarely be calculated upon, and whose intentions have perhaps never been entirely fathomed by any one but himself, is reported to be likely to give trouble. It is said that the Governor-General has indisputable proofs that Gholab was engaged in the late rebellion, and in consequence has made a demand for the surrender of his artillery, amounting, according to current estimate, to 150 pieces of ordnance. If the Governor-General have that unquestionable evidence of Gholab Singh's treachery which he is alleged to possess, it must excite surprise that his lordship should be satisfied with demanding his guns only, when the proper penalty would be the forfeiture of his kingdom, which he owes to that Government which it is now said he sought to destroy; but clemency and magnanimity are so much in fashion, that such a course scarcely calls for wonder. As, however, the whole affair is at present merely matter of rumour, it would be useless to discuss it. All that is necessary is to put the reader in possession of the supplementary rumours which attend on the chief one. It is stated that Gholab Singh met the demand of the British Government with the politeness of a highwayman of the last century; protested that he was quite ready to comply with the demand, but that his people would not submit to it,—that his soldiers would not suffer the removal of the guns, and that he was unable to enforce obedience. The reason assigned for non-compliance, it is urged, furnishes sufficient ground for enforcing the demand by the last appeal, inasmuch, as if Gholab Singh cannot control his army and subjects, it is quite necessary that some other power should perform the duty for him. Consequently (if the rumours be to this extent true) the result must be the movement of a force sufficient to bring Gholab Singh to reason, or the semblance of it; and in default, to add one more to the list of pensioners of the British Government. It is proper to add that the political writers of India differ as to their appreciation of the value of these reports. By some they are believed, by others distrusted. There were, however, certain undoubted indications which seemed to speak unfavourably for peace. Large bodies of Sikhs were flocking to Cashmir, for what object was not known; but they would scarcely direct their course thither without some object, nor without some expectation of a decent welcome; and it is, to say the least, a remarkable fact that not a single instance has occurred of any of the Sikh soldiery enlisting in the regiments which the British Government is forming in the Punjab. Further, a brigade order made known at Peshawur on the 11th June directs the formation of a considerable body of troops into a moveable column, to be ready to march at a moment's notice. The troops named are the following: - Major Fordyce's and Major Blood's troops of horse artillery, Captain Turnbull's battery, 1st regiment light cavalry, Scinde irregular horse, H.M.'s 60th rifles, H.M.'s 61st, 31st, and 70th regts. B. N. I., 3rd and 19th Bombay native infantry.

The communication forwarding this order concludes thus,—"The report is, that we are off to Cashmir."

But whatever these rumours or these appearances may be worth, it is certain that Lahore will soon be in a state of excitement. Sir Charles Napier arrived at Simla on the 16th June, and after a brief sojourn at that place was to proceed to the capital of the Punjab. If war be determined on, the Commander-in-Chief will be on the spot to prosecute it with his characteristic vigour; if peace be destined to continue, the superabundant energy of the gallant general must find vent (for to keep it down is out of the question) in temperance lectures and General Orders. A testimonial to Sir Charles's predecessor, Lord Gough, is spoken of, but some doubt is expressed whether the rules of the service will allow of its presentation. Looking at what was done in the case of Lord Ellenborough, it would be difficult to say what the rules of the service will not allow.

The trial of Moolraj was still proceeding. The evidence for the prosecution had closed with that of Mr. John Lawrence. The result will be looked for with some interest.

The atrocities prevailing among the Hill tribes of Orissa seem not yet suppressed nor materially abated. The Chokro Bissye has been committing renewed outrages, and causing fresh bloodshed in Goomsur. It is reported that Colonel Campbell has resigned the agency, and is to be succeeded by Major M'Leod, of the 31st Madras Native Infantry.

Among the native states, almost the only one calling for any notice is Hyderabad. The debt due from the Nizam to the British Government amounts to no less a sum than 54 lakhs of rupees, and the means of its liquidation are still discussed. The proposal to clear the account by instalments, extending over a long series of years, and subject, of course, to all the accidents and delays which never fail to embarrass Indian settlements of accounts, is not a very attractive offer. So thinks the Governor-General, who demurs to the proffered terms, and demands immediate payment in full, or a cession of territory to the value of the debt. The cession of territory is gall and wormwood to an Oriental potentate, while money is not procurable unless private hoards be invaded. The negotiation, therefore, does not seem to be in the most promising state.

The distressing conclusion of the brilliant affair of Captain Howarth with a party of Rohillas, in the death of that gallant officer from apoplexy, caused by the extreme heat, is attributed in some of the papers (it is to be hoped without foundation) to the neglect of the surgeon, who, it is alleged, remained in his quarters instead of proceeding to the field, as his duty required.

Of matters non-political the affairs of the Benares Bank furnish the most startling information. Our readers were indulged with a glance into this subject in our last publi-Since the despatch of the intelligence then chronicled, a general meeting of the shareholders has been held, at which disclosures were made which might have been considered extraordinary in other times, but which in ours are quite matters of course. Joint-stock banking in India and railway-making in England appear to be conducted on much the same principles. The meeting was very stormy. Europeans and natives vied with each other in assailing the management of the bank, and the Hindustani and English languages contended for pre-eminent richness in terms of denunciation and vengeance. The Chairman expressed his disapprobation of the tenor of a particular resolution put into his hands (having been regularly moved and seconded), not merely by words, but more significantly, and in a way which Hindoos and Englishmen could alike understand, by tearing it to pieces before the astonished meeting, and throwing the fragments on the ground. On this a proprietor declared that the meeting owed it to its outraged dignity that the pieces should be gathered up from the ignoble position to which they had been precipitated, put together, and a clean copy of the illtreated resolution written therefrom, and given to the Chairman, for the purpose of being put to the meeting. At this interesting point murmurs both loud and deep against the conduct of the Chairman seemed to indicate the approach of a crisis, and accordingly it came. After a brief period of hints and hesitation, the Chairman quitted his post, and the meeting also giving utterance as he departed to some uncourtly remarks, which led to the passing of an additional resolution, condemnatory of his conduct. Nothing, according to present information, could be much worse than the management of this unfortunate bank. Its directors cancelled stock at par, while it was purchasable, and, in some instances, purchased by the bank itself, at 25 and 30 per cent. discount; and according to the statement of a committee published by the Delhi Gazette, above 91 lakhs of rupees were lent chiefly to directors, on the security of 3,827 of the bank's own shares. Surely it is time that a new leaf in the chapter of Indian banking should be turned over.

Of minor matters—characterized at home as gossip, in India described by a shorter word—none of the Presidencies afford much. At Bombay the editor and proprietor of the Gentleman's Gazette have successfully defended an action brought against them for libel by a member of the native community, who considered himself pointed out to public notice under the term of "a fat Hindoo." It was held, however, that as Bombay could boast more fat Hindoos than one, the peculiar applicability of the phrase could not be maintained. Sir Thomas Monro was greatly struck by the obesity of some natives with whom he was officially brought into personal communication; and Bombay appears to have cause to rejoice in its well-fed citizens, not less than Madras, in its fat and fleshy cultivators.

The intelligence from China reports the weather at Victoria to be sultry, damp, and by no means wholesome. Six pirates were executed on the 7th of June, and on the previous evening an act of piracy was committed in sight of the gallows. These outrages must be put down with a strong hand. An unpleasant affair has taken place at Macao. A Mr. Summers, an Englishman, having met a procession of the host in a narrow street, declined, from conscientious motives, to offer the usual mark of reverence. He was thereupon taken into custody and ultimately committed to the common gaol, where he might have remained for a period not easily to be guessed, but for the spirited conduct of Captain Keppel. That officer having applied to the Governor, first personally and subsequently by letter, for the discharge of Mr. Summers, but without effect, proceeded to set the prisoner at liberty in the summary way approved and practised by the Blakes of the olden time, and the Nelsons of our own. He landed a party of 115 men, who forthwith proceeded in the direction of the gaol. The guard, on seeing them approach, levelled their muskets, and the English fired, it is said, with fatal effect. The keys were now produced, and the prisoner triamphantly liberated. The whole affair did not occupy above an hour.

TRIAL OF MOOLRAJ.

The constitution of the tribunal; the charges; the formalities of the proceeding, &c., were given in the last Mail.

First day, May 31.
Sadik Mahommed examined.—Was commander of horse at Mooltan. When it was reported that Messrs. Agnew and Anderson were coming to arrange the affairs of Mooltan, he wanted new sunnuds of his jagheer, and wished to write to the Resident of Lahore to secure it to him, and went to speak to Moolraj about it. He asked him whether it was true that the Sahebs were coming, and why he (Moolraj) wished to resign. Moolraj said he had been harshly treated by the Sahebs, and, if he had 500 men ready to die with him, he would hold out against them. When the Goorkha regiment (with Messrs. Agnew and Anderson) were two kos from Mooltan, the soldiers were visited by their relations in that city. Ram Singh (the Sikh commander), on his arrival, was at the Eedgah, and the Goorkhas and cavalry were placed between it and the fort. Moolraj called together the chiefs of the army, and said, "Go with me to meet the gentlemen." Messrs. Agnew and Anderson were dressing when Moolraj arrived at the Eedgah, and he waited half an hour. When he was conducted to them, they were seated. Moolraj was placed between them; Khan Singh was on the left. Moolraj said, "My rulers do me a great kindness in taking off my hands so great a charge as this army and this fort are to me." Mr. Agnew commended his remarks, and this fort are to me." Mr. Agnew commended his remarks, and added that, next day, he would take possession of the fort. This interview lasted half an hour, and at the close the gentlemen advanced to the edge of the carpet. Moolraj retired to a new garden near the town. After the gentlemen were wounded, Moolraj sent for the witness to the Am Khas, which was closed, and the Hindus and Musulmans of the Mooltan army were collected there. The witness and his party said, "What have you done?" Mookraj replied, "They have wounded Ram Rung; they would have wounded me too. I remained away against my wish; God's design in doing this I do not know." Some one said to him, he was not yet responsible, but he would be if he did not give himself up to the Sahebs. Moolraj replied, "My vakeel has gone to them to clear me." After sitting in the garden three hours, a person told the witness that the Sikhs and Mahomedans were swearing on the Grunt'h and the Koran. Witness went to Moolraj, who asked him to swear too.

witness told him there would be war with the Sahebs, and he would be beaten, having no arms and no supplies. plied, "God has a design in what has happened. hot weather, and the Europeans cannot move before the cold weather; I shall then have collected an army, and I hope there will be a rising in the Punjab." The witness, though pressed, refused to swear. Moolraj then wrote to all the dependents of the Mooltan government, requesting them to take up arms in his cause, and sent his family and property into the fort. The troops wished to fight. When the purwannals from Mr. Agnew arrived, Mooiraj complained of the manner in which he had been treated by the Sahebs, and the injustice of separating him from his army. He gave, in witness's presence, the order to assault. Six or eight guns opened from the Am Khas and four from the fort upon the Eedgah. When Moolrej gave the order, he said, "Don't delay, as the army will go over to the other side; go and fight, I will sit here." This was at noon. Moolraj did not go to the Rejghat to bring in Messrs. Agnew and Anderson, when they were coming. When he went first to meet them, he greeted Khan Singh as Punjabis usually greet one another. When he went first to meet them, he The army was still under the control of Moolraj, but the witness heard some of the men say they would fight with or without his orders. After the death of the two gentlemen, Moolraj asked witness his advice; he advised him to surrender; but the dewan replied, he had no faith in the Sahebs, and must fight now; adding, "Dost Mahomed gave himself up, and was treated badly." At a second interview, Moolraj gave orders to h's cavalry officers to go to Leia to fight Lieut. Edwardes. When Mr. Agnew came to Mooltan, the army of Moolraj was about 1,500.

Second day, June 1.

Kootub Shah, Mr. Agnew's moonshee, examined.—" On the day the Sahebs arrived at Serai, I arrived at Toolumbah with their horses and goods. The kardar refused to give grass, wood, &c. I told the Sahebs. Agnew said it did not matter; if I could not find wood, &c., I must put up without it. The same morning a vakeel arrived from Moolraj. From Serai, Messrs. Agnew and Anderson went to Ram Chotra, on the banks of the river. When I arrived at Halikwala, the people told me that Mooltan was in a state of insurrection, and appeared surprised I should go there. I wrote to the Sahebs and to Khan Singh what the people said. Agnew answered, that such reports were not true; that he was a friend to the dewan, and that no insurrection would take place. The two Sahebs arrived at Raj-ghat on the 17th April. I said to Agnew, that when Anderson came before from Bhawulpore to Mooltan, Moolraj came two kos to meet him, fired a salute from the fort, and did him great honour; why does he not do so to you? Saheb replied, 'He has already sent a vakeel to me, who has appointed the Huzooree Bagh for Mr. Anderson and me to live in, and the Eedgah for Khan Singh.' I then said, 'Why do you not go to the Huzooree Bagh? Perhaps it is true what the people of Halikwala told me, that Mooltan is in a state of insurrection. You should inquire if such is the case or not.' The following morning a vakeel came from the dewan, who accompanied the Sahebs to the Eedgah, where Khan Singh's tents were pitched. From thence they all went to the Huzooree Bagh, about 200 paces from the Eedgah. When they returned to the Eedgah, the Sahebs said, 'Such a place is not fit to live in; it is too small.' Khan Singh said, 'If you wish, then, you may live in my tents.' The Sahebs then pitched their tents in the Eedgah. said that Moolraj was on his way to pay a visit to the Sahebs. Agnew went outside, and said, 'It is very hot now; the dewan will not come until evening.' Khan Singh said, 'If he comes now, you must receive him, after the trouble he has had in coming. He will not probably remain more than half an hour.' Moolraj soon after arrived. Nothing of importance transpired during this first interview. Moolraj remarked, 'I am glad you take the charge of this country and fort off my hands. It is a great charge to me.' Khan Singh was at this time seated behind Moolraj, who took no notice of him, although Agnew told him two or three times of it. In the evening, Moolraj came again, and told the Sahebs that the city, and army, and country, were at their disposal. Khan Singh was again placed behind Moolraj, and notwithstanding Agnew took the chair of Khan Singh and placed it beside that of Moolraj, no notice was taken of him. Agnew said to Moolraj, 'The British Government unwillingly deprive you of your authority, but you should not be angry for that; you will still be respected, and have authority.' Besides these words, he gave him much consolation. The Saheb then demanded from Moolraj his papers for the ten previous years. The dewan was very unwilling to give them, and said, 'My papers have been caten by the ants, or otherwise destroyed; but I can show you the receipts (for all money expended) which I have received from Lahore, and others.' Agnew replied, 'In instances such as the present, it is customary for papers to be delivered up.' After much altercation, Moolraj promised to deliver into the hands of the Sahebs his papers for six years. On going away, Moolraj said, 'In the morning I shall visit you, and show you the army and the fort, previous to surrendering them to you; but I have done nothing to deserve such harsh treatment from you. He appeared to be in great grief, and his face had an angry expression on going away. When the Sahebs returned into the tent, I said to Agnew, 'Before you insist on having the papers, you should first make arrangements for se-curing possession of the fort, as you can then dictate your own terms; otherwise, Moolraj will certainly endeavour to evade his Saheb said, 'It matters not; Moolraj is my friend.' Khan Singh asked what number of troops should accompany the Sahebs to the fort on the following morning. The Sahebs replied, that a strong escort was not necessary, but that a few men would suffice. Khan Singh having said that 200 men would not be too many, as the fort was large, Agnew replied, 'If you are afraid, do not go; I will go alone.' During the night, Khan Singh got in readiness two companies of infantry, about sixteen sowars, and three officers. In the morning, the Sahebs and Khan Singh waited for some time, in expectation of Moolraj's arrival. As he did not come, they proceeded on elephants to visit the camp, where they were joined by the dewan, who, at their approach, dismounted from his horse, and also mounted an elephant. In this manner all proceeded towards the Arrived at the gate, they dismounted and entered on They bad not arrived twenty paces within the walls, when the gates were shut, and admission denied to the troops without. Agnew requested Moolraj to give orders for the admission of the troops, which Moolraj did; the soldiers then entered the fort, and, by direction of the Sahebs, were stationed at various Moolraj conducted the Sahebs all over the fort, and showed them, amongst other places, a bomb-proof building, erected by Sawun Mull. Saheb remarked, it would easily be destroyed. Moolraj also showed his dwelling-house. Some artillery-men were observed shedding tears. Agnew gave them con-solation, and told them they should always find employment. When the Saheb's troops arrived at the gate of the fort, and were denied admission, I did not hear the townspeople say anything, but some of my people went to the city and told me that they were anxious to fight. Moolraj, the two Sahebs, and Khan Singh, left the fort by the middle gate. When I joined them, I observed Moolraj galloping towards the Am Khas, and I beheld Agnew wounded in three places in the left arm; wounds given by Ameer Chund. Saleb parried and returned the blows with a stick (or whip). He was surrounded by men with naked swords. I went with Elahee Buksh near the Saheb. Elahee Buksh struck at Ameer Chund with his tulwar, which, being a bad one, did not cut him. Ameer Chund, however, fell into the ditch. Khan Singh gave the Saheb his hat, which had fallen or had been knocked off, and Ram Rung bound his arm with his handkerchief. We all went towards the Eedgab, mounted on elephants, followed by a great crowd. Two or three of Moolraj's men fired upon us from the Am Khas, but without effect. On arriving at the tents, we found that Anderson had also been wounded (in seven places), as well as his horse. The two Sahebs were removed to the mosque in the Eedgah, from whence they despatched three letters, one to Major Edwardes, one to Lahore, and one to Bhawulpore. I and Kurm Elahee Khan were sent to Moolraj to demand an explanation of what had occurred. Near him a crowd was collected, and fire-arms were discharged at me as I approached. In vain I told them I was a vakeel: they declared they would fire on all who approached. One of Ram Rung's men told me that Ram Rung had been wounded by Moolraj's people, because he was favourable to the Sahebs, and had remonstrated with the dewan on his conduct. I returned to the Sahebs and related what had taken place; they told me not to return. At this time, Bhaie Singh and the two companies under his command arrived at the Eedgah, and said they had been driven out of the fort by Moolraj's troops. A messenger from Moolraj arrived at the same time, with a letter, in which Moolraj stated that all that had taken place was against his wishes and orders, but that a few bad and disaffected men had done it. Saheb wrote in reply, that he never thought the dewan was the author of the disturbance, and requested him to give up the guilty parties for punishment. During the day, the troops were brought into the Eedgah, and a ditch was made round it. On the 20th April the fort opened fire on the Eedgah. The first ball entered the tent of Khan Singh, and seventeen guns were soon playing upon us; we had but four guns. Ghoolam Hussain was sent as messenger to Moolraj to inquire the reason of the firing. The Sahebs gave Rs. 1,000 to their troops, and promised to compensate them for all they had lost or should lose whilst on service.

They said they would fight, but refused the money, and appeared disaffected. In the afternoon, Moolraj's army advanced upon the Eedgah. Saheb gave the order to open fire. Before Moolraj's troops liad arrived at the Eedgah, all the Saheb's suwars, and most of the infantry, had already gone over to the enemy. The Sahebs sent flags of truce to Moolraj. Khan Singh went outside, and was quickly surrounded by the enemy, who rushed into the enclosure, and it was then that the two Sahebs were murdered. When I returned to my tent I found everything as I had left it; I had been robbed of nothing. Khan Singh and Kurm Elahee were confined in the camp. the morning I was taken to the tent in which Kurm Elahes was confined, and afterwards conducted before Moolraj, who asked me what I desired to do? I replied, I wished to remain where I was. He gave me purwannahs to enable me to bring my family to where I was. Moolraj issued and circulated a proclamation, calling on the Lahore force to join him. To this proclamation I attached my seal, as did Khan Singh and Kurm Elahee their signatures. Three days afterwards, I wrote to the Resident Saheb the evidence I now give to you."

Third day, June 2. Examination of Kootub Shah continued .- "When Ameer Chund wounded Mr. Agnew, neither Moolraj nor any of his officers gave orders for his apprehension. Before the murder, Moolraj said the Lahore army joined his. The whole of the Mooltan army was obedient to Moolraj on the 18th and 19th of April. When the troops of Moolraj entered the Eedgah, Khan Singh and myself were the only persons then present with the Sahebs. Khan Singh said to Moolraj's soldiers, 'I am the guilty party; take me before Moolraj, and do you remain here as guards over the Sahebs, who are wounded.' Khan Singh was as guards over the Sahebs, who are wounded.' Khan Singh was seized, and then the Sahebs were murdered. I did nothing, having no authority, and being without servants."

(The cross-examination, which was long, brought out nothing:

Fourth day, June 4.
Ussud Allee, moonshee, examined.—" I was in the service of Agnew Saheb. On the 17th April, the two Sahebs, Khan-Singh, and I arrived at Rajghat. Our goods and servants were landed and sent towards Mooltan; but Anderson and Agnew, Khan Singh and I, remained on the bank of the river. Onthe morning of the 18th, I went on foot towards the Huzooree Bagh; the two Sahebs followed me about 100 paces on this side of the Loharree gate. I stopped at a shop, to purchase a pair of shoes; the shoemaker asked me who I was, and with whom I came. I replied I was a moonshee in the service of the Sahebs, who had just arrived. He then asked if the Sahebs had with them their whole army, or if more troops would follow. I told him that a still greater force was coming. The shoemaker observed to a man who was seated near him, 'that is unfortunate.' From this man's shop I went to the Huzooree Bagh; the Sahebs were then at the Eedgah; I did not go near them then, as I had obtained permission to arrange my own affairs. Shortly afterwards, the Sahebs came to the Huzooree Bagh. Having seen it, they said that both it and the Eedgah were too small to live in, and that they wished another spot on which to pitch their tents. They then returned to the Eedgah. In the evening, Peer Buksh (barber) came to shave me. Whilst he was doing so, he related to me all the news of Mooltan, and what the people thought of the Saheb's arrival. I paid little attention to what he said, and consequently do not remember much of his relation. One thing, however, I remember he told me, that Moolraj had, during the night, held a council. On the morning of the 19th, I sent Nassim Khan to the Sahebs. shortly after followed to pay my respects. When I arrived at the Eedgah, the two Sahebs were at the north side of it, mounted, and proceeding towards Mooltan. I then went near, and repeated what Peer Buksh had told me of Moolraj, &c. Agnew became angry, and ordered me to return to my tent. The Sahebs then went on to the fort, and I returned to the Huzooree Bagh. About two hours (I think) had passed when Anderson's syce came running towards me, and said, 'they are beating my master.' We all then went to the Eedgah, and there learnt that Agnew had received three sword-cuts and Anderson five. At noon, a letter arrived from Moolraj, in which was written: 'I have surrendered all into your hands, but the chief men of the city and the army are dissatisfied with me for having done so.' In the answer to this letter, Agnew wrote, 'the disaffection of the townspeople or others is of no importance whilst you remain firm, and true to us.' On the 20th, the fort opened fire on the Eedgah, and on that day the Sahebs were Mooltan. From all parts of the country people came to join Moolraj." murdered. After this I remained fifteen or sixteen days in

Moonshee Wuzeer Allah Khan examined .- " On the 5th of April, Agnew Saheb left Lahore for Mooltan, and arrived at Toolumbah (about forty kos from Mooltan) on the 13th. Shortly after his arrival there, a messenger arrived from Mool-Saheb detained the messenger until the following day, when he sent him back to Mooltan with a letter to the dewan in which it was written, that 'it is needless that you should come so far to meet me. When I approach Mooltan, then will be the most proper time to receive me according to custom.' On the 17th, the Sahebs arrived at Rajghat. Moolraj did not go there to meet them. In my heart, I thought, that he is an enemy of the Sahebs. Our goods and servants were sent in the afternoon to the Eedgah. On the 18th, in the morning, I went towards Mooltan. On the Chabootra at the Loharie gate some Mussulmans were seated; I sat down beside them to smoke a hookah. They questioned me respecting the Sahebs, and asked me what was the strength of the army which accompanied them? I told them, that was no business of theirs. They then said, 'We have heard that Moolraj assembled last evening all his sirdurs, and the chief men of the city.' I thought to myself, that this boded no good to the Sahebs, and that Moolraj would perhaps refuse to give up the city and army to them, and wish to fight them. When I returned to the Eedgah, Agnew was engaged in writing two roobkarees. In one, he demanded that a list should be sent to him of the names of all those persons to whom permits had been granted, authorizing them to levy imposts in towns throughout the Mooltan territory. He also requested that a moonshee might be sent to him from Mooltan, and from whom he might learn the names of the chowkees at which taxes were levied, as well as the articles liable to be taxed. In this roobkaree, it was moreover stated, that it was the wish of the Lahore Government to abolish many (or all?) of the duties and imports formerly levied in the Mooltan district. In the second roobkaree, Moolraj was informed of the arrival of Sirdar Khan Singh, appointed by the Lahore Government to supplant him in the government of Mooltan; the dewan was accordingly requested to assemble, on the following day, the garrison of the fort within its walls, and the remainder of his army (at that moment available) in a maidan near the city, for the inspection of the Sahebs and of Khan Singh. Previous to inspection he was directed to separate the old levies and veteran troops from the newly-raised ones. Agnew sent the two roob-kares to Khan Singh for perusal, who replied that the contents of the first pleased him well. 'But,' he added, 'I do not think (with regard to the second roobkaree) it politic to enter the fort of Mooltan to-morrow; Moolraj is but a boy, mischief-making, and deceitful; he has paid to you none of the honours or compliments customary to such occasions as the present, and one knows not what may happen.' I conveyed this message to Agnew, who sent for Sheik Mustapha, Khan Singh's moonshee, and directed him to tell the Sirdar, that he had nothing to fear in going to the fort, and that he should not be so unwilling to go. Khan Singh, on receiving this message, said, 'Well, I will go; but it would be more proper if Moolraj's army left the fort before I entered it.' The roobkarees were then despatched to Moolraj by some of his own men, who were then in the Saheb's camp, and who had come from Mooltan with sweetmeats, &c. The roobkaree relating to the position of the troops on the morrow had retained, I observed, its original form, notwithstanding the objections raised by Khan Singh. I know not whether this was by order of the Saheb, or through the carelessness of a moonshee. I then related to Agnew the conversation I had had with the Musulmans on the Chabootra, to which he seemed to attach no importance. Soon after this, Saheb put into my hands twenty-five missuls, and directed me to bring before him all those persons whose names were written therein. He gave me, moreover, thirteen other papers, containing inventories of the ammunition, provisions, stores, &c. in the various forts throughout the district under the authority of Moolraj, and ordered me to bring them with him to the fort on the following day. Tuesday. Moolraj visited Messrs. Agnew and Anderson, attended by 200 suwars. The Sahebs received him in the tent of Khan Singh, where they happened to be on his arrival. I do not know all that transpired in this interview, as I did not arrive. there till towards its conclusion. Standing close to the tent, I heard the voice of Moolraj saying, 'How is it possible for me to produce papers for ten years? I have been dewan but two years.' Agnew Saheb said, 'In asking for your papers, I only wish to ascertain from them the state of the country, and what has been the custom for the last ten years. I looked through an opening in the jhanks of the tent, and saw Moolraj seated; bepeople said to Agnew, 'The papers you demand I shall deliver up to you;' this person then added, to Moolraj, 'Why do you not repeat the promise I have made?' Moolraj, however, remained silent. On going away he said, 'To-morrow I shall send you a box (or boxes) of papers.' On the morning of the 18th, Moolraj did not come inside the Eedgah, and throughout the night the Lahore force and all on our side en-At daybreak on the morning of the 19th, the camped outside camped outside. At daybreak on the morning of the 19th, the two Sahebs and Khan Singh, accompanied by two companies of the Ghoorka regt. commanded by Kooldeep Singh, with Goolab Singh, and others, left the Eedgah, and proceeded towards the fort. I soon afterwards followed them. Whilst the Sahebs were in the fort, I remained at the Shurkee gate. I observed that the troops of Moolraj were in fighting order, and that one company of Ghoorkas was inside the fort, the other without the walls. From that place I went to Barra Durree; I then saw Moolraj walking hand in-hand with Agnew. On two sides the Mooltan army was drawn up in review order, and was inspected by Agnew, who said, 'Those officers and soldiers who have served under Maharajah Runjeet Singh shall be disbanded, but remain in their present employment and retain their present rank; the soldiers of Runjeet Singh are no longer in the service of Moolraj. From that date you are the servants of the Lahore Sirkar, under the command of Khan Singh.' gave orders for the disbanding of the new levies, and told them that, having received from Moolraj their pay up to that day, they were to lay down the arms they had received from the Lahore Sirkar, but might take with them all that were their own. At this time Moolraj said, 'I will now give up to you my keys.' The person in whose charge the keys were not being present, Saheb said to Kooldeep Singh, 'When they shall arrive, I give the keys into your charge; in the mean time go around the fort, and place beside each of Moolraj's sentries one of your men, but do not remove the sentries of Moolraj.' The Saheb then said, that the fort no longer belonged to him, that he was at liberty to remove all his property, but that he must leave behind all that belonged to the Sirkar. Moolraj was silent. The Sahebs then went towards the gate, but Eesr Singh, Kooldeep Singh, Goolab Singh, Rawannah Singh, and Jowahir Singh, remained behind in the fort. Moolraj, the two Sahebs, Khan Singh, and Rung Ram, on arriving near the gate, mounted their horses; they went through the gate in the following order:—On Agnew's they went through the gate in the following order:—On Agnew's right hand was Moolraj, on his left Anderson, to the left of the latter was Khan Singh. I overheard a conversation between Rawannah Singh and Jowahir Singh. One said, 'How foolish has been the conduct of Moolraj, in acting so as to bring down upon him the Sahebs, and his fort taken possession of by us, as if we had gained a victory!' The other replied, 'I saw Saheb take the hand of Moolraj; if any accident now happens to the Sahebs, Moolraj will surely be severely punished.' When the Sahebs arrived close to the drawhidge, a person, concealed Sahebs arrived close to the drawbridge, a person, concealed from view in a small door on the right hand, struck at and wounded Agnew with a spear; I saw Moolraj turn towards this man, make a sign to him, and then gallop away. Again this person wounded Saheb, the last time not severely, as the spear merely grazed his right side. Saheb repeatedly struck at this man with a switch he held in his hand. At this time his horse reared, and Saheb fell to the ground; he immediately got up and attacked the person who first wounded him (Ameer Chund). Ameer Chund, crossing over to where Saheb stood, inflicted a sword-cut on Saleb's left arm. All who were then near drew swords. Nassim Khan and Elahee Buksh ran to attack Ameer Chund. At this moment a blow aimed by Saheb at Ameer Chund fell on Nassim Khan, who said, 'Why do you strike your own servants?' Elahee Buksh having stabled Ameer Chund in the cheek, the latter fell into the fort ditch. A man was descending to despatch him, but was called back by Saheb. Khan Singh, with some of his clothing, bound up the wounds of Saheb; I, fearing for my life, fled. Anderson, when Agnew was wounded, galloped after Moolraj. Before he overtook him, I saw Moolraj make a sign to the suwars who followed him, five of whom detached themselves from the rest and struck at Saheb with their tulwars. Saheb turned his horse towards the Eedgah, and was pursued by these five suwars, who were joined by others from Moolraj's escort. Saheb's horse was, as well as himself, wounded. Agnew and Anderson were at this time distant from each other about 100 paces."

Examination of Wuzeer Allah, continued.—"Anderson was wounded and fell near the Dowlut gate; the suwars, on his fall, returned to Moolraj. When Anderson fell from his horse, I fled through fear to the Eedgah. The Sahebs arrived there soon after me, and the troops were then got under arms. Kadir Buksh was sent for by Agnew to sew up the wounds of Anderson. The news then arrived that the Saheb's people, Kootub Shah, and Kurm Elahee, who had proceeded towards the Am Khas, had been badly treated by Moolraj's people, and forced to return. Agnew directed Khan Singh to place sentries round the Eedgah, and to keep soldiers on the alert. Not before then were the wounds of Agnew sewn up. Saheb then wrote to Moolraj, and said, 'I know you are not the guilty party in this affair; seize those persons who have wounded Anderson and myself, and send them to me, and do not fail to come also yourself. People will then see and know that you were not a party to this affair, and that you are still my friend. If you will not come, then will I also entertain doubts of your friendship.' This letter was sent at 11 A.M., but at 3 P.M. no answer had been returned. At 4 P.M. Toolsee Ram, a servant of Moolraj, arrived from Mooltan, the bearer of a letter from the dewan, in which it was written, 'In my heart I wish to visit you, but my army (both Hindoo and Musulman) is averse to it, and would be greatly dissatisfied if I did so. Moreover, my brother, Ram Rung, has been wounded for having spoken in your favour; take care of yourself.' On reading this, Agnew said to Toolsee Ram, 'Go to Moolraj and persuade him of the propriety and necessity of paying me a visit after what has happened. If he will not come, then I shall be much displeased.' This was on the 19th. When Toolsee Ram had gone, the officers of the Lahore army came to Saheb, and said, 'We cannot fight with Moolraj; his army is so great, that he could surround us without approaching within gun-shot. On our side, we have not even food.' Kadir Singh added that he had seen the army of Moolraj preparing for the fight. At 4 P.M. orders were issued for the army to enter the Eedgah, and construct batteries for the guns. At midnight these works were completed, and the troops all within the Eedgah. During the whole night, there was much noise in Mooltan. Early on the following morning (20th), Saheb sent to the troops who had formerly served under Runjeet Singh, the purwannah of the Lahore Government, declaring them to be no longer in the service of Moolraj, but in that of Khan Singh. To this an answer was brought that they would adhere to Moolraj. About 10, the first gun was fired from the fort, and shortly afterwards fire was opened from the Am Khas also. Not until two hours after this did Saheb give orders to return the fire. Colonel Eesr Singh caused to be discharged the first gun, by which one of the fort guns was dismounted; the second shot killed a child. Six guns only were destroyed. When Saheb inquired why the firing had ceased, Goolab Singh replied, that 'many balls from the enemy's guns fall among us, we can no longer fight; why do you not retire upon Baker Abad? we should there be beyoud the range of the enemy's guns. Our men are hungry." Saheb distributed Rs. 1,000 amongst the officers and men, to but the firing did not recommence. From this hour the men went over to Moolraj; at 4 r.m. they had all deserted. Khan Singh proposed sending a flag of truce to Moolraj, but Saheb refused to do so, but allowed Ghoolam Hussain and Elahee Buksh to go to Mooltan to inquire the reason of the firing. They did not come back before night. In the evening, Anderson became senseless from his wounds. A great number of men, armed and unarmed, now approached the Eedgah from Mooltan. In front came about 100 Chukr Wallahs (Akalies?), and with them were Hurbughwan, Deedar Singh, and Jaimmel Singh, officers of Moolraj's army. Hearing the noise made by this crowd, Agnew ordered the bed of Anderson to be brought near him; then the people of Moolraj arrived at the gate of the Some of them seized Khan Singh, and led him away; through fear, I concealed myself between the kunnats of Saheb's tent, close to his bed. When Moolraj's men entered, one of them, Goojer Singh, advanced towards the Saheb, and used much abusive language to him. He asked him what right he had to come to Mooltan; and said that he must become a Sikh. Saheb answered, 'I am a servant of the Maharajah; do you not see that my hair is allowed to grow like that of the Sikhs?' these words Goojer Singh struck Agnew with a sword, and twice drew it across his throat; two other men discharged firearms at him. The name of one of these men is Bowpal Singh, a servant of Rung Ram. The Sahebs were then cut and hacked with swords; and, when they were dead, their bodies brought outside, placed on the ground, face to earth, and cut at by the people who crowded round. Goojer Singh cut off the head of Agnew and took it away with him. All this I saw. On the 21st, I remained all day concealed in the Baba Suffra nullah. Assud Allah was with me. At 4 P.M. I saw Goojer Singh upon Agnew's Arab horse, and with the Saheb's pistols in his belt, going from Dewan Am Khas to the Eedgah, to join the Goorkha regiment. Eight or nine days after this, I went disguised to the Am Khas, and there saw Moolraj, who appeared to be very pleased. About twenty days after the murder of the Sahebs I was discovered and put in prison, where I remained until the capture of the fort. I was very badly treated, and but little food and drink was given to me."

PESHAWUR.

June 1.—Nothing going on; dust storm all yesterday. Major Lawrence has taken a quantity of shawls, goods, &c., value Rs. 30,000, belonging to Dost Mahommed. They were on the way to Cabul. Lieut. Daly is appointed to command a Seikh cavalry corps to be raised here; he is of the Bombay fusiliers.—Mofussulite.

June 3 .- We are glad to learn by letters from Peshawur, dated June 3, that Brigadier Dundas has some friends, at least at that station, that they think him fair and impartial, and declare that "he carries on the duty, giving as little trouble as His manner is his chief fault, and that seems natural possible. to him." The Khaibeeres and Cabulees do not seem inclined to give any trouble at present; indeed, the latter are said to be n great dread of an invasion from our side. The Bengal horse artillery, H.M.'s 61st foot, and four companies of the 60th were under cover, the Bombay artillery and fusiliers still under canvas, "which," says the same correspondent whom we have quoted above, "does not look like favouritism." Lieut. Lumsden had marched with his cavalry guide to the Yoosoofzaie country, to resettle some questions that Dost Mahomed had upset during his temporary arrangements. Lieut. Pollock is in charge of Kohat. It is reported that Sultan and Peer Mahomed are not satisfied with the provision allowed them by Dost Mahomed! We trust that, under no circumstances, will they ever be allowed to return to Peshawur. Our latest from Peshawur is to the 5th of June. The wing of the 3rd Bombay N.I. had returned with treasure from Atok on the 29th of May. Hot winds had prevailed since the 1st of June with much dust. The infantry of the guide corps now at Peshawur is to be increased to 600 men. Capt. Barron, of the 19th Bombay N. I., had been appointed brigade-major on the departure of the Bombay staff and the nomination is said to be a good one. - Delhi Gazette, June 13.

JUNE 12.—We were all taken quite aback yesterday by the publication of the following order, from which you will perceive that we are all now formed into a moveable force, ready to march at a moment's warning. The fusiliers and 13th Bengal irregular cavalry remain here:—

"Extract from Brigade Orders by Brigadier the Honourable H. Dundas, C.B., Commanding.—Agreeably to orders received through Major General Sir Walter R. Gilbert, K.C.B., commanding Punjaub division, the troops named in the margin will be formed into a movcable column, and must be prepared to march at a moment's notice. Marching establishments, including carriage for the private baggage of officers and men, to be agreeable to the scales laid down in G. G. O. No. 360, of the 2nd December, 1824.

"Major Fordyce's and Major Blood's troops of horse artillery; Capt. Turnbull's battery; 1st regt. L.I.; Scinde irregular horse; H. M.'s 60th rifles; H. M.'s 61st, 31st, and 70th regts. Bengal N. I.; 3rd and 9th Bombay N. I."

The report here is that we are off for Cashmere; in fact, one of the Peshawur chieftains told me last evening that numbers of people were leaving this to join Dost Mahomed in the Kyber Pass, and it may be relied upon that if we quit this, he will pounce down on Peshawur like a hawk. Goolab Singh won't give up his guns, and it is said that he has been detected in traitorous correspondence, &c. &c. Rumours are very abundant.

H. M.'s 60th rifles have all now moved into the garden house of Sultan Mahomed Khan. This is a very beautiful looking place; a fine avenue of orange trees leads up to a richly painted dwelling. This is the principal part of the building, and forms their hospital. The troops are located in a square behind, said to have been the abode of the Sultan's hundred wives. does not accommodate the whole of the regiment, four companies having been obliged to pitch their tents to the right of the house for want of room; but they are well sheltered under or near trees, &c. Their number of sick has greatly increased of late; the other day they had 140 in hospital-more than ever they have had since coming to the country, having generally been about the healthiest regiment on the establish-The number is now decreasing very fast. standing medical committee has been reassembled, the purpose of examining into the cause of sickness in H.M.'s 60th rifles.' I am not aware of the conclusion they have come to, as they are still sitting, but I believe that Dr. Straker, superintending surgeon, and president of the Medical Committee, has recommended that every second tree in the orchard to the right of the Wuzeera Bagh be cut down, and the lower branches of all the other trees lopped off; the place to be kept free from weeds, &c., and no more irrigation to be allowed than what really is necessary. This has been approved of by the Brigadier, and ordered by him to be carried into effect by the Quartermaster of the corps. This is, I must say, an excellent recommendation of Dr. Straker's, for it will not only benefit the men, but the fruit too, as it will grow to twice its size: the trees are too close together. The pendalls for the fusiliers are now getting on fast, and will soon be ready for them. The 3rd troop horse artillery and Turnbull's battery have removed from Wuzeersbagh, and are encamped for the present to the right of Major Lawrence's house: they are to occupy the old Sikh lines, which will also soon be ready for their reception. The following officers proceeded on sick certificate the day before yesterday for Kurrachee—I understand they go down by Attock:—Major Mignon, 1st Bombay E. Regt. Fusiliers; Dr. Dearlove; Ensign Shaw, of the Baggage Corps; and Ensign Napier, 3rd Regt. N.I.

13th June. - I have not written to you for a long time for this reason—that I have not had any news of moment to communicate. At present there are various reports going about, which I will relate. In the city there is a report that Goolab Singh has assembled a large army in Cashmeer, that he has 100 guns, and that this force is to oppose us; another, and I should think the true one, is, that Goolab Sing has written to Sir H. Lawrence to say that his nephew has been enlisting into his service the whole of the Sikhs who delivered up their arms at Rawul Pindee, and that they have a great number of guns; and further, that he (Goolab Singh) is unable to restrain this nephew. A force has already gone from Wuzeerabad, so it is said; and yesterday we were all rather astonished at an order making the following regiments, &c. into a moveable column, and to be ready to march at a moment's notice, viz. Major Fordyce's and Major Blood's troops of horse artillery; Turnbull's battery; one company of sappers and pioneers; 1st light cavalry, Sindh horse, II. M.'s 60th and 61st regiments, 30th and 70th Bengal infantry, and the 3rd and 19th regts Bombay N.I. Where this force is to go, no one here seems to know. We are to keep up our camels, which is a great shame, until we do really march. A subaltern's pay will not stand Rs. 45, being cut every month for the scabby janwars of the conqueror of Sindh's famous baggage corps, which he boasts so much about. Bengal officers pay Rs. 8 per month for each camel, whilst Bombay officers have to pay Rs. 15 for beasts that cannot carry half a load. Should this moveable column be at all moved, what does Major George Lawrence intend doing with Peshawur with but one European regiment of infantry, and a corps of irregular cavalry? He will have to give himself up this time to Dost Mahomed Barukzai, instead of Sultan Mahomed of that ilk. The best of the joke is, that the road to Cashmeer, where Goolab Singh's nephew is said to be creating this disturbance, and where this moveable column must be intended for, is impracticable for camels-nothing but mules or tattoos will do. After all, I dare say that it will turn out a false alarm, or otherwise that the bloodthirsty old man at present at the head of military affairs wishes to add another Egypt to our Indian empire, or a contrivance to make the poor officers and men pay for camels instead of government.

BENGAL.

TESTIMONIAL TO LORD GOUGH.

We have been requested by several friends, in various parts of India, to propose a testimonial to Lord Gough, on his retirement from the command of the Indian army. The number of letters we have received on this subject, from Lahore, Jullunder, Ferozepore, Unballah, the Hills, and in short from every large station in India, afford a strong proof of the great regard and respect in which Lord Gough is held by the army at large; and we take upon ourselves to say, that no body of men in this world were more ready and anxious to testify that respect than the army of India, at this present moment.

Our reason for not before acceding to the wishes of so many

Our reason for not before acceding to the wishes of so many friends, in bringing this matter to public notice earlier, is simply this—that we had some doubt whether the giving of a testimonial would be in accordance with some regulation or other, which forbids any demonstration of feeling towards a retiring commanding officer. Before we proceed further, it behoves us to say, that we are in ignorance of the rules and regulations which apply to such cases, and we are unprepared to argue the distinctions which would bring this or that officer within or without the pale of such rules and regulations. Our sentiments on such points must necessarily be those of other people, and we are told to say, that "in the case of Lord Gough, there can be no sort of objection to the army of India expressing in the most marked manner those feelings of regard and respect which are universally entertained."

Lord Gough is retiring from a command which it is utterly impossible he can ever resume; his connection with India and its army is at an end—as far as regards public service—and there can be no more impropriety in presenting Lord Gough with some fitting testimonial, than in voting a sword to Sir Harry Smith, Sir Wm. Nott, Sir George Pollock, or Lord Ellenborough. All these, we believe, have received at the hands of the army some memorial of the regard in which they were respectively held in this country.

We are, generally speaking, averse to testimonials being given to great men on the occasion of their retiring from office, and we have, not unfrequently, opposed them in these columns. But if ever there was an exception to be made, it is fitting to make it in favour of the gallant old veteran who is about to take his departure from these shores. He leaves us an ill-used man, —one who was prematurely pushed from his stool to allay a panic in the mind of the British public. With what reason let his last crowning victory bear ample witness. Lord Gough leaves this country, as the most hospitable and kind-hearted person that ever occupied so high a position. His hospitality and kindness have not been by fits and starts—(as is too often the case). They have been uniform from the commencement of his career to the close, and in making those subject to his command happy at his board, he has ever been cheerfully assisted by Lady Gough, who will long be remembered, for her unaffected good nature, and anxiety to promote the social interests of all around her. No commanderin-chief—no public functionary in the world—ever excelled Lord Gough in good-feeling and moral worth. A soldier, from his boyhood to the present hour, he has carried the frank and unpretending manners of the camp into the society he has moved in ;-and without laying claim to "those soft parts of conversation which chamberers have," he has contrived to attach unto him all those with whom he has come in contact. What may be Lord Gough's personal wishes on the present occasion we have no means of judging; but we imagine the desire of so large a body of officers who have shared his dangers (during three campaigns-two of them of no trifling character) to do him honour on his departure cannot be distasteful, or other than gratifying.

The testimonial, if given at all, should be a public testimonial; for the respect entertained for Lord Gough is not confined to the army. It is as general as it is sincere, and we feel convinced that the civil service, and many members of society, unconnected with the Government, would wish to share in a token of esteem to his lordship. In the absence of any other definite proposition, we venture to suggest that a service of gold plate be subscribed for, and presented to Lord Gough. We need scarcely add, that we shall be happy to register from time to time, as our space may admit, the names of all those who are willing to carry out the proposition which we now give form to, at the suggestion of at least fifty military officers of all ranks, located in various parts of the country.—Mojussilite.

STATISTICS OF THE NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES.

We purposely refrained from any remark on the statistics of the north-western provinces till we had completed the details, which having now done, we can refer our readers to them, as they have appeared in our columns since the 11th inst. The first remark we would make is the apparent ease with which these very voluminous documents have been compiled in a short time after orders were issued, and then contrast this with the absolute ignorance still prevailing as to the lower provinces, though they have been so much longer under British rule. We have reason to believe that there is no public department here which could give an off-hand answer to such questions as to the number of inhabitants in the neighbouring town of Chinsurah, or the villages of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs. We have been informed by purchasers of estates bought at revenue sales, that after purchase no record could be found in the collector's office, either of the number of villages contained in the estate, or even of its boundaries. To what is this neglect to be attributed? A contemporary says to the frequent change of governors, who indeed have more on their hands than they can well attend to. The survey lately set on foot will, we suppose, supply the information so long required, and give the means of comparison with that part of India which has occasioned our observations.

We find by this report, that the Upper Provinces included in the Agra presidency cont in 71,985 square English miles, and consequently rather less than Great Britain. The total population is 23,199,668, that of Great Britain at the last cenus was 18,664,761, and is now probably about 20,000,900 The population of Great Britain is stated at 221 per square mile, while that of the Agra presidency is 322, exceeding any in Europe except Belgium, which beats it by one, being 323 pd. mile. The population of India has always been supposed the same content of the population of India has always been supposed the same content.

but land in or near the tropics, if of equal fertility, ought to support a much larger population than if on the northern side of the temperate zone, where vegetation is slower and is interrupted by long winters. A remarkable fact is that the cultivated surface is just about half the whole area, or twenty-three out of forty-six millions of acres. The population is consequently just one to each acre of cultivated land, and if the whole country were capable of being brought into culture, the population might be doubled without any alteration in its present condition. But these tables report upwards of eleven millions of acres as barren. This must be supposed, the greater part at least to be irreclaimable, but some there must be which only requires a supply of water to become fit for agricultural purposes.

The revenue raised from these provinces is four crores and thirty-four lacs of rupees, of which four crores and five lacs is land-tax. The Indian land revenue system has so often been the subject of discussion, that it is familiar to most of our readers. It is admitted by most of those who have long resided in the upper provinces that the country has become impoverished under British rule; the great question is, whether that is the effect of the rigour of the present financial system or not. The land-tax in England is little more than a million sterling, not a fiftieth part of the whole annual revenue, and therefore affords no comparison with a country where all other taxes are insignificant. But we may find some analogy in the present condition of Ireland. The whole country is suffering—in many places farms are abandoned and the land suffered to lie waste—because of the imposition of a land-tax (in the shape of poor-rates), which is only 2s. 2d. in the pound for all Ireland. There can be no doubt of the severity of the infliction; and yet England has long supported, in addition to all its other taxation, a poor-rate more than double in proportion.

We find on referring to our tables that the average land revenue of the Upper Provinces is Company's Rs. 1-12-1 per statute acre. It is idle to talk of this, as some have ignorantly done, "as a trifle, some three-and-sixpenny matter." It is a tax pretty nearly equal to the rental. There are lands we know that let for three and even four rupees, but we have great doubts whether the average rental of the whole country exceeds the tax. This is a far higher rate than has been ever levied in the most despotic countries of Europe. From ten to twenty-five per cent. upon the rent seems to have been the general limits within which the land-tax of the continental states fluctuated. What the land will bear must vary according to circumstances, but there is every reason to believe that the burthen, if gradually imposed, may be made much heavier than if suddenly laid on. We have adduced the Irish Poor Law as an illustration of this. There can be no doubt that the fertile soil of Ireland, having the same advantage as to markets as that of England, and being exempt from many taxes which are imposed on the latter country, could support without injury at least an equal poor-rate. Yet we see that about eleven per cent. falls with crushing severity. There has not been time to accommodate the habits of the people to the change. What skill and capital can extract from any soil is yet unknown; but it is evident that the limit has not yet been found. It seems probable that our unrelenting revenue system has done in many parts of this country what the poor-rate is now doing in Ireland. The demand abstractedly considered may have been moderate, but it was made upon people who were unprepared to meet it. The cultivator only retained what was absolutely necessary for his support, and the land proprietor, as the race have always done from the days of Strepsiades to those of Buckingham and Chandos, exceeded their incomes. They could deal with their old governors by presents or flattery, or even obstinacy; but, as they say themselves, the Company's accursed auction was like the angel of death, knew no pity, and suffered no delay. It is therefore probable that the appearances of impoverishment asserted by so many eye-witnesses are real. As in Ireland, the day of expedients is over, the class of proprietors is compelled to strike a balance and settle its accounts, and the transaction is accompanied with great suffering. No Government can be supposed desirous of ruining any large body of its subjects, and it is certain that the British Indian has always endeavoured to favour the proprietors rather than any other class. So the Home Government has hitherto always legislated for the Irish landlords, but in both instances the results have been the same. One lesson, however, ought to be drawn from this experience, and we believe has been drawn in India, namely, that whatever changes are made ought to be very gradual. It would not be surprising to find that the land revenue of the British provinces may ultimately be doubled with far less pressure on the country than was caused by the amount originally imposed. The exemption from all the calamities of war so long enjoyed has greatly increased the wealth of the country, and if security were given to property by a reform of the courts of law and the police, accumulations would be accelerated. The removal of vexatious restrictions on trade, such as the transit duties, has already produced most beneficial results, and if the Government had a ten or twenty years' respite from war, the resources of the country might be developed to an extent which few persons imagine. Let us not despair of this, though the last ten years have scarcely given us an interval of peace.—Englishman.

THE NEW SIKH CONTINGENT.

We confess ourselves extremely sceptical as to the policy of confiding the keeping of any portion of the Punjab to the new Sikh contingent. The question is, have we any adequate security that these regiments will be faithful to the salt they have undertaken to eat? Our deliberate opinion is that we have not, and that, on the contrary, all the probabilities are in favour of their betraying us. It is usual to say "Look at the native army, and see how faithfully it has held the provinces which have from time to time been added to the British dominions. Why should not a similar result be anticipated in the present instance, and a Sikh contingent be as ready to hold the Punjab in subjection to us, as a Hindoostanee contingent Hindoostan?" We deny the truth of the inference in toto. In the first place, although the assertion may be startling, yet it is nevertheless the case, that hitherto we have never held any conquered province by troops raised entirely from that province. When we conquered Bengal, our army was chiefly recruited from the comparatively distant province of Behar. When we conquered Behar, we drew our soldiers principally from Oude, and five-sixths probably of our native army are to this day composed, not of men from our own provinces, but from the independent province of Oude. Therefore, we repeat, the experi-ment we are now trying in the Punjab cannot be said to have ever been tried by us before, or if it has been tried, it was tried in Affghanistan, and failed most completely, the native levies, janbaz, and such like, having been the very first to desert us, and in many instances to murder their European officers into the bargain. Let it not be said then that previous experience justifies the experiment of depending on the fidelity of Sikhs to preserve the peace of the Punjab. It is no such thing, and it is of much importance that both Lord Dalhousie and Sir Charles Napier should thoroughly understand this, and not be misled by the notion that the safety of each successive conquest has hitherto been confided to troops raised in the conquered districts.

But even were this so, the reasoning would not hold good in the present instance. There is much more nationality among the Sikhs than there has been amongst the several conquered tribes of Hindoostan. The tribes of Hindoostan are mongrels, Hindoos, and Mahomedans, blended and amalgamated together, until all nationality, and almost individuality, have been lost. Conquered and reconquered, the distinctions of race have been completely effaced among them. The Sikhs, on the contrary, are an eminently national people, and, notwithstanding the defeats they have experienced at our hands, have still the spirit of nationality strong upon them. Indeed this spirit is perhaps as fresh with them now as it was in the days of Runjeet. The glory of the Khalsa is the same cherished object in Sikh minds which it has ever been. The Sikhs are no longer dominant, it is true, but have they abandoned therefore the hope and desire to be so? Not if we have read their character aright.

To our thinking, then, a force composed of such materials is not to be trusted with the task of preserving order and quiet in the Punjab. For what will be the probable employment of such a force should it be called into the field? Will it not be to check some outbreak of the newly-subjected population, or to quash some chief who having lost everything by our appropriation of the country, desires to make a last effort to embarrass, if he cannot upset our rule? It is clear from the acts of our Punjab government that some employment of this kind is anticipated for the troops; else why the concentration of such a mass of troops between Lahore and Peshawur, and why the prohibition, recently published, against ladies proceeding beyond Lahore? Surely these precautions are not taken from suspicion of our Cashmere ally, or in anticipation of a second incursion by way of the Khyber. No, intestina bella are what we have to dread, and to meet these we are enrolling and training Sikhs; that is, enrolling and training Sikhs with the view to comploy them to put down insurrections amongst the Sikhs. We had a tolerable lesson, too, by the defection of Shere Sing and his force at Mooltan, how strong a sympathy exists amongst these people.

We admit at once that it is politic to endeavour to provide employment and subsistence for the numerous class in the Punjab whom our success has thrown out of employment—the soldiers in fact of the old Khalsa-who, notwithstanding all theories to the contrary, are not likely all at once, if at all, to make ploughshares of their swords; and further, we can understand how it should be desired to make a provision for those troops who remained true to the Durbar during the late struggle. But why form these into national regiments, and above all why leave them in the Punjab? Send them into these provinces, employ them in the Doab, and even still lower down the country, and if well managed, they may make not only good, but even faithful soldiers to our government; but do not try their fidelity too sorely and at the first outset, by employing them in the country of their birth, and amongst the scenes of the exploits of the Khalsa-

It is hardly necessary to remind our readers how all these arguments are strengthened by the conspiracy which within the last few days has been detected in Major Hodgson's Sikh regiment, and which had for its first object the murder of the European officers. We are entitled to ask, what would be the value, if called upon to put down a Sikh outbreak of a regiment so tainted with disloyalty as to have been on the point of mur-dering its European officers? We should be loath to say ex uno d sce omnes, but certainly this event ought to excite the gravest reflections in the minds of those whose duty it is to provide for the tranquillity of the Punjab, and to determine what description of force is most likely to effect it. - Englishman.

THE ORIENTAL BANK v. THE GANGES STEAM COMPANY.

Our readers must by this time be so familiar with our warnings against joint-stock companies, that they would hardly be surprised on reading the report of a case tried in the Supreme Court on Tuesday, in which the Directors of the Ganges Steam Company endeavoured to evade their engagements. no dispute as to the Oriental Bank having fairly and bonestly lent the money for which it sued the Directors, whose names were signed to the promissory note, and their only plea was a direct denial of their signatures, which must have been a painful thing for honourable men and officers in the Company's service to do. Colonel Pew, Major Stewart, and Dr. Duncan must undoubtedly, when they went to the Oriental Bank, have represented themselves as fully authorized to raise this money, but they endeavour to evade payment by withholding all evidence as to the partnership, their attorney appearing in court and object-ing to disclose what had passed between him and his clients, ing to disclose what had passed between him and his chems, such being privileged communications. It must be concluded that these gentlemen see no chance of recovering the money from their partners, and are therefore unwilling to pay it out of their own pockets. That, however, is strictly a matter between them and those with whom they have accounted themselves but with which third parties have as sociated themselves, but with which third parties have nothing to do, and on account of which they ought not to suffer. In this instance the lenders recover their money, the Chief Justice being satisfied with an amount of evidence which would hardly have convinced him in some other cases tried in his court. In this he has done substantial justice, perhaps at the expense of forms, and therefore we have only to approve of the verdict. But that is not what we wish to impress upon the public, but the danger which every man in business incurs who deals with these open partnerships, when we see that transactions of large amount undertaken in perfect good faith, are disputed upon technical grounds whenever the affairs of these companies are adverse, and the very extent and substantiality of a numerous body of shareholders held out as inducements to deal with them, become the means of defeating creditors by the difficulties which under our law they occasion.

We have repeatedly noticed this circumstance as urgently requiring a revision of the law. Nothing can be more conducive to the prosperity of a country in which capital is not equal to the opportunities of employment which it affords, than that every facility should be given to numerous bodies of adventurers to unite and embark sums, which though large in the aggregate, are unimportant to each. This is particularly desirable in all new undertakings, the risks of which cannot be accurately calculated. India is exactly so circumstanced, and we have seen within the last twenty years that there is no want of enterprise. Hardly a project has been formed which has not found abundance of support, and if they have not in general been persevered in, it has been more the result of bad management than anything else. No doubt the failures are out of all proportion to the successes on this side of India, and the necessity of protecting the public is consequently the more urgent. We have repeatedly urged that all partnerships should be registered, and that they should not be permitted to evade engagements by any technical objections.

Nothing can be easier, and as there can be no object in concealment except fraud, we hold that the legislature is bound to interfere for the protection of the public. Unless it should do so, it is tolerably certain that no man in his senses will become a shareholder of these concerns, and that the amount of enterprise which they set in motion will be lost to the country.—Englishman, June 28.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A FORGERY to the extent of Rs. 10,000 has been committed against the North West Bank by a sircar.

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE has prohibited the carrying of arms in the streets of Calcutta, except under a police pass. He has also forbid the passage of native processions through the crowded parts of the town; such as the Strand, Bow Bazaar, Cossitollah, Park-street, Chowringhee-road, and several other streets. The Hurkaru understands a wealthy native intends to prosecute the superintendent of police for obstructing the thoroughfares, in accordance with the above resolution.

THE INDIGO CULTIVATION at Tirhoot has, it is said, fallen off about twenty per cent. this year.

Sir Charles Napier arrived at Simlah on the 16th June in good health, and would, it was expected, move to Lahore in about three weeks from that date.

H. M.'s 96rн Foor.—A detachment of H. M.'s 96th foot arrived at Calcutta on the 23rd June in the Rate/life from Sydney.

MR. EDWARD A. DAW was sworn in as an attorney and proctor of the Supreme Court on the 16th June.

INDIGO.—A letter dated the banks of the Ganges, the 13th June, says:—" The river is still low, and rising but slowly, which gives us hopes of better things than we anticipated. The plant s growing fast, and some of the early sowings are fit for cutting. We shall commence manufacturing in a few days."

THE CHURCH AT PATNA, which was nearly finished, has fallen down.

Тівноот. — The Englishman hears from 'Гігьооt that the indigo cultivation of that district this year shows a reduction of about twenty thousand bighas, being about eighty-five thousand Tirhoot bighas against a hundred and five thousand last year. stated, however, that only picked lands were retained, all the inferior soils being rejected. The crop is stated to be very fine, though hitherto backward, but the recent rains are bringing it fast forward. The koonties are a failure as yet.

A WUZEERABAD letter, dated June 18th, says-" All the ladies and soldiers' wives are again ordered back to Lahore, and the weather is exceedingly unpleasant. The oikhs are going up in large bodies to Cashmere, for what purpose we do not know, but most likely shall next cold season.

CAPT. F. W. BIRCH.—The Calcutta Gazette contains a notice to the effect that Frederick William Birch, senior magistrate of police for the town of Calcutta, and captain in the 41st B. N. I., is a candidate for the benefit of the Insolvent Act. His schedule is thought likely to throw some light on the curious pecuniary speculations in which a Calcutta magistrate occasionally indulges.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND Horses.—A batch of 36 Van Diemen's Land horses was sold by Messrs. Cook and Co. on the 22nd June, at an average of Rs. 561 each. 200 horses arrived in Calcutta, June 19th, from Hobart Town, by the Lord Auckland.

THE PILOT, PENNINGTON, has been found guilty of manslaughter, but strongly recommended to mercy on account of extenuating circumstances; he has been sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment.

ADDITIONAL CLERGY SOCIETY .- Within seven or eight years after its institution, the Additional Clergy Society finds itself in a position to entertain five clergymen at a salary of Rs. 3,000 a year each.

AT LAHORE sickness appears to be very prevalent amongst the European troops.

The Gale.—The Cabrass is still missing. She was outward bound and has not been heard of since the gale; but may yet tu n up. She may have got safe out to sea and carried her pilot, Mr. Harrison, with her. He is one of three brothers in the service, and a very smart officer. The above appeared in our morning edition, but in the Star of to-day we are sorry to find the following statement:-" We regret, however, to add that he (the captain of the Constance) saw a vessel to leeward of him when he was running across Saugor Sand, wind W. S. W. The stranger was supposed to be the Cabrass, with her mizen mast gone. It is believed that she has foun-dered unless something very providential intervened. The Constance went through the breakers, drawing thirteen feet, while the Cabrass, we understand, drew nineteen."—Hurkaru, June 30.

A SHIP ASHORE IN COJUNG BAY.—The Windsor and Emily both report a ship on shore in Cojung Bay, which is a little to the southward of False Point. The wreck was seen by both those vessels on the 22nd June, and is described as that of a vessel of about 600 tons.

THE ORIENTAL BANK has obtained a verdict against Col. Pew and others, concerned in the Ganges Steam Navigation Company, for Rs. 33,834, with interest at 11 per cent. from the 1st Aug., 1848.

THE UNION BANK .--We are informed that some of the creditors of the Union Bank have expressed distrust on learning from the list of shareholders lately published with annotations by the executive committee, that some have received what has been described as a " special certificate; "—from which an inference has been drawn that the committee have assumed a discretionary power, not vested in them by the scheme of liquidation, of granting discharges in particular cases for less than the full assessment. We learn, however, that this is a misapprehension, and that the so-called "special certificates," (which have only been granted in two or three cases), are merely recommendatory, and neither give nor purport to give anything like a legal protection. Neither the executive committee nor any other body have been vested with any power whatever of modifying the final assessment; and to numerous applications for a reduction where assessments have been complained of as excessive, the committee have returned one unvarying answer,-that the power of modification does not exist. In two or three cases, however, it seems, that shareholders have been content to pay a reduced sum, upon a mere certificate stating the opinion of the committee that they have paid according to their means, and recom-mending creditors not to molest them. It is clear, of course, that such a document is utterly worthless as a legal discharge or protection; but if the recipients are satisfied with it, creditors have no right to complain. It leaves their hands quite unfettered in law, and they may either respect the appeal to their mercy or disregard it, as they please. — Hurkaru, June 14.

THE N. W. BANK OF INDIA—A rumour has been abroad for some time, that the N. W. Bank of India had bought some of its own shares to the extent of five lakhs of rupees. recently seen a letter from the secretary denying the truth of this rumour, and intimating, that it is contemplated merely to cancel a certain number of shares that were, on the occasion of the last increase of stock, allotted severally to London and Bombay, and which have not been sold in these markets. We would now ask, do the shares so allotted, and still in the market, form part of the capital of forty lakhs, that has for many months been advertised, and returned in the monthly reports of the bank, with the signature of the secretary and accountant attached, as paid up? We ask out of no idle curiosity, but we think the time is come when the errors of the past should be at once acknowledged and remedied, and all concealment he put an end to, if the banks wish to resume the confidence of the public, which recent events in Calcutta have tended so much to shake, and which still more recent doings at Benares are not calculated to improve. It seems beyond a doubt that the capital of the Benares bank, instead of being fifteen lakhs, as reported and advertised, was in reality only five, ten lakhs' worth of promissory notes, of little or no value, being palmed off public as cash. At least such is the assertion of Mr. Theodore Dickens, a shareholder, and a near connection of the late secretary and of one of the directors, so that we may receive his testimony with some degree of confidence. - Delhi Gazette.

TRIAL OF MOOLRAJ.—We hear from Lahore that "the trial of Dewan Moolraj is going on; but no one seems to know yet when it will be concluded." Our correspondent says, "most people are inclined to think that the dewan will get off." The evidence given by the native witnesses is much to the same purport as the statements made in the letter signed "Ultor," which appeared originally in the Friend of India. The credibility, or otherwise, of the witnesses will of course form a part of the court's consideration.—Mojussilite, June 12.

JHERLUM, June 6th.—The steamer Conqueror arrived here yesterday from Mooltan, being her second trip. You see we begin to feel ourselves in rather a civilized part of this world again, with steam-boats coming up to one's very doors. They say she is to remain here; a steam ferry being considered the thing. There was a great talk of a bridge of boats, and I believe it was reported that it was quite feasible but very expensive, and not quite to be depended upon, owing to the eccentricities of this very eccentric river; sometimes rising or falling two or three feet in a night. I hear the steam ferry has been strongly recommended, and it is my firm belief that the Conqueror has some up again for that purpose. It looks so curious to see five or six jolly European jackters knocking about up in this part of the world, and poor fellows, I pity them on board the boat moored under the banks of the river at this season of the year. The sun is really terrific. All our men and most of us are still under the canvas. We have Tatties of Joowassa, no Khus to be got for love or money. Our mess house is nearly finished; the roof is on, and when I find I can't stand the sun blazing through my hill tent I take refuge there. The worst of this place is, that we cannot enjoy a ride anywhere. All the country is covered with smooth round stones. You cannot canter fifty yards without being obliged to pull up, and "go gently over the stones." It plays the deuce with a horse's feet. You ask me if there is any shooting. The question I cannot answer, as I would wish; we have all been so busy building that no one has yet found time to go out. I fancy there must be lots from the hills being around us and covered with jungle. All the natives I have ever asked say there are pigs, bears, leopards, and deer; but, however, when it gets a little cool we shall find out for ourselves. I intend (D. V.) some fine day, taking a trip towards the snowy range, which is in full view, seemingly quite close. There is an officer from here up in that direction on sick leave; he is, I believe, at present about 105 miles off. The accounts he sends down really make one's mouth water. He was quite close to the snow, in fact had a snow storm the other day. Game of every description, pheasants, woodcocks, &c. &c. fruits and flowers, beds of violets, really quite enchanting, every thing. The natives are very civil, I may say very polite. All this accessible to us in a three days' ride; but we are obliged to get permission from the authorities at Lahore, which is a bit of a nuisance. When I was out at Rawul Pindee, I heard that lots of tigers were within a very short distance; that two or three chaps there had succeeded in finding the janwars. going to let me know when he intends going a shooting the royal brute, and I mean to accompany him. We do not go unless we obtain certain intelligence of the animal's whereabouts, that we may make sure of him. We are awfully heard up for every thing here, running out of boots, shoes, shirts, trousers, and nothing to be got nearer than Lahore. We have all been thinking of taking to the nigger dress, chupkun, &c. Our poor men (as all our heavy baggage is still in the provinces) have not a stitch of white clothing, and are still in winter dress. No beer, no nothing. "Think of that, master Brookes." I'll patronise Rodda, whom you recommend for his skill in gun-craft."—Agra Messenger, June 16.

The LATE MR. CHAS. REED.—We regret to have to record the death of a well-known member of the Indian community, Mr. Charles Reed, who died yesterday morning at his residence in Calcutta, at an advanced age. Mr. Reed was a very eccentric and in many respects a remarkable man,-remarkable both in his history and the events of his life, and in his character. He was born, we believe, in this country, but educated in England; returning to India, however, when still in his boyhood. beginning of the present century he became connected with the famous "Bhya Jha suit," which he brought to a successful termination, so far as related to the courts of this country, in the year 1812. Various suits, in the Queen's and Company's Courts, arose out of this, and matters connected with it are in litigation to this day! The property directly and indirectly involved amounted to crores of rupees. The death of litigation to this day! The property direct rectly involved amounted to crores of rupees. his patron, Bhya Jha involved Mr. Reed himself in litigation with his heirs, and although he received large sums of money from time to time, he appears never to have been really a rich We firmly believe he was sincere in his strange opinions, and honest in his intentions. His character, however, was made up of contradictions. To great shrewdness and sagacity on some points, he united a singular obliquity of judgment on nearly all. He had a retentive memory and a fund of varied but very miscellaneous information, collected and retained with little attempt at arrangement. His chief characteristic, perhaps, was his extraordinary tenacity of purpose. When he once fixed on a particular line of conduct, neither impediment nor argument would He had energies which, well directed, induce him to swerve. might have secured for him fame and wealth; but his strange perversity of judgment, bordering at times on mental aberration, constantly neutralized his own efforts. Mr. Reed was in his 76th year. He appears to have been gradually sinking for some time past, and to have died from exhaustion of nature rather than from any specific complaint. GWALIOR.—We regret to inform our readers that Bhoran Singh, the refractory thakoor, and his adherents, had escaped from the force brought against them by Lieut. colonel Graves detached from Gwalior. The thakoor's fort Bicturwar is described to us as being naturally strong. Art also has lent it said to render it — if well defended — almost impregnable. (In the arrival of Colonel Graves's detachment, the fort was exchanging shots with the Maharajah's irregular troops, which had been before it for some time. The gallant colonel marched his force between the belligerents, who ceased firing. He then opened negotiations, when it was agreed that the fort and certain prisoners should be surrendered that evening. When the party, sent to receive possession, arrived at the gates, they were refused admittance, and next morning the enemy had disappeared. No young Norval "marked the road he took." He is, however, likely to choose the difficult ground on the banks of the river Sinde, where he may with great impunity do much mischief, as the detachments at Mohonah Seepree, and Julleepoor, are not strong enough to follow him up. The places mentioned, though containing the head-quarters of regiments, cannot give, on an average, the strength of a wing each. As no trace of the enemy was found, Colonel Graves proceeded to destroy his stronghold and the forts in the neighbourhood. The officers who accompany the force are-Lieut. colonel Graves, commanding the 3rd regiment infantry; Captain Macpherson, 2nd in command; Lieut. Sneyd, adjutant; Captain Raikes, commanding cavalry; Captain Warburton, commanding artillery; Surgeon Loch, in medical charge; and Captain Richardson, 5th regiment, is out also with a detachment of his regiment from Julialpoor. The heat is said to be intense—almost intolerable. It is certainly a cruel hardship for troops to be sent out in the hottest scason of the year .- Delhi Gazette, June 9.

COFFEE PLANTATION IN CHOTA NAGFORE. - At a meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, the following letter from Mr. T. M. Robinson, dated Ranchee, May 20, was read:—"I have read with much interest Messrs. Willis and Earle's reports on the coffee of this country, as I am about commencing a plantation, being convinced that it will be remunerative, as the plant thrives with all the luxuriance of one indigenous to the country, without requiring any manure or artificial irrigation; the yield per acre, I have no means of forming an accurate estimate of, but feel sure it must be large, from what I saw of the plants in the Government garden when in fruit last year. The plants if left untrimmed grow to a great size, ten to twelve feet high, and seven to eight to a great size, ten to twelve feet high, and seven to eight feet in diameter of the branches, and several in this state in Colonel Ouseley's garden bear as much as one maund of uncleaned berries. This country has a great advantage in an almost unlimited supply of labour at a cost of one anna per day for a man, and three pice for a woman. The Government garden, consisting of 40 to 50 beeghas, and containing about 7,000 large plants and an immense number of voung ones has been cultivated by only three gardeness and the young ones, has been cultivated by only three gardeners and the occasional assistance of twenty-five or thirty prisoners, making the whole expense extremely trifling, and for which a much larger number of plants might have been produced had the objects of the garden been profit instead of merely experiment. I think the Government and the country will in a short time owe great thanks to Colonel Ouseley, for having in so enter-prising a manner introduced this valuable staple into Chota Nagpore. I had made an offer to take the garden off the hands of the Government, for the sale of the young plants it contained, but never having yet received a reply to my offer, I have now withdrawn it. Colonel Ouseley has kindly supplied me with as many young plants as I shall this year require.

"I write this, believing that it will be interesting to the Society, and I also enclose a report on the appearance of the plants, drawn up by a gentleman now here, who has had a long experience in coffee cultivation in Ceylon."

" I have examined the coffee-trees in the Government garden, and also in Col. Ouseley's compound, and consider their appearance very promising, especially those planted in the shade, and have no doubt that if the trees were more closely planted, so that when they grew up they might form a shade of their own to the land, they would be equally as good as the Ceylon planta-There is one feature connected with the coffce in Chota Nagpore which is remarkable, viz., that it thrives on lands that have been cleared for many years, whereas in Ceylon the planters have been unable to grow coffee on any lands but those immediately reclaimed from forest.

" From the appearance of the cured coffee shown me by Col. Ouseley, I should say the colour and flavour have been injured by fermentation. I am quite convinced that with care in planting and curing, the coffee may be rendered equal to any produced in Ceylon.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAILS. - The steamer Oriental, with the London mail of May 24, reached Madras July 5.

CULTIVATION OF SUGAR. - The firm of Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., who have long been the most extensive sugar manufacturers in southern India, have abandoned their great experiment of cultivating the sugar-cane under European superintendence. The trial, though attempted under the most advantageous circumstances, has proved a failure.

AT TRICHINOPOLY cholera is making sad ravages. The 2nd European L.I. lost in a very short space of time between forty and fifty children.

2ND EUROPEAN L.I.-A correspondent complains in good strong terms of the paucity of officers present with the 2nd European L.I. The greater number of captains and lieutenants are enjoying themselves on staff allowances, leaving only one captain and two lieutenants (one of whom is acting quartermaster) to do duty at head-quarters. - Athenœum

THE DECCAN. - A correspondent in the Deccan, whose letter is dated the 17th June, says that the prisoners collected during the late excursions from Aurungabad have been conveyed under a strong escort of horse and foot to Dowlutabad, where they will be the terror of the garrison. The Rohillas are not manacled or ironed, but a large building, we understand a Persian bath, has been cleared out for them. We expect to hear more bath, has been cleared out for them. We expect to hear more on the subject soon. Dowlatbad is a strong fortress, well described in "Hamilton's Gazetteer," to which we refer our readers. - Englisman June 30.

THE NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.—Another affair appears to have taken place between the troops of the Nizam and the insurgent Robillas near Beder on the road to Jaulna, where the Robillas, numbering 200, are said to have wounded 100 of the Nizam's force, which was much its superior in numbers.

LIEUT. COL. ALEX. LAWE, of the corps of engineers, being by virtue of his commission the senior officer in garrison, has been appointed to command the troops in Fort St. George, in the place of Lieut.-col. William Taylor, recently promoted to the command of the troops at Saugor.

THE LATE CAPT. Howorth.—A correspondent at Secunderabad writes as follows to the Madras Spectator: - " A sad gloom has been thrown over our little cantonment by the melancholy death of a highly intelligent officer, Capt. Howorth, of the 3rd Nizam's infantry, who marched from this in high health and spirits on the 3rd June, in command of a wing of his regiment and a troop of cavalry, to seize a body of Rohillas, who had taken up a posi-After having gellantly accomplished the duty on which he was sent, the Rohillas being completely defeated, and 35 taken prisoners, Capt. Howorth was attacked on his return with apoplexy, and died before medical assistance could be procured. -Athenæum.

HYDERABAD. - The attention of the Governor-General is said at last to have been directed to the affairs of Hyderabad. debt of 54 lacs of rupees is due from the Nizam's to the British Government, which the minister has offered to pay off by yearly instalments of four lacs, paying the interest monthly. These instalments of four lacs, paying the interest monthly. terms the Governor-General is not willing to accede to, but demands payment at once, or a cession of land.

MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE. - Major Johnstone, the recently appointed brigadier, and his niece, Miss Petit, were passing through Shorapore, and the guests of Captain Meadowes Taylor, the commissioner, with whom they were taking a drive, when the carriage upset. Captain Taylor was taken up insensible, and so continued for some time, the others were apparently uninjured. On the following day Brigadier Johnstone and his niece proceeded en route to Bolarum, the young lady treating the accident as a joke when she ascertained that Captain Taylor was not much hurt. Two days afterwards Miss Petit, who had not long been in the country, suddenly complained of feeling greatly exhausted and fatigued, and went to rest. Sad to relate, she sunk rapidly but without pain, and in an hour and a half her spirit had fled.

Mr. Lawin.-We learn with much regret the death of the third son of Mr. Malcolm Lewin, late of the Madras C.S. The poor youth, who was a highly promising lad, had come out as midshipman on board the Carnatic, which reached here on Saturday last, and when off Trincomallee, on the 25th or 26th ult. he fell overboard, having missed his footing in going up the rigging. The boat was lowered in two minutes from the time the accident occurred, and Captain Nelson used every effort to save the life of the ill-fated boy, but without success, as he was never seen to rise to the surface. It was, we believe, his first voyage. The deceased is highly spoken of by his brother officers and the passengers of the Carnatic.—Athenœum, July 3. MR. Ellior.—The Speciator regrets to hear that the chief magistrate, Mr. Elliot, is again so much indisposed, as to find it necessary to take his departure almost immediately for the

THE BANK OF MADRAS has declared a dividend of six per cent. on the half-year ending June 30th, which is a profit of one per cent. on the last. The profit made by the institution during the last six months is Rs. 99,813, while that for the corresponding period of 1848 amounted only to Rs. 74,145.

THE WRECK OF THE STEAMER "EMMA."—A narrative of the wreck of the steamer Emma has been furnished by a passenger, on the occasion of her late disastrous voyage, from which we regret to learn, that the public have little reason to be satisfied with the causes which led to the shipwreck. The weather, it will be recollected, was highly favourable at the time the vessel struck, and we are told that just before the accident occurred, the mate remarked to the captain his fear that the vessel was hardly in the proper track, to which the answer was, a request to know whether he wished to take the command. Capt. Dickson asserts, that the result of careful reckoning induced him to believe that he was standing at this moment not less than ten miles from shore, and expecting to anchor at Masulipatam in two hours. In less than three quarters of an hour, however, the steamer took the ground with a violent crash, between False Point and Point Divey, and the repeated shocks soon dissipated all hopes of getting her off into deep water. The only lady on board was Mrs. Stanbrough, the wife of Dr. Stanbrough, of the Madras establishment, who happened to be in her cabin when the boat struck, and rushed on deck, where she found the sea making clear breaches over the vessel. With great presence of mind, she returned and caught up her children, which, with a gold watch and a brooch, appear to have been the only valuables she was enabled to save from the wreck. A portion of her baggage was subsequently recovered, which had plainly undergone more damage than what was experienced from wind and wave; a hole, for example, having been cut in the top of a plate chest, and the whole of the silver articles extracted. A writing desk, which came on shore, was split in two apparently by a batchet, and as cleanly gutted of its contents as the plate chest had been. Fortunately for Captain Dickson he managed to rescue the whole of his property from the wreck, a stroke of good fortune, which commanders who have passengers to take care of. especially friendless ladies, are seldom found to boast of, but which says a great deal for his sagacity and presence of mind on such a trying occasion. We believe, too, that Captain Dickson was happily too well fortified by flannel and broad cloth to take cold during the weary hours which elapsed between the time of the catastrophe and the dawn of daylight, which was more again than Mrs. Stanbrough could boast of, as that poor lady was obliged, as well as her children, to remain all night on the paddle-box in her night-dress, where she crouched totally unregarded by the master. About five o'clock a raft was formed, on which the passengers gained the shore, but no help was received either from the crew of the Emma, or the inhabitants of the native village near the beach. The articles saved from the wreck were fished up by divers employed for the purpose, under the guidance of Lieut. Ross. The steamer, it appears is irrevocably lost, the hold being full of sand and water, and no hopes are entertained of getting out any portion of the machinery or stores. The disastrous affair is a very sad one, and the recollection of it is not attended with any circumstances of a pleasurable character .- Athenaum.

MURDER. - An authent cated communication dated from Dapoolie, 16th June, gives the following statement:—On the evening of the 14th a most horrible murder was committed in this out-of the way place, by Line Serjeant -, on his wife. It appears that the poor woman had gone into another room to fetch for her daughter (Mrs. —, who had only been confined a few days before) some clothes which were drying, when the miscreant seized the opportunity of her passing through the verandah to murder her, which he did with the iron head of a The poor woman breathed for only shoemaker's hammer. about half an hour, but never spoke. Her skull in one place was most severely fractured; there were about ten or twelve pieces removed from this one place. A court of inquiry sat on the body and found a verdict of "wilful murder against Line Serjeant —," who is now in confinement. There is no doubt of the murder, as the poor woman's daughter ran to her rescue when he struck her; and he said, "He had done for her mother." The miscreant is the man who fell out of the town barracks window last year. The poor victim was a very respectable woman, and known to many persons in this country, as her former husband was Serjeant-major Antrim, of the 1st Fusileers. Her remains were interred yesterday afternoon, when all the officers of the station attended .- Gentleman's Gazette, June 21.

LIEUT. NICHOLSON, 27TH N.I.-The Kurrachee Advertiser makes the following strange allusion to the death of the above officer :- "We regret to hear that Lieut. Nicholson, of the 27th N.I., was lately found in the verandah of his house at Sukkur in a dying state. On examination it was found that he had several severe wounds on different parts of his body, which were no doubt the cause of his death, which oecurred shortly after he was discovered. An inquiry had taken place, but nothing had transpired, and it is feared that the whole affair will for ever remain a mystery. We should be obliged to any of our Sukkur readers to send us the particulars of this melancholy case."

THE WRECK OF THE "LOWJEE FAMILY" was yesterday sold by auction. The sale took place at three o'clock, and had been advertised, we are told, in the usual native mode. Many respectable men attended the sale; the greater proportion of bidders, however, were of the Khoja caste, one of whom was the purchaser. The lot realised Rs. 14,700, and we are informed that the buyer seemed very well satisfied with his bargain. We hear that the high price realised by the ship has caused much surprise among the Bombay speculators.—Telegraph and Courier, June 28.

REMOVAL OF A BOILER FROM THE Berenice.-One of the old boilers of the steamer Berenice was sold at the dockyard on Wednesday. It was bought by a khoja for Rs 150. A curious plan was employed by the man to remove his unwieldy bargain. Sixteen bullock hackeries were disposed in a line along the road in front of the boiler, which was placed on a "drag," to which a hawser was attached, and then passed over all the hackeries, being secured to each one by lashings. Some trouble was occasioned by the obstinate refusal of the bullocks (for above an hour) to move together. At last, however, at a lucky moment, by dint of hard thrashing they started simultaneously, and the procession moved off in good style. We could not ascertain the name of the purchaser.-Ibid.

INTERPRETERS IN THE INDIAN NAVY .- Certain new rules hare been established by the Government in Council, under instructions from the Hon. Court of Directors, for regulating the appointment of interpreters in the Indian navy. It will be seen that the languages to be " studied and recognized" as qualifying for the office of Indian naval interpreter, are Hindustani, Persian, Arabic, Malay, and Sindee. There are to be only three different interpreterships, namely, one in the Persian Gulf, another on the Aden Station, and a third " for any squadron or vessel proceeding on special service." The salary is to be Rs. 100 per month—a small enough sum, when it is considered that an officer must have passed in Hindustani and Persian, or at the least one of the three other languages, before he can be held

The detachment of H.M.'s 83ad Foot, which arrived on Monday last by the ship Ursula, under command of Capt. Lloyd, has been disembarked, and quartered in Fort George Lloyd, has been disembarked, and quartered in Fort George Barracks, where it is to remain till the arrival of the Zion Hope with the last division: when both detachments will proceed on to Poona together to join head-quarters. — Times, June 30.

Colonel Jervis has retired from the Board of Education:

we have not heard who is likely to be appointed in his place. To the gallant officer in question the cause of native, and especially of vernacular, education owes more than to any man alive. We trust that, though his official connection with it has ceased, he will continue to keep his shoulder to the wheel so long as he remains amongst us.—Ibid.

Grant Medical College.—We are happy to learn that with the view of extending the curiculum of study at the Grant Medical College, two additional professorships have been created,—one of midwifery, and the other of medical jurisprudence. Lectures on these subjects will be given during the present session by Drs. Peele and Cole; but these gentlemen have not, we believe, been permanently appointed to the staff of the college.—Ibid.

The Weather.—We have, as we stated in our last, experienced a continuance of broken, showery weather, with a pleasant temperature, and very light fall of rain. From the 23rd, when the mercury was lower by much than during Cleopatra's hurricane, the barometer rose steadily till the 25th, and has continued ever since above 29.700 at its morning maximum, corrected for temperature. This is high for June, and promises a continuance of the same state of affairs as we have recently enjoyed. - Ibid.

THE QUICKEST VOYAGE YET KNOWN .- We copy the follow-June 29. ing notice of the voyage of an American merchant to Hong Kong from New York viá Ceylon, as an instance of the marvellous rapidity with which travellers from the New World may make their way to the uttermost parts of the East. "An American merchant, bound for Ceylon, left New York on the 4th of April, in the Canada mail steamer, and arrived in Liverpool on the morning of the 19th. After transacting some business in Liverpool and London, he arrived at Southampton by the day mail train on the 20th, and immediately embarked on board the Ripon steamer, which was preparing to start for Alexandria with the Indian mail. This gentleman will reach his destination on Thus he will have travelled from the United States to China, a distance of nearly 15,000 miles, in seventy-two days. In a little more than two months he will have traversed the Atlantic and Indian Oceans, and the Mediterrancess, Red, and China Seas; call at England, Gibraltar, and Malta, in Europe; Alexandria and Suez, in Africa; and at Aden, Ceylon, Penang, Singapore, and Hong-Kong, in Asia. With the exception of passing through England and Egypt, the whole of his journey will have been performed by water, in British ships. The Peninsular and Oriental Company's servants never recollect a passenger from China who had been so recently in America; and it will probably be, for length and rapidity, the most extraordinary voyage ever performed." The proportionate periods of the voyage would be as follows :-

From New York to Liverpool ...... 15 days. Arrived at Galle on the 28th May ..... 34 Arrived at Hong-Kong on the 15th June 18

Total length of voyage 72 days, or, including stoppages, at the rate of about 2084 miles a day. - Ibid.

CHINA.

THE Achilles, with the London mail of April 25, reached Hong.

Kong June 13. Macao.—We annex a placard which appeared in the last issue of the China Mail. We are informed on very competent authority that Seu has positively ordered the Chinese to withdraw from Macao; this peremptory order was subsequent to the removal of most of the merchants and principal dealers, which has been going on steadily for months. We are persuaded that the much lauded policy of Senhor Amaral is most destructive to Macao, and unless he makes the amende honourable to China, and conciliates the offended mandarins, it will tumble about his head, and that without the Chinese firing a hostile shot. So long as the Hoppo was there the Portuguese were secured in a commercial privilege which Hong Kong has never possessed. By treaty our trade is confined to the five large ports, and vessels from the innumerable ports around us can only introduce cargo from this colony illicitly. But at Macao the Hoppo was authorised to grant passes to all the ports, and hence a considerable traffic (particularly in Straits' produce) which we have not yet been able to participate in. The liberal policy of Governor Amaral has deprived the settlement of this great commercial advantage, and we fear, unless he makes timely and ample concessions, it will gradually sink into decay. The government expenditure is on the smallest scale; but small as it is, if commerce leaves the port, there will be difficulty in raising a revenue from an impoverished populace, it being but too probable that the few wealthy families will abandon the settlement when it is no longer available for commercial pursuits:

A prohibitory agreement entered into by the inhabitants of the twentyfour villages, Kun-chau fu, and others, on the 10th day of the 4th intercalary month (May 31).

intercalary month (May 31).

The Portuguese having become profligate and outrageous, and committed iniquities without number, thus bringing upon us, the inhabitants of the said villages, great calamities, we can no longer forbear bringing the matter before the two high authorities, the Viceroy and the Licutenant Governor, who have kindly received us, and given us sound advice, and otherwise treated us with compassionate indulgence: we therefore trust that surely a day will commende when our demands will be attended to, and adequate measures be taken for our relief, and for the preservation of peace in our houses. Although there are prohibitions promulgated by the authorities, yet it behoves the people to issue their own, the more so because our feelings and connections are as closely united as the tongue is to our feelings and connections are as closely united as the tongue is to the teeth. We, therefore, have resolved to publish these prohibitions for general information, and for the repression of our sons and brothers, in order that peace may thereby be preserved:

for general information, and for the repression of our sons and brothers, in order that peace may thereby be preserved:

1st. Natives shall not be allowed to lead foreigners into the villages for the purpose of shooting; for, not knowing the way to the villages, they could not go thither unless there were natives to shew them the way; and they have thus gone beyond their limits; coming into the villages on horseback, and firing guns, they disturb and nlarm the women and children; they besides lay waste our lands and gardene, treading over them, and thus creating disturbances.

Wherefore it is now determined that those natives who may be found conducting foreigners into the villages, or carrying for them any articles, such as baskets, chairs, &c. shall be seized and delivered over to the authorities for punishment.

2nd. All our sons and brothers are nowforbidden to take goods to Macao for sale there. The foreigners, trusting to their own strength, and looking upon the Chinese as despicable beings, in all their dealings with the latter invariably try to reduce the prices of their pur-chase, and when they cannot succeed in striking a bargain on their own terms, they tax the Chinese with robbery, and thereupon take them to the Procurador's Office, where they have them punished as thieves with a hundred and more strokes of the rattan; and in order to be set free the Chinese are compelled to pay one dollar and two hundred cash, in default whereof they are again flogged, several having thereby been brought to their death. The authorities do not see into all this; and the people, what shall they do? We are all of us the sons of the Celestial Empire, how shall we therefore put up with such affronts from the foreigners of Macao? There are surely many ways for us to lead a happy life without being dependent on the foreigners, whereas those of our people who have gone to deal at Macao have been much molested, for which reason it is desirable that there should be a prohibition. Let all those, therefore, who oppose it be seized, with their goods, and handed over to the elders of their respective villages to be punished, and so shall this common agreement be respected.

3rd. It shall not be permitted to our sons and brothers to wait as servants on the Portuguese. It is the practice with these latter, when they engage Chinese servants, to promise and offer them salaries, which they afterwards do not pay for months together; and when required to do so, they, as covetous and crafty men, will say their servants have been robbing them, and on this plea turn them out of the house without paying them. Such a race of men, without any sense of justice or conscience, who can willingly serve? Will it not be better for every one to return to their places, and apply themselves to tilling their own lands, and reaping therefrom the fruits of their toil, lead a peaceful and profitable life? As to those women who, having lost all shame, have gone over to attend those women who, having lost all shame, have gone over to attend on the foreigners, they do not belong to our villages; but we wish the elders of their respective villages would prevent them from continuing to do so, and bringing disgrace to the Celestial Empire, then there will be incommensurable general good.

4th. Let us, the inhabitants of said villages, place mutual confidence in each other; and in the event of the foreigners coming to disturb and molest us in our own villages, let us unite our common efforts strenuously to oppose them.

CASE OF MR. TARRANT.—Mr. William Tarrant has had an answer to his memorial to Earl Grey. The Secretary for the Colonies rules that Mr. Tarrant receive his pay from the date of his suspension until his office was combined with another, in all about two months. After a vexatious delay of upwards of a year and a half, such is the redress in a pecuniary light; but as an acknowledgment of the injustice with which he was treated it is satisfactory, and may lead to further inquiry. Mr. Tarrant is not the first person who has been victimised for having had the courage to expose corruption in the colonies; but parliamentary attention is now directed to the distant possessions of the Crown, and there is a possibility of this very case being brought forward in illustration of the abuse of power exhibited in the every-day actions of the governors of the petty dependencies. Far be it from us (says the Friend of China) to assert that all or even the bulk of governors are corrupt or capricious, but Mr. Tarrant's treatment is sufficient proof that we have had one such in this colony.

CIRCULAR.

British Consulate, Canton, 1st June, 1849.

Gentlemen,-I beg leave to communicate to you the copy of a letter from her Majesty's Secretary for Foreign Affairs which has been sent to me by her Majesty's plenipotentiary at Hong-Kong, and you will oblige me by making its contents known to all cap-tains of British ships who may be disposed to give convoy to Chinese vessels.

I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

JOHN BOWRING,

H. B. M. Consul.

To the British Merchants, Canton.

Foreign Office, October 31, 1848. Sir,—I have received your despatch, No. 74, of the 29th July last, on the subject of a claim made against the Chinese authorities by Mr. Davidson, as owner of the British schooner Dido, for head money, for some pirates captured by that vessel; and I have to state to you that there can be no evil, but much good in this practice of giving convoy, but then the British subjects and vessels employed should obtain the sanction and authority of the Chinese who may be competent to legalise their acts Chinawards; and moreover they ought to make proper bargains beforehand with the persons who may employ them so as to provide for compensation in cases such as that mentioned in the enclosures in your despatch. The British consuls should not interfere in these matters, except in a case in which a British subject, properly authorised by the Chinese to act, should fail to obtain from the parties who employed him the pay or compensation to which by previous agreement he was entitled.—I am, &c.

CANTON, JUNE 22 .- Imports .- No improvement in the Import Market. Business continues extremely dull; the transactions of the month are scarcely worthy of notice, and sales to any extent could hardly be effected even at a reduction on present unsatisfactory rates. About 1,000 bales of Cotton Yarn have been forced on the market at prices below current rates; and 4,000 to 5,000 bales of Bombay Cotton have also been sacrificed for the purpose of effecting sales. Grey Shirtings continue heavy at last month's quotations; the sales of the month have been within 20,000 pieces. White Shirtings are commanding full prices at present, the stock being much reduced, and wholly in second hands; about 8,000 pieces have been sold at 2 dollars 60 cents to 3 dollars.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At the meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, on the 24th May, an abstract of a paper by Dr. Impey, being a description of a colossal Jain image, discovered in the Satpoorah range, was read-

The author states the figure to be nearly 100 feet high: it is, with one exception, the largest known, and certainly the one of greatest dimensions in India. The only others that have been noticed are of much smaller size, in the fort of Gwalior, and one near Goruckpoor, the height of which is not given, but, according to Mr. Prinsep, it is decidedly a figure of Boodh. At Beliyula there is a statue of Gomal Givara, upwards of seventy feet high, but the distinguishing peculiarity of the Bawunguj figure is, that it is essentially a rock image, cut in high relief out of the side of a hill, like the Bhuts of Bamyan, described best by Sir Alexander Burnes. The name Bawunguj, which has been given to this figure, is derived from its supposed height, of fifty-two guj; but this is much exaggerated; it is, in reality, 72 ft. 8 in. to a little below the knee, and as the body from the pubis to the vertex is 45 ft. 5 in., the whole ought, according to sculptural proportions, to be at least 90 ft. 10 in.; but its lower extremities are hidden by the debris which have fallen from the image itself, and from the hill. It is situated in the district of Burwanee (usually considered in Nimar), and on a spur of the Satpoorah range, which runs close to the town of that name. The hill above it is surmounted by the temple, of modern reconstruction; but it is surrounded by a wall, in which are thirty-seven recesses still remaining, containing figures of the Jain Tirthankers, the majority being those of Mahavira, the last deified saint, whose apotheosis took place 569 B.C. The whole ascent of the hill bears evidence of the Jain persuasion; images of Parswanath and others lying about every where and neglected opposite the Colossus. Several are very handsomely carved and sculp-tured, apparently subordinate to the great deity, the worship of which is neglected. It is in a niche by itself, perfectly naked, with no ornaments on or about it, and is of the Dejamber sect, one which is very prevalent and numerous in Central India. The temple is situated on the very summit of the hill, upwards of 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, and its present appearance is quite modern. Inside are twenty images, some erect, some seated; but the chief object of worship is the Paduka, or impressions of feet, a favourite characteristic of Mahavira: of these impressions there are four, two large and two small. In rear of the large temple there is a small choultry, also containing figures of the Jain Tirthankers, and one of either Sumati, a Tirthankeress, or else Bhuvani. All these would tend to the inference that the Temple and Colossus were dedicated to Mahavira; but if the latter were his, it would not be likely to be deserted, especially if his worship continued to be performed in the temple. Rishaba, the first Tirthanker, is the only other Dejamber Siddha, and there are many reasons for supposing the image to have been cut to his honour; but Dr. Impey thinks it is not quite clear which of the two is the presiding deity. The figures should be dug round at their feet, for it is there the chief events of the Deva's lives are represented. Inscriptions were found on the temple walls, one at each point of the compass, and one over the door, with comparatively modern dates St. 1,223 and St. 1,516; they are all written in the Balbood character, and the oldest state the temple to have been built by Ramchunder Muni, A.D. 1,166, and the sovereign's name is appended—Vaia Raja; but unfortunately no such king can be traced at that period. The most important inscription met with at Bawunguj, Dr. Impey states, was one which he picked up, engraved on a foot of Parswanath, which was lying in a heap of broken statues. Though comprising only three lines, it is very important, as implying a much older and more ancient form of language than that in which the inscriptions on the temple are written. It is in Pali, and difficult to read from its peculiarities; but, through the kindness of Dr. Wilson, the author has obtained its decipherment. Almost the whole sentence is in the Pali form of the Sanskrit, and one letter, the ha, 2nd line, seems to be conformable with the Guzerat character of the second century.

Dr. Impey concluded his paper with the description of a route for strangers to visit Bawunguj, without having to depend upon local inquiries. The best way is stated to be by Ackberpore, on the Nerbudds, from which travellers can drop down the river at all seasons to Chikulda in about twelve hours, and Bawunguj is not quite eight miles from the bungalow of that place. Another route is from Mhow and Indore, via Dhar and Bhopawur; this takes in the caves of Bang, and has that advantage; but the other is much the easier and better road.

Captain James Abbott has made the discovery of some remains of Greek sculpture in Potowar, which term he applies to all the table-land between the Indus and Jelum, bounded on the south by the salt range; but the name applies strictly only to the north-eastern portion.

He had heard of an old site, on the summit of a knoll on the left bank of a rivulet which escapes from the fountain of Kuttass, in a wild glen. A Mohamedan faqueer, whose ancestors had occupied this site for 300 years, denied that it contained any sculpture; but by degrees fragments of cornice, frieze, and pilaster turned up, and at length, on the under face of a block of stone, he found a head of Bacchus, or of Alexander in his character of Ammon! The drawing he has given of this head, though the latter is very Grecian in its features, does not, in our opinion, quite bear out his description.

At a town called Kala, four miles N.W. of Jelum, he found a beautifully sculptured column, which had been dug from the site of Bucephalia by a Brahman, and transported to a new temple at Kala, under the belief that a figure in a niche was the goddess Kali. "I perceived at once," observes Capt. Abbott, "that it was Grecian," the style being that which he calls "Indian Ionic." A horned human head he considers is manifestly Osiris or Ammon.

Having been recommended by the faqueer to visit Ramkata, called also Mullote and Shahgurli, where images are numerous, and many of them were still in their niches, he started thither:—

"At the southern brink of the table-land of Potowar, a small area, half a mile in length by a quarter of a mile in breadth, is scarped southward by precipices 200 feet in height, and northward by a pre-cipitous acclivity of some fifty feet, resembling upon a very diminished scale the site of Maundoo in Mulwa. The rocks are white limestone, full of sea-shells and masses of flint and agate. Graceful towers have been constructed on the northern face connected by walls of loose stones: and thus we have a fortress of some strength walls of loose stones: and thus we have a fortress of some strength were it preserved in repair. In the interior, near the southern declivity, at the highest point, stands a ruin which at first sight appeared to me that of a Gothic church—on approaching, my ideas were strangely confused: for here are fluted pilasters of Grecian order, surmounted with Persian capitals; and between them is a trefoil arch, containing the obelisk of Shiva, and surmounted by a Gothic gable. And the architraves are supported upon Grecian Gothic gable. And the architraves are supported upon Grecian pilasters, and on either side of the recess of the false door are curvi-linear entablatures filled with figures in Roman or Grecian armour, and upon the frieze are rows of alternate sphinx and warrior, and every cornice is Grecian, though often barbarously perverted, and as we gaze upon the fabric, we call to mind those wretched gingerbread temples in Bengal, in which Grecian pillars and cornices have been mixed up with Saracenic domes and minarets and obelisks peculiar to India. with Saracenic domes and minarets and obelisks peculiar to India. The work is in red freestone, but so obliterated by the elements and so defaced by Muhammelan hands, that much is left to conjecture: every head of every figure having been lopped away. In many places the sandstone is dissolved into a mass of red, ochrous sand. My first idea was, that I gazed upon a Buddhist temple built from the fragments of a Grecian fane. But more attentive consideration dispelled this impression; the details (the obelisks excepted) being all Grecian, though sadly lapsed into barbarity. The entablatures of the facade strangely resemble those uply rigmaroles which disfigure Itafaçade strangely resemble those ugly rigmaroles which disfigure Ita-lian churches. The building consists of a propylon eastward and the sekon just described, of which the only door faces the east. The façade on this side resembles that in the sketch, with a slight difference. The cell is a lofty, nearly square apartment of sandstone, cemented with lime, but not plastered. The roof is vaulted, but open at summit, having either been so constructed or since broken Muhammedan devotee. The sandstone within is in perfect preservation. The interior of the cell is wholly undecorated; but the inner walls north and south of the propylon are decorated with singular piles of sculpture resembling the exterior façade of the sekon. They seem to me to offer a key to so much of the style as is not Grecian—the abrupt slope of the upper gable and the mitigated slope of the eaves, presenting a correct outline of a Chinese or Tibetan temple, such as in the mountains we see constructed of timber. The whole seems to me the work of this Grecian colony after its subduction by Scythia,—their own taste being constrained by edict to conform to the general outline of their conqueror's temples."

Capt. Abbott has communicated to the Asiatic Society of Bengal some addenda to his account of the battle-field of Alexander and Porus, which are published in the Society's Journal for February.

He has discovered that the ruined fort, which he had supposed to be Aornos, upon the crest of Mount Malabunn, is called Balimah, and that there is another ruined fort, further north, upon the same crest, called Shah-kote, or 'The King's Castle.' "As this Balimah is immediately above Umm, we have here beyond a doubt the Umb Balimah to which Alexander moved his camp for the attack of Aornos: for it is scarcely possible that there should be a second union of two names which are so uncommon. Umb is on the western brink of the Indus, overshadowed by the Mahabunn and Balimah. And a camp at Umb (the highest point upon the Indus to which a camp can ascend) could be useful only for the assault of a fortress upon the Mahabunn. It seems therefore probable either that Shah kote is the Aornos of history, or that Aornos is merely a corruption of Awur (a fort), as supposed by Professor Wilson: and that it has been used in preference to the name Balimah, to distinguish it from the Umb Balimah where the camp was established. Immediately below Shah kote, the mountain, having been cleft by the Indus, forms a natural wall, of about 4,000 or 5,000 feet altitude, and as the attack seems to have been made from the river side, where Mahabunn has far more the character of a rock than of a mountain, it is easy to account for the appellation of 'rock' given it by the Greeks, to describe its extreme abruptness. It is common in this country to amalgamate together, for the sake of distinction, the names of two proximate villages or places. But as this Balimah is in the clouds, and Umb is in the river basin, it seems probable that in Alexander's day both belonged to the same chief, which is no longer the case: Balimah appertaining to the Suddoons, a race of Pathans, and Umb to Jehandad Khan, son of the celebrated Poyndah Khan, who so long held the Sikhs at Umb is the capital of that chief. Immediately opposite hav. and across the Indus the valley of that river is closed by projecting rocks called Durbund, and possibly so named by Alexander or his successors, after a similar process upon the coast of the Durbund is the only locality in this neighbourhood connected by tradition with the memory of Alexander, although the capital of Huzara (Sikundurpoor) still bears his name. little is known of the Mahabunn by persons living on this side the river, that all my inquiries for Balimah had proved futile until just now, when a visit from Jehandad Khan has given me the clue.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, August 21, 1849.

THE annexation of the Punjab to the British dominions in India invites attention to its rivers, -so remarkable a feature of its geography,-which, besides the resources they furnish, by means of irrigation, for agricultural purposes, offer so many natural highways for commerce. The most careless observer of the map could not overlook the facilities which such a country, traversed by five large streams, all uniting in one great avenue to the sea, affords for the transport and interchange of commodities, domestic and foreign. Much, however, must be known, and much must be done, before these physical advantages can be turned to account even by European science, which has neutralized, by the application of steam to navigation, the heretofore uncontrollable obstacles of winds and tides. The capabilities of rivers, their dangers and impediments, are not apparent, like those of roads, upon the surface; their bottoms must be examined, their channels and banks surveyed, and water-carriage is neither profitable nor easy where the population on the borders of a river is scanty, and towns and villages are yet to be built. This defect admits but of slow and gradual remedy; the survey of the five rivers can and doubtless will be immediately undertaken.

The great artery, the Indus, has already been surveyed by the late Sir A. Burnes, and by Lieut. Wood, of the Indian Navy; and the result has shown that the navigation of this remarkable river is subject to obstacles and inconveniences which detract greatly from its utility as a route for traffic. Mr. Wood, whose book, published some years back, contains much information respecting the geography and hydrography of the country watered by the Indus, has recently printed, for private circulation, a letter to the Chairman of the East-India Company on the navigation of that river, with especial reference to steam-vessels, the conclusions in which, he says, are "the result of some experience, reflection, and study."

The capabilities of the Indus for navigation, before it was surveyed, were, he observes, "highly coloured;" they are now known, and the most suitable description of steamer is "all but settled." The population in the valley of the Indus is poor; they have little taste for our manufactures, and few articles to exchange for them. There are not many large towns on its banks, and, at present, there is no trade by the Indus; little, if any, commerce is carried on between its towns, and there is no transit trade for the countries beyond the river, or even for the Punjab: "this intercourse has yet to be created." The supply of our cantonments in Sindh and the Punjab, the demands of the large cities of Bahawulpore, Mooltan, Peshawur, and Lahore, will, however, he thinks, "almost warrant a company's placing steamers upon the Indus," which will be yearly more frequented by passengers as well as traders.

Mr. Wood recommends that the suggestion of Sir A. Burnes, for the establishment of well-regulated fairs or marts in the valley of the Indus be adopted,—a custom prevalent and highly successful throughout Asia. He urges that the ferries should be well conducted, and that the navigation of the river should be free. Now that the countries through which the Indus flows are in our hands, steamers will be more generally useful, for commerce or war, than formerly; and he suggests that government steamers should be always in motion, exercising, by their apparent ubiquity, a salutary influence in checking crime. "Were a smart craft to visit in rotation the principal places, occasionally practising with rockets, shell, or shot, such an expedition would awe the evil-disposed, and impart confidence to the merchant."

The report given by Mr. Wood of the navigable character and properties of the Indus is not, upon the whole, very encouraging. It is navigable from the sea to Attock, 942 miles, and even a few miles north of that fortress, above its junction with the Cabool river, a tributary which further extends the advantages of water-carriage to the west.

As high as the influence of the tide extends, namely, to Nooroo-kanood, below Tatta, there is an ample depth of water; but above this, the navigation is intricate till beyond the Delta, owing to the great expansion of the river's bed, and the difficulty of selecting the right channel. The best portion of the river is from the Delta to Sehwan; from thence to Roree or Bukker, the depths are irregular. From Bukker to Mittun, a great change takes place; the stream, though at some places found in a single bed, is oftener divided into two or more parallel branches, from 400 yards to 4 miles apart; and in the former case, the channels are mazy and intricate. From Mittun to Dera Ismael Khan, the navigation is much the same; and between Dera Ismael Khan and Kalabagh the difficulties increase. From thence to Attock, the upward navigation is restricted to the winter months, and the downward voyage from April to October is hazardous and rarely attempted. The current is eight miles an hour in the freshes; three when the river is low.

If these were all the impediments, they might be disregarded; but the river has many peculiarities. Deep channels are found to extend for many miles, running parallel to each other, and separated by water-covered sand-banks.

If the navigable channel at starting is on the right bank, it is found to change to the other side, and much attention is required to detect the change, which does not always take place at one particular spot, but is imperceptible, and only to be discovered by a decrease of soundings.

To suit these peculiarities in the navigation, and the gales of wind, which are experienced throughout the whole line of the Indus, the native craft and boats are expressly adapted, being of simple construction, varying in form and rigging according to the portions of the river to be navigated. Mr. Wood suggests some improvements in their framework, not their figure, which he considers to be, "perhaps, the best that could be given, considering the kind of navigation in which they are employed."

In treating of the steam-vessels adapted for the Indus, he enumerates their qualities as follows: Great power, strength, light draft, flat-bottom, a flat or spoon-shaped bow, and good steerage. The Napier, already upon the river, though not perfect, he prescribes as a model-boat. Such a steamer, Mr. Wood thinks, would accomplish against the stream 100 miles between sunrise and sunset.

We must not overlook the inundations of the Indus, which, like other large rivers in tropical countries, is subject to a periodical increase, beginning to rise in March and to fall in September. The fertility of the valley of the Lower Indus is entirely owing to the yearly swell of the river. In its inundations, however, the Indus exhibits eccentricities. One year the country on its right bank is deluged, whilst on the opposite side there is a deficiency of water for the common purposes of irrigation. Unlike other rivers, its inundation is often partial, and at the height of its freshes the Persian wheel may be seen watering fields on the verge of its banks. The river, up to Kalabagh, has double, or inner and outer, banks; the first are as changeable as the navigable channels; the latter as permanent as the river's course; the inner banks form its bed in the cold season, when the water is low; the outer hem in the floods and freshes of an opposite season.

The complaint that so noble a river should have no port accessible to sea-going vessels of burthen, Mr. Wood considers more imaginary than real. If, indeed, the merchant is necessitated to employ ships of 400 and 500 tons, they cannot enter the river, and he must land his goods at Kurrachee; but there are ready means of water-carriage in the multitudes of vessels, drawing six or seven feet, which frequent the mouths of the Indus. If a land-portage is unnecessary merely to give free access to the river, it is equally useless by way of avoiding the difficulties of navigation in any part of its course. "The navigation of the Delta," he observes, "is certainly intricate, but the difficulties are not so insurmountable as to render a portage necessary. The only danger to be apprehended, in navigating the Lower Indus, arises from falling banks, and what are called in America 'snags,' or 'sawyers;' these are trees, one end of which has got entangled in a sandbank, while the other is buoyed up by the stream."

These are the observations of a practical scientific man upon the great river which is now the boundary of our Indian territories on the west, pointing out the physical difficulties attending its navigation, and suggesting means of obviating them.

BENGAL is at length to have a railway; the negotiations between the East-India Company and the Board of Control on the one hand, and the East-India Railway Company on the other, have resulted in an arrangement, the terms of which, given in detail in another column, are to the following effect:

The capital of one million is to be paid into the treasury of the East-India Company by instalments within two years, and, upon the amount paid in, that body is to guarantee and pay an interest of 5 per cent. The railway, which is to commence not further than ten miles from Calcutta, in a direction towards the Upper Provinces, and to be completed with all practicable speed, is to be constructed under the immediate control of the East-India Company, which control is to extend not merely to the arrangements and construction of the line, and a virtual dictation in all the engineering and architectural conditions, but to the altering at will of the character and direction of the line, with an authority to execute needful repairs at the expense of the Railway Company, and, upon manifest default of stipulated trusts, to assume possession of the whole line and works upon three months' notice. The East-India Company are, moreover, to have a controlling voice in the regulation of trains and settlement of fares, and their troops and stores are to be conveyed at the lowest rates. In addition to the guaranteed interest of 5 per cent. upon the paid-up capital, the East-India Company engage to grant, free of charge, a lease for 99 years of the land required for the line, and to take the line, if surrendered, at six months' notice, reimbursing the proprietors their expended capital. On the other hand, the East-India Company are empowered to purchase the concern at the end of 25 or 50 years. The Railway Company are interdicted from raising money or increasing their capital without the sanction of the Court of Directors; the accounts of the Company are to be publicly audited, and the East-India Company are empowered to appoint a director of the Railway Company, who is to exercise at his discretion a veto in all proceedings at the Railway boards. Of the surplus of the net receipts, after discharging the guaranteed interest, half is to belong to the shareholders; the remainder is to meet liabilities; and if this surplus should exceed 10 per cent., it is to be brought down to that amount by a reduction of fares. At the end of 99 years, the railway will devolve upon the East-India Company, as their property, the stock, &c. being purchased at a valuation.

Upon considering these terms, one can hardly fail to be struck with the insignificant part which the Railway Company has really to play in this great undertaking. They are, indeed, to supply the specified capital by instalments, the East-India Company guaranteeing to them 5 per cent. interest (though they could have borrowed the money at a lower rate); but all matters connected with the direction, construction, and repair of the line, the train, the fares, the accounts, will be under the absolute control of the East-India Company.

This state of things, however, is the necessary consequence of the anomalous character of the undertaking, which the shareholders refused to conduct upon the ordinary principle, requiring, in return for the mere advance of capital, a guarantee against risk. The East-India Company and the Board of Control, therefore, were bound to provide not only against the ordinary effects of railway mismanagement in this country, and the new and peculiar evils it might engender in India, but against the tendency which all guarantees have to foster apathy and negligence, and to encourage waste and imprudence.

On a late occasion we noticed an interesting Report by Mr. Bourne, on the momentous subject of Indian river navigation,* in which a method is propounded of navigating some thousands of miles of the rivers of India by steam power, at a considerable rate of speed, however mutable the channels of the streams may be, or however treacherous the shoals. It was, of course, to be expected that the announcement of so important an achievement, unaccompanied by any explanation of the means by which it was to be accomplished, should be set down as impossible by those who do not think it necessary to understand a plan to warrant a judgment of its merits; but the question of practicability will now be set at rest by the publication of the drawing of the invention, which has just appeared in the Illustrated London News,—since the arrangements are so simple, and so manifestly calculated to accomplish their object, that it is impossible, after understanding what they are, to resist a conviction in their complete success. The only wonder, indeed, now will be, that expedients of such obvious applicability should have remained so long unapplied; and, as it appears to be a physical necessity that this new system of navigation should be introduced into India. we hope it will be introduced with an alacrity commensurate with its importance. If Mr. Bourne can accomplish the object he proposes of navigating the several large rivers of India connecting the interior with the sea, with a cargo of 250 tons upon 12 inches draught of water, and with a speed of 15 miles an hour, there can be no controversy that he will have made the grandest stride ever made towards the regeneration of India, by developing her slumbering resources; and that this great object can be accomplished by the means proposed, appears to be nearly equally certain. Upon this point, however, our readers will be able to judge for themselves, after we have laid before them a brief explanation of the nature of the invention.

It is indispensable to the useful navigation of the rivers of India that the vessel should have a very light draught of water, and it is indispensable to the profitable use of steamvessels, for commercial purposes, that they should carry a large cargo; so that the first part of the problem presenting itself for solution is, how to carry a large cargo-say of 250 tons-upon a draught of water, say of 12 inches. Now, it is very well known that the carrying power of a vessel depends upon the quantity of water she displaces; and if the displacement cannot be chiefly in depth, which would make too great a draught of water, it must be either in the breadth or in the length. A vessel, with her chief displacement in the direction of her breadth, could not be propelled through the water with any considerable velocity: therefore the displacement must be mainly in the length. Here, too, however, there is an obvious limit. It is clear that a narrow, shallow, and very long vessel, would be apt to break her back if getting aground upon an uneven surface; and the vessel therefore must have certain joints in her length to prevent this accident, or must consist of a number of barges joined together like a railway train. but so articulated to one another by spherical joints as to obviate any material resistance from the water striking the front of each compartment. It is clear that a vessel or train constructed upon this principle may carry a large cargo upon a light draught of water at a considerable rate of speed; and as it will be seen from the drawing that this is the construction Mr. Bourne has adopted, there certainly does not appear to be anything very difficult in acquiescing in the main in his conclusions. Whether, indeed, the draught will be exactly 12 inches with 250 tons, and the speed 15 miles an hour, are questions we cannot undertake to decide, for such specific questions cannot be settled upon any general grounds, but must be determined upon a reference to the scantlings and dimensions adopted; but we see no reason to doubt that these results will turn out precisely according to Mr. Bourne's expectation; and Messrs. Boulton and Watt, the eminent engineers, to whom the question has been referred, are clearly of this opinion. It is well known that upon the rivers of the continent steamers are to be found drawing only 12 inches of water, and if the steam compartment, or locomotive of the train, can be made with so small a draught, much more can the appended waggons. The load, indeed, has only to be distributed among the barges of the train, or such a number of barges has to be employed that the draught of 12 inches will not be exceeded; and Mr. Bourne reckons that with this draught each barge will carry 50 tons in addition to its own weight.

But although the power of carrying a large cargo on a small draught of water, at a considerable rate of speed, forms an important part of the problem of opening the rivers of India to the quickening influences of steam, it does not constitute the whole problem, since a vessel will still be liable to stick fast upon shoals in the river whatever be her draught of water; and it is therefore necessary to devise suitable means for overcoming this impediment. Mr. Bourne accordingly has so contrived the paddle-wheels of his steamer, that they may be projected beneath the bottom of the vessel until they gear firmly with the ground'; and the engine being then set on with a multiplying power, the train is dragged slowly, but with irresistible force over the obstruction. Each of the barges is provided with a pair of wheels capable of being worked by a capstan-motion, so as to aid the engine in this operation, and at the same time distribute the strain, and the whole of the barges are trussed longitudinally so as to support the extremities in an effectual manner when the centre rests upon the wheels. By this arrangement an adequate power is at any moment available for carrying the train over an accidental shallow, so as to enable it to regain the channel without delay, thereby obviating the serious detention occasioned by vessels sticking helplessly upon shoals in the river without any effectual means of getting themselves off. Although the use of the wheels for carrying the train over the shoals will be but seldom required, and then only for a short period, it appears to be indispensable to the performance of voyages with that regularity which gives steam locomotion its chief value, that such a contrivance should be at all times available, since the amount of detention consequent upon sticking in the river could not else be predicted.

There is only one other point in connection with this contrivance to which we feel it necessary to refer, and that is the mode of steering. It is clearly indispensable that the power should be possessed of guiding the train in any required direction with promptitude and ease, since without this power, so long a flotilla would be very unmanageable. It would be easy to furnish each barge with a rudder of its own, whereby its movements would be guided, and the train would thereby be controllable with the same facility as the several vessels of the train which a tug steamer often draws after her, and in guiding which, when the steamer is very powerful, relatively with the load drawn, no difficulty is at present experienced. But the mode of articulating the constituent barges of the train by hinge joints, obviously enables a more complete system of steering to be adopted than where each barge has a rudder of its own, for it enables such a purchase to be applied at the joint as will at any moment set the barges of the train at any required angle with one another, whereby each barge becomes the rudder to the one preceding it. By this arrangement the train may at any moment be thrown into a circular, or even, if necessary, into an S form, so as to enable it to pass banks or bends in the river with the same facility as if the length of the train did not exceed that of the longest of its constituent barges. The small draught of water of the train will virtually take the crookedness out of many of the channels, since a vessel of a small draught may often run over a shallow part, where a vessel of a larger draught would have to wind round it so as to keep the deepest water; and when this alleviating circumstance is added to the rapid control in the steerage which the use of a train of rudders confersfor every barge has a very long and consequently a very powerful rudder notwithstanding the shallow draught-it will be clear that in whatever else the arrangement may be deficient, it has at least the power of moving with promptitude in any required direction. The force necessary to deflect any of the barges to any required extent, by the mode proposed, is just the same as if a common rudder were used for the purpose, since, setting friction aside, it is an axiom in mechanics that the same amount of power will produce the same physical effect, whatever mechanical expedients may be employed to transmit the power. A very long rudder indeed is moved through a given arc with more difficulty than a very short one, but it produces an effect greater in the same proportion. The long rudder, indeed, will accomplish any required deflection in a short arc, while a short rudder needs a long arc to effect the same object, and the size of the arc required being inversely as the length of the rudder, it follows that about the same amount of power is necessary to steer the vessel under either modification.

EAST-INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

We believe that we can now acquaint our readers with the final terms of agreement between the East-India Railway Company and the Court of Directors. With the general principles which were to regulate this compact the public has been long familiar, nor can we add that in the revised conditions here subjoined we have been able to discover any adequate explanation of the delay which has arisen in bringing the transactions to a close. Without entering, however, upon this less agreeable part of the subject, we will proceed at once to the specifications of a railway undertaking now framed by the experience of five instructive years.

The East-India Railway Company is to start with a capital of 1,000,000l. sterling, which is to be paid into the Treasury of the East-India Company by the following instalments. A deposit of 60,000l. has already been made, which still stands to the credit of the shareholders with the East-Indian Treasury, and the expenses incurred in prosecution of the undertaking, amounting up to the 28th of last March to 33,600l., are also permitted to count as portion of the capital; so that the sum remaining to be provided is only 906,400%. Of this sum 106,400% is to be forthcoming within four calendar months from the date of the deed, and the remaining amount is to be paid up in such portions and at such times as shall be assented to by the East-India Company, after a rate of not less than 300,00% per annum. This capital is to bear an interest of five per cent. guaranteed and payable by the East-India Company, and upon it the Railway Company is to draw, from time to time, for such sums as the proper execution of their works can be duly shown to require.

From these funds a railway is to be constructed under the immediate direction and control of the East-India Company. It is to commence either at Calcutta or at some spot within ten miles of that city, and is to take a direction towards the upper provinces—the first section being so laid down that it may admit of being continued either to Rajmahal or the more distant station of Mirzapore. Over the arrangement and construction of this line the East-India Company is to exercise a supervision amounting to a virtual dictation of all the engineering and architectural conditions involved in the work, and as the project is avowedly experimental, a power is also reserved to the Indian Government of altering at pleasure either the character or direction of the line itself. Upon its completion, which is to be effected with all practicable speed, the East-India Company is to have a controlling voice in the arrangement of trains and the settlement of fares, and the Government of India is to be a favoured party in all transactions of traffic. The mails, postbags, and post-office servants are to be carried free of charge, and all officers, troops, and military stores of the Company are to be conveyed either at the lowest rates or at rates lower than those chargeable for ordinary passengers and goods of a similar character. Should the Railway Company neglect the needful repairs, &c., of the line and buildings, the East-India Company is authorized to execute such works itself, and stop the costs thereof out of the interest or other moneys payable to the railway proprietary; and it is further invested, by way of general security for the execution of the stipulated trusts, with power, upon manifest default, of assuming possession of the whole line and works, after giving three months' notice of such intention.

Such are the covenants of the shareholders, amounting, it will be seen, to a virtual renunciation of their free agency throughout the pending operations. In return for such concessions the East-India Company, first, as we have mentioned, guarantees five per cent. interest on the paid-up capital. It next supplies, free of charges, either direct or indirect, a lease for ninety-nine years of all the land required for the line. It stipulates, of course, for the exercise, when required, of its sovereign powers in promoting the general well-doing of the concern; and finally, it leaves with the shareholders the option of surrendering the line, at a fair valuation, upon giving, at any period, six months' notice-the East-India Company being bound upon such notice to accept the surrender, and reimburse the proprietary for their certified expenditure of capital. At the same time, however, it is invested with a compensatory right of purchasing the entire concern, at its own option, upon the expiration either of the first twenty five or the first fifty years of the ninety-nine years' term.

We have not chosen to enumerate among the concessions made by the shareholders the peculiar powers of supervision reserved to the Indian Government, since our home experience of the last five years is amply sufficient to prove that such re-strictions tend vastly more to the well-being than the detriment of a railway proprietary. The provisions, however, on this head are far too significant to be altogether omitted from a prospectus of the undertaking. The Railway Company is expressly inter-dicted, without the consent and sanction of the Court of Directors first obtained, from raising any moneys except by legitimate calls, from issuing any extension shares, and from increasing the amount of their capital. What class of dealings are precluded by these clauses but too many of our readers will be enabled from their own recollections to specify. Nor will the order remain a dead letter. A public audit of the Company's accounts is expressly insisted on, and it is to be so conducted as "to exhibit thereby fully and truly the state of their affairs and proceedings." In addition to these precautionary stipulations, the East-India Company is empowered to appoint at its own discretion any one person, not being a shareholder, to be a director of the Railway Company, who "is to be entitled in all things to act as such, and to exercise at his discretion a right of veto in all proceedings whatsoever of the Railway Boards." Such provisions as these, coupled with the right of possession as a remedy, must surely render impracticable any such doings as we have lately witnessed at home.

Presuming, however, all things to work smoothly, the current operations of the line and the ultimate disposition of the property will be regulated by the conditions following. The net receipts of the line are to be applied, in the first instance, to the discharge of the interest of five per cent. guaranteed by the East-India Company; and the surplus, if any, is to be divided into two parts, one of which is to belong to the shareholders, and the other to be appropriated to such liabilities as those just mentioned; but, in case the net profit on the outlay shall be found to exceed ten per cent., it is to be brought down to that level by a reduction of fares. At the conclusion of the term of ninetynine years the land leased for this period, with the railway thereon, is to revert to the East-India Company as their property, the stock, &c., being purchased by them at a valuation made by referees. The terms, therefore, of the whole transaction would be as follows:-Supposing the undertaking, under the arrangements which we have described, to pay from its own receipts less than five per cent. on the outlay, then there is the guarantee of the East-India Company up to that special amount. If it pays any positive percentage, that percentage will be raised to five per cent. by the guarantee; if its accounts show a balance on the other side of the page, the deficit will be made up so far as five per cent. will go, and the shareholder will receive four, three, two, or one per cent, for his investment, according as the loss shall have been one, two, three, or four per cent. by the actual working of the line. This loss, it is true, may be the whole five percent, or even more, in which case the shareholders will either receive nothing or have something to pay; but this state of things, it should be remembered, is always terminable at six months' notice. Supposing the concern, in the next place, to pay exactly five per cent., then there will be just that dividend without any obligation incurred. Lastly, supposing the net receipts to show a profit of more than five per cent., then half such surplus, up to a ten per cent. total, is added to the five per cent. dividend arising from the guarantee; so that the shareholders may possibly receive 7½ per cent. for their money, will almost certainly receive five per cent., and cannot under any circumstances be debarred from winding up the affair at their own discretion, if the returns should be too low to please them. We could offer many remarks on the general bearing and prospects of this undertaking, but we have preferred confining ourselves to an intelligible statement of facts, and leaving the conclusion to be drawn by our readers themselves .- Times.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

The Parliament was prorogued by Commission on the 1st August. In the Speech of the Lords Commissioners there is the following paragraph relating to India:-

" We are commanded by Her Majesty to congratulate you on the happy termination of the war in the Punjab. The exertions made by the Government of India, and the valour displayed by the army in the field, demand Her Majesty's warmest acknowledgments.

MISCELLANEOUS,

THE MOULTAN PRIZE-MONEY. - The right to the Moultan prize-money has given rise to considerable discussion in India. Lord Gough has taken the subject up on behalf of the army generally. In a letter from the adjutant-general, his lordship expressed his opinion that the officers of the Bombay column have equal right, with the Bengal army, to appoint a prize agent, and that the division order of the 7th September last, appointing Brevet-Major Wheeler and Brevet-Captain Whish prize agents is now null and void, the siege having commenced de novo with a newly organized force. His lordship also considered that whatever might be captured at Moultan, and be de-clared to be prize property by the Government, is claimable by the whole army of the Punjab, the troops before that fortress being a component part of that army, and not a separate independent force. We believe we may add that, if it could have been avoided, Lord Gough had no desire to share in the prize, and would, in common with the army, have been better pleased to receive the usual batta; but a great principle is involved in the question, and the public service would undoubtedly suffer if a detached part, at the same time a component part, of an army was allowed to secure to itself the prize which may by chance fall into its power. Every one, under such circumstances, would endeavour to rush to the field of action, and by that means produce the most disastrous results. - Morning Chronicle.

INDIAN COTTON.—The shipment of cottons recently received by the Commercial Association from the Coimbatore district, and which was forwarded to them by direction of the East-India Company, continues to excite much interest among the spinners in this district. The quality of the different kinds is in general highly approved; and we understand that fully one-half of the shipment of 871 bales has already been sold, at prices quite equal to those at which the different samples were valued by Mr. John Brown, and which we recently published. The shipment expected from Tinnevelly has not yet been received. Manchester Guardian.

CEYLON RAILWAY. - The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on the 31st July, at the office of Messrs. Wilson and Harrison, Copthall Buildings, Mr. Wm. Tindall in the chair. The report stated that the sum realized by the payment of the call of 5s. per share amounted to 1,858l. This amount has enabled the directors to discharge all outstanding claims upon the company, with the exception of 407l. advanced by the directors, and for which they are content to remain creditors on the existing assets of the company, waving all personal claim on the proprietors. The offices have been relinquished, the books, plans, sections, and other property of the company deposited in charge of the solicitors, and expenses of every kind put an end to. In consequence of communications received from the Government, the directors recommend the suspension of operations for at least another year. The directors recommend that the winter halfyearly meeting be dispensed with for the present; that the undertaking be not proceeded with until sanctioned by a general meeting of the proprietors; that each individual proprietor, who, if the operations of the company be resumed, should be unwilling to pay further calls, be empowered to obtain the forfeiture of his shares, and thereby retire and relieve himself of all further liabi-The directors consider themselves virtually pledged to those proprietors who have paid the last call to secure them against any further compulsory contribution, and they have thought it right to declare forfeited the shares of those proprietors whose calls have not been recovered, and thus to secure to those who have fulfilled their engagements the exclusive advantage of the recognised position of the undertaking. The accounts to the 30th of June showed that 2,755l. had been received, and 2,677l. expended, leaving a balance in hand of 28L in cash and 50L the value of instruments, together 78l., to meet liabilities to the extent of 407l. The report was adopted, and the recommendations contained therein were approved and ordered to be carried into effect, after which the retiring directors, Messrs.W. Tindall, J. G. Frith, and J. P. Wilson, were re-elected, as were also the retiring auditors.

GAUGE OF RAILWAYS IN AUSTRALIA. - It has been determined, on the recommendation of the railway commissioners, to adopt the national, or narrow gauge, of 4 feet 8½ inches, for railways in the Australian colonies. The commissioners, in railways in the Australian colonies. their reports to Lord Grey upon this subject, state that they believe the gauge of 4 feet 82 inches will be found sufficiently wide for all the requirements of newly-settled colonies for a long period, and that, as the Australian colonies will most probably be for some time dependent on the mother-country for the working stock of their railways, there will be an advantage in being able to order engines exactly similar to some of those in use in this country. They are of opinion, at the same time, that where it is necessary to provide for a large passenger traffic, and speed exceeding forty miles an hour is to be obtained, the wider gauge, by allowing a greater evaporative power to be given to the en-gines, would afford an advantage. This was in reply to a pro-posal by Lord Grey for adopting the 5 feet 3 inches, or Irish gauge.

NEW MAP OF THE PUNJAB

AND SIKH TERRITORIES.

Drawn by JOHN WALKER. On One Sheet, price 5s., or in a Case, 6s.

"A new Map of these districts has just been published by Messrs. ALLEN and Co., of Leadenhall Street, upon which apparently great care has been bestowed. The Map is very clearly printed, and the scenes of the military operations, to which so much interest is at present attached, are laid down with such perspicuity, that it would be easy to follow almost every march of the army. The Map is said to have been compiled from the most authentic sources of information."—Times, March 1, 1849.

"A new Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, just completed by Messrs.

ALLEN, and compiled from the most authentic sources of information, with great care, contains all the places mentioned in the accounts of the military operations. At the present moment, it is a most valuable publication, and we heartily recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

Meartily recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

"Messrs. Allen have just issued a finely-engraved Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, with due attention to the spots where our gallant troops have so valiantly fought. Who, at the present moment, would not pore over such a Map,—with interest point out where the brave Cureton fell, or where Edwardes earned the wreath that now adorns his youthful brow? Or, if we take a more painful glance, how many mothers, sisters, friends, will not, with mourned eyes, wander in their imagination along the banks of the Chenab, and mark the spot upon the Map where a son, a brother, or a friend lies buried in an honourable grave on the bloody field of Chillianwallah? And such a Map was wanting, and Messrs. Allen's have at once provided one with great care and skill. This Map folds up in a neat cover, and can be carried in the pocket."—Morning Chronicle, March 6, 1849.

"Mesers. ALLEN'S Map is mounted on cloth, and compactly folded in a book-cover. The whole of the places on the banks of the Five Rivers are carefully and accurately indicated. The progress of the campaigns can be traced without the slightest difficulty."—United Service Gazette, March 10, 1849.

"This new Map of the Punjab, which has just been completed, is compiled from the latest and most authentic sources of information, and is unquestionably the fullest and most perfect Map of that, at the present period, most interesting district of India hitherto published. It has evidently been executed with great care, and contains all the places named in the accounts of the recent military operations clearly laid down."—Herald, March 14, 1849.

Progress of the PUNJAB, and of the Rise and Progress of the Sect and Nation of the Sikhs, including a full Account of the Military Operations on the Banks of the Sutlej in 1846, and the Proclamations and Treaties of the Governor-General of India relating thereto. By THOMAS THORNTON, Esq. 2 vols. post 8vo. cloth lettered, price 21s.

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlej, or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—it is valuable for present and permanent reference.....Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical sudent, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh."—John Bull.

"The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the diligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

"It is an authentic work, and its statements are perfectly trustworthy. In-deed, it will be necessary for every one having a library to add this to the his-torical department, while the miscellaneous reader will find a powerful claim in its novel and stirring information."—Cheltenham Journal.

The Proprietors of this Dentifrice pledge themselves that its efficacy in preserving and embellishing the teeth far surpasses anything of the kind every yet offered to the public, and has, in consequence, obtained its selection by her Majesty the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s.99. per box. The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 2th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. #### LANGUAGES. ORIENTAL

HINDUSTANI, PERSIAN, ARABIC, SANSKRIT, &c., TAUGHT, ON MODERATE TERMS,

AT NO. 58. BURTON CRESCENT, FROM 10 A.M. TO 1 P.M.,

Professor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris; and author of the following Works, just published on the HINDUSTANI & PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

DICTIONARY

HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

"If condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable,—if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forber's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the paronas and students of Hindustani literature."—Friend of India, October 19, 1848.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE apprehensions which the last mail inspired, of a war with Maharajah Gholab Sing, are happily banished by the intelligence now received, whence it appears that the whole story, though very circumstantial, of the discovery of that chief's treachery, the demand of his artillery and his refusal to surrender it, is entirely without foundation. The Maharajah and the British Government were never, it is now said, upon more friendly terms. The apparent backwardness on the part of Gholab Singh to render us effectual aid in our contest with the insurgents is attributed to a fear that his troops might have proved unfaithful, and his subjects refractory. The formation of two moveable brigades, at Wuzeerabad and Peshawur, is accounted for upon another hypothesis. It seems that there have been some disturbances in Cashmere; that the people of the lower Hills are in revolt against Gholab Singh, whose army is employed in the north; and it is supposed that these brigades are intended to act, if necessary, against the Cashmere insurgents, either on our own account, or as allies of the Maharajah.

Another statement contained in the papers brought by the last mail is contradicted by the later intelligence namely, that the Sikhs were unwilling to enter our service—whereas it appears that they are enlisting rapidly.

The most prominent feature of the news by this mail is the conclusion of the trial of Moolraj, who has been found guilty of all the charges alleged against him, and sentenced to suffer death. The Court has, however, recommended him to mercy, on the ground that he was "the victim of circumstances." The opinion is, that the capital sentence will not be carried into effect, and it is even asserted that it has been commuted to imprisonment for life in Chunar fort. Moolraj, it is said, heard his sentence in silence, and betrayed no emotion. Great praise is justly given to the defence by Captain Hamilton, which is of great length. He made a very skilful use of the personal qualities of the prisoner, who had nothing of the truculent assassin about him;-"a man of mild aspect, gentlemanly presence, pleasing features, and an eye beaming with spirit and intelligence," he observed, "might have swerved from his allegiance, but could not have been guilty of foul treachery."

We have inserted a very copious abstract of the evidence upon this important proceeding, the first instance in which a foreigner of the rank of Moolraj has been brought to trial before a purely British Court. Some remarks upon this proceeding will be found in a subsequent page.

Letters from Peshawur mention a report that Dost Mahomed and his brother, Sooltan Mahomed, meditated an attack; but no credit was given to it.

The affairs of the Nizam continue in an unquiet and embarrassed state. His minister makes no progress in devising ways and means to satisfy the claim of the British Government. The present revenues of the country are not adequate to its discharge, nor can they ever be so long as retrenchment and reduction are not introduced in the expenditure of the State, and the minister's measures for such introduction are thwarted by his master. The city of Hyderabad was in an unquiet state on the morning of the 13th July. One of the Princes, a brother of the Nizam, straitened by non-payment of his salary for a very lengthened period, repaired at midnight to the Mecca Mosque, and on the tombs of his ancestors vowed never to quit the place till his arrears were paid.

The local intelligence from the Presidencies is scanty. Some eccentric remarks of the new Commander-in-Chief (Sir Charles Napier) upon the proceedings of certain courts-martial, have attracted notice in the journals. For example: to the proceedings of a general court, which acquitted a private in a Queen's regiment of a charge of murder, the Commander-in-Chief appended the following note:—

Confirmed,—I cannot say approved, for I never read such inefficient proceedings in my life. Court, officiating Judge Advocate, and evidence—all inefficient? The prisoner must return to his duty.

A general order issued by Sir Charles, relative to applications by officers for leave of absence, and to quit their posts in anticipation of such leave being granted, has excited a good deal of uneasiness. It is likewise said that Sir C. Napier's attention has been aroused by some very disgraceful affairs connected with gambling in the army, and that he has determined to put down, as far as in him lies, the practice of this pernicious vice.

The Saugor and Nerbudda territories have been made over to the charge of the Madras army, though the matter has not as yet been definitely arranged.

A prevalent report, that the Supreme Council would be removed to the north-west provinces, is contradicted by the Harkaru.

The affairs of the Benares Bank have now been fully disclosed; the assets, it is said, will be sufficient to meet the claims of creditors, but the shareholders will lose everything—their whole capital is gone; the directors were the chief borrowers. One of these, Colonel Pew, of the Bengal army,—a man who might at one time have retired from the service on 10,000l. a-year,—has just filed his schedule in the Court of Bankruptcy, his debts amounting to 260,000l.—incurred entirely by speculation. The Ganges Steam Navigation Company, to which a considerable portion of the funds of the bank was lent, has narrowly escaped a similar fate. Three or four of the Directors of the Benares Bank, who are members of the Company's service, are, it is said, to be subjected to the ordeal of a court-martial.

The Governor-General, Lord Gough, and Sir C. Napier, are at Simla. The Bishop of Calcutta had been suffering severely from sickness. Sir W. Gomm was still at Calcutta: the accounts given of the nature of his appointment are conflicting. According to one of these, he was directed to proceed to India as Lieutenant-General on the staff, with the view of taking command in the Punjaub, and getting rid of Lord Gough. According to another account, he landed with the commission of Commander-in-Chief from the Queen in his pocket, and was assured that he would find that of the Court of Directors awaiting him: in place of this, he found Sir C. Napier in his room. The Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Bombay are in the Deccan—Sir Henry Pottinger is at Madras, Sir Geo. Berkeley at Bangalore.

This is the sum of the intelligence from British India, which, in the season of the monsoon, is usually barren of local incidents.

TRIAL OF MOOLRAJ.

(Concluded from last Mail.) Sixth day, June 6.

Bunsee Dhur, a Brahmin, resident of Athowlie, near Allygurh, deposed,—When Agnew Saheb left Lahore to go to Mooltan by water, I accompanied him, hoping to be employed by him. On arriving near Mooltan, we remained for one day at Raj-Ghat, at which place no vakeel or messenger arrived from Moolraj. On the following day we all went to the Eedgah, and there remained until night. Moolraj paid no visit to the Sahehs during the day, but in the evening arrived, and was received by the Sahebs in the tents of Khan Singh. The next day the two Sahebs and Khan Singh went to the fort, and were shown ower it by Moolraj. After inspecting everything, the Sahebs placed sentries at different parts of the fort, beside those of Moolraj. On leaving the fort, when the whole party arrived at the Kummur Kota gate, which is outside the Shurkhee gate, the dewan made his salaam to the gateway. At this time Moolraj was on the right hand of Saheb, Anderson was on his left, and to the left of Anderson was Khan Singh. When emerging from the gate, the dewan turned his head for a moment, and then galloped away. A person who was seated on the ground, leaning on the outer side of the door, at this moment got up, and wounded Agnew in the side. He fell from his horse to the ground on the side nearest to Anderson, and with some difficulty extricated his left foot from the stirrup. He got up and struck, with a stick he had in his hand, the person who had wounded him, at the moment when the latter was in the act of drawing his sword. This person (Ameer Chund) then with his tulwar wounded Saheb twice, once in the arm and again on the shoulder (left). At this moment two of the Saheb's men came out of the fort. One of them struck Ameer Chund on the cheek, and inflicted a slight wound. Ameer Chund stumbled and fell into the ditch, and the other of Saheb's men was in the act of following him when he was stopped by When Saheb was thus wounded, Khan Singh Saheb. had arrived outside the gate at the Chabootra. drew his sword, on seeing the disturbance, turned near the Saheb, whose wounds he bound with his cloth-Khan Singh then procured two elephants, on one of which he placed Agnew; on the other he himself mounted, and in this manner proceeded towards the Eedgah. As they passed the Dowlut gate, a person fired at Saheb and wounded the elephant. When Agnew was wounded, Moolraj, turning his head, galloped away; at that moment Saheb was wounded with a spear. When Moolraj fled, the suwars with him accompanied him? did not see Anderson until he arrived at the Eedgah, which place I reached shortly after. I then learned that he was wounded and senseless. I know nothing of what happened to Anderson before When I entered the fort, from the townspeople, who were in some places assembled in large numbers, I perceived no just cause of apprehension. The prohibition to the Ghoorkas, however, to enter the fort filled me with alarm. On the 19th, Agnew wrote to Moolraj, requesting him to cause to be seized and sent to Eedgah those who were concerned in the disturbance which took place at the fort gate. He furthermore requested that the dewan would himself come to Eedgah. Moolraj paid no attention to this letter. On the 20th the first gun was discharged from the fort. Immediately afterwards the Am Khass guns opened a fire, which continued all day. By 5 r.m. the whole force of the Sahebs had left them and were posted near the Baba Suffra Ghat. The attack on the Eedgah took place at sunset. About fitty men from the Am Khass, and a like number from Baba Suffra, were the assailants. Khan Singh said to them, "I will not fight; take me and my son and the two Sahebs to Moolraj. In coming here, I have only acted in obedience to the orders of the Muharaj Duleep Singh." He was seized and led away by these people. I concealed myself behind the kunats of Saheb's tent, close to where Saheb was. From this place, I could perceive (through an opening in the kunats) all that was going on within. A number of people entered the tent led by a Mughrubbee Sikh, who abused the Saheb, and asked him, if he found it so easy to take the fort? Saheb replied:—" I have been sent by the Lahore government to demand the resignation of Moolraj. Take me before him, and let him kill me or let me at liberty, as he pleases." This man then wounded Saheb in the throat, and drew his sword across it twice. Having cut off Saheb's head, he enveloped it in a handkerchief, then sheathed his sword, and taking in his hand one of Saheb's pistols, left the tent. Anderson was cut and wounded by many men. During the night I made my escape, and sought refuge with the Goorkhas at Baba Suffra. In the morning I returned to the Eedgah, and then saw the headless body of Agnew stretched on its back, and much wounded. Anderson's body was face to earth, and almost cut to pieces. At 8 A.M. I went to the Am Khass. Moolraj then held a kutcheree in the gateway. I approached within a few paces of him; I saw the Mughrubbee Sikh, who had cut off the head of Saheb, approach Moolraj, who ordered the elephant of Khan Singh to be given to him. The man did not seem to wish for the elephant, saying,—"What can a poor man like me do with an elephant?" Moolraj then gave to him Agnew's horse, and money to the amount of Rs. 350. The Mughrubbee then took away the head, which he brought before Moolraj, and went to Khan Singh, who was then in the Am Khass, before whom he threw it. He also abused Khan Singh, and said bad words towards him. Khan Singh and his servants went to another place. The assassin then took the head to the large gate, and mixing some gunpowder with water, rubbed this mixture over the face and head. He also filled the mouth with dry powder, and placed fire to it. Many people saw this, and all heaped insult on the remains of Saheb. At 10 A.M. Moolraj sent two Mooltan silk cloths in which to envelope the bodies of the Sahebs. He also sent a jemadar and several men to execute those orders, and sent with them the head. The two bodies were placed on one charpoy, and buried in a nullah. For the remainder of the day I remained concealed in the Muzusfer Khana of Gundah Singh. Next day I went to Eedgah, perceived that the bodies had been dug up during the night, and the silk cloths taken away. I went to the Am Khass; met on the road some sepoys and beeldars going towards the bodies with new cloths. On the second night the bodies were again dug up for the sake of the cloths. Moolraj then gave a thick cloth to wrap the bodies, and gave orders to the sentries to be more watchful, and prevent a similar recurrence. The gate at which the head of Agnew received such bad treatment from the Mughrubbee Sikh was distant from the place where Moolraj then held kutcheree about 104 paces. When the Mughrubbee Sikh took Saheb's head to Khan Singh, Khan Singh was distant from Moolraj about fifty paces. Ameer Chund was called by the people, the first badshah; the Mughrubbee, second badshah. I saw the first badshah when he wounded Saheb, and for four months he lived at the Loharee gate. There were with the Sahebs when they were murdered, until the attack, about thirty-five men (servants); when Moolraj's people advanced on the Eedgah, they all left them. At this time there were with Khan Singh about twentyfive armed men; during the attack all ran away. For three days after the death of the Sahebs, illuminations and rejoicings were carried on in the city. I meant by saying that Moolraj turned his head in the Kummer Koter gate, that I think that was the signal for Ameer Chund to strike Saheb. Seventh day, June 7.

Elihee Buksh deposed—I accompanied the Sahebs from Lahore to Mooltan. I was with them the day they visited the fort. On the morning of that day I went to the fort, accompanied by ten of my suwars. I did this in obedience to orders received from Khan Singh the evening before. I accompanied the Sahebs, and under my orders was Salabut Khan, who brought with him seven or eight suwars. Before leaving the Eedgah, Agnew Saheb requested Khan Singh to send a messenger to Moolraj, to request him to come out of the fort to receive them, which Khan Singh did. Moolraj had left the fort before this man reached it, and met the Sahebs on the road. They then all proceeded towards Mooltan, and having entered the city by the Dewlut gate, halted for a moment a few paces from the outer side of the fort ditch, where Khan Singh ordered me to remain with my suwars, saying that only chief officers were to enter the When Moolraj and the Sahebs had entered the fort, one of Kurm Iliahee's suwars, by name Sheikh Mehtaba, came towards me, and seizing me by the hand, said, "Why do you remain here? why do you not go inside?" He then led me into the fort until we reached the spot where the Sahebs were. Moolraj and the Sahebs had dismounted, and were examining the guns and magazines, ammunition, &c., contained in the fort. They went to the west side of the fort to visit a large gun, and from thence proceeded towards the gate. On their arrival there, the gate-way was crowded with their servants, and the sepoys and attendants of Moolraj. Agnew said to a jemadar of Jesailchees, —"From this day you will receive your pay from me. Until to-day, the pay due to you you shall receive from Moolraj." Moolraj and Anderson Saheb first issued from the fort. Their escort accompanying them, rendered the crowd in the gateway much less. Agnew Saheb followed them, and had arrived a few paces on the outer side of the bridge over the ditch, when he fell from his horse. He had been wounded by a sepoy with a tulwar. I did not see the wound inflicted. Saheb attacked this sepoy with a stick. On arriving at where Seheb was, I struck at and wounded this man with my tulwar. He stumbled and fell into the fosse. Eight or nine of the Mooltan sepoys drew their swords and surrounded Saheb. When the man who wounded Saheb fell into the fosse, some of these men entered the fort; others followed Moolraj. With Agnew were then Khan Singh, Kootub Shah, Nazim Khan, Salabut Khan, and The latter bound the wounds of Saheb with his Rung Ram. handkerchief. Two elephants having been procured, Saheb was placed on one, and Khan Singh mounted the other, and both proceeded towards the Eedgah. On the road they perceived that men were dragging guns out of the Am Khass. Rung Ram went to inquire the reason of this, and put a stop to it, and Saheb and Khan Singh took a circuitous route, apprehending mischief from the above-mentioned guns. Close to a small stream outside the city, I saw Anderson wounded, and stretched on the ground. Sheikh Mekhtab Rah and Jower Khan stood by him. Agnew saw that he was placed on a charpie, and gave orders that he should be carefully conveyed to the Eedgah. Near here also a carabine was discharged at Agnew, but without effect. When fire was opened on the Eedgah from the fort, Ghoolam Hoosam was sent to Moolraj. Khan Sing sent him; I and Salabut Khan and Sheikh Mekhtabah accompanied him, as we were ordered to do so by Sirdar Khan Singh. On arriving at the Am Khass, we were led into Moolraj's presence by Hurbughwan, having been previously disarmed by the senovs. Hurbughwan was the person who directed the fire on Eedgah. On entering the presence of Moolraj we sat down. I said to the Dewan, that I wished to speak to him in private. He then led me aside, and asked my reasons in coming to him. I replied that I had been sent by Khan Sing to him with this message, that "I have been sent by the Lahore Sirkar to succeed you. Am I to be blamed for any thing which has taken place?' Moolraj said—" As God pleases." I replied, " What has happended, has happened, now do as you think most fit." Moolraj said, that the army and people of Mooltan had the upper hand, that he was deprived of much of his power. He shortly after said-" Return to Khan Sing and tell him I expect from him the surrender of the persons of the two Sahebs, and of the ammunition and military stores in the camp. Your officers and sepoys may return to Lahore. I do not want them." I said-' How can I go? If you will give me back the cattle your people have deprived me of, and make me a promise to send with me a man for my protection against re-robbery by your people, then will I go. If you will not do this, then I and the sepoys with me will fight and die rather than surrender." Moolraj's officers and sepoys said to him, "We will come to no terms with the Sahebs, we will fight with them whether you order us or not." It was my wish to desire Moolraj to cease order us or not." It was my wish to desire Moolraj to cease firing, but Hurbughwan and Jola Sahaie, who were with the Dewan, said to him, "These Sahebs never fulfil their promises, no faith can be kept with them. When Lal Sing voluntarily gave himself up, see how he was treated by the Sirkar Company, and look what they have done to the Maharanee." At last, Moolraj said to Hurburghwan, Ascath Khan Rebadeor Shah and Hakim Reisa. "To you Assath Khan, Bahadoor Shah, and Hakim Raie:-" Do you accompany these men to the Eedgah, and bring back with you a declaration of the officers and soldiers of the Lahore army to the effect that they will not fight against the soldiers of Mooltan. I should wish the Sahebs to put their signature to it." Moolraj then said to me:—"When you send me the declaration I have just asked for, then I shall return to you the elephants and other cattle you have lost." I replied—"If you will order the firing to cease, then will I go to the Eedgah and do as you request; the answer of the officers and men, whether verbal or written, I will send to you, when I hope you will restore to me my goods, &c." Moolraj said to the four officers, whose names I have mentioned—"Go with this man to the Ava, and cause the firing to cease." On our arrival there, Hurbughwan gave orders that the firing should be discontinued whilst we went to the Eedgah. Only one gun was discontinued, five or six continued firing, many others were also discharged from the fort. Hurbughwan told me, at this time, that the Goorkah regiment had already come over to Moolraj, who would continue to it the pay, &c., they had formerly received from Runjeet Singh—"We are therefore now firing only upon our enemies. Return you to Moolraj." Hurbughwan and those with him then induced some sepoys to invite us into the Am Khass, to smoke or drink with him, saying, "In the mean time, we will make representation of your case to the Dewan; what he says he will do." We went into the Am Khass, as we were requested to do. It was about this time that the army of Lahore left the Sahebs to join that of Mooltan. Kurm Iliahee, and thirty suwars alone remained on the Eedgah. When Saheb was wounded, was on the outer side of the bridge. When I went into the fort after Saheb, elephants were being laden with grain. Saheb said, "Why is this?" Moolraj said, "This is my property, not that of the Lahore sirkar." Saheb said, "I will buy it from you."

Kurm Eliahee Khan deposed: I arrived in Mooltan on the day the two Sahebs were wounded. Sirdar Khan Sing having reported my arrival to Saheb, Agnew Saheb gave orders that I reported my arrival to saneu, Agnew Saneu gave orders that a should be sent with Kootub Shah to Moolraj, to request him to seize and punish, or send to the Sahebs, the persons who had wounded them, and to add that Moolraj himself need have no fear. When on the road with Kootub Shah, I observed that many Akalees went into the Am Khass. As we approached they discharged their firelocks at us. I cried out:—" Why do Why do you fire on us? We are vakeels sent by the Sahebs to Moolraj to give him consolation after what has taken place." The Akalees replied: -- "We shall not allow you to approach the Dewan. You had better return, or you will be treated as the Sahebs have I accordingly returned, and repeated to Khan Singh the words of the Akalees. On the 20th, Khan Sing told me to send the proclamation of the Lahore Government (relative to the surrender of Moolraj and his troops) to the officers of the Mooltan army. I gave it to Hooshbal Khan, drummer, to take to them. This person returned soon afterwards with this answer: Why did you not send this on your first arrival? Now it is too late; we can only obey the orders of the Dewan." About 10 A.M. the fort commenced firing on the Eedgah. One of my men was wounded in the leg; thirteen guns and thirty jezails from the fort, and six guns from the Am, were at once discharged on the Eedgah. On our side were but six cannons A shot from one of our guns dismounted a gun in the fort, and another killed a young man. With these exceptions no harm was done by us that I heard of. About 2 r.m. the guns on our side ceased firing. About this time also Elihee Buksh stated that vakeels had been between Moolraj and the Lahore force, and that the latter were making arrange-ments to surrender to the Dewan. I said:—"If such is the case, why do you not report it to Khan Singh?" On this advice Elihee Buksh and Salubut Khan reported my words to Khan Singh, who replied, " Such a thing as you say cannot have taken place. Remain all of you at your posts whilst I ascertain the truth of this." On ascertaining that what I had told him was correct, he at once informed Agnew Sadeb of it. Saheb gave orders that 1,000 rupees should be given the army to encourage it, and added "Let the officers and men understand that there is nothing to fear, if they will but remain firm. Our army will soon arrive to my assistance, when I shall recompense my men for all they have lost since they took the field." Khan Singh received the rupees from Saheb, and took them into the tent of Bahee Eesi Singh. The latter called Kootub Shah, Gooldeep Singh, Goolab Singh, and Kurm Elaie Khan, and said to them, "Divide these 1,000 rupees among the army, and give comfort and encouragement to the men." Goolab Singh replied, "What is the use of money to buy sweetmeats? the horses have nothing to eat since yesterday; rather buy corn and grass with this money." Eesi Singh said, "Let us go and make representation of this to Khan Singh." The money was taken to Khan Singh, who was at this time before the door of Saheb's tent. Khan Singh said, " Divide this money amongst the sepoys." I whispered to Kootub Shah, "The sepoys are no longer faithful; why will you give them the money?" Khan Singh asked me what I was saying. I first excused myself, and then told him that the men no longer obeyed their officers. This statement of mine was confirmed to Khan Singh by Kootub Shah. Elaie Buksh said that vakeels had been exchanged between the two armies. I heard that Moolraj had sent armlets to the adjutant, and two months' pay to the men, and promised to treat them as Runjeet Sing would have done. At the commencement of the attack on the Eedgah, I was seized and led away by Moolraj's people. After my departure the murders took place.

Eighth day, June 8.

Ghoolam Hoosain, deposed :- I went with the Sahebs to Mooltan. When the fort first opened fire on the Eedgah I was sent by Khan Singh as vakeel to Moolraj. On the 20th, about three r.m., Sirdar Khan Singh sent for me, and ordered me to go to Moolraj: "Say to him that he has voluntarily promised to surrender the fort, army, &c., of Mooltan; that he has said so to Currie Saheb, who by the advice of the great men of the Lahore durbar sent Agnew Saheb and Anderson Saheb, to make arrangements with him for the surrender of the place, but that in spite of the promises he has made, he now behaves uncourteously towards the Sahebs, and even fires upon them. Demand the meaning of all this. I um astonished at such conduct, tell him." Khan Singh added to me,-" You must appear to Moolraj to have come from the Sahebs, and not from me." I refused to go alone. Khan Singh said, "Go to Eesr Singh, he will direct some one to go with you." Eesr Singh sent with me Salabut Singh, Eliahee Buksh and Mahtab. On arriving in the fort we were taken by Hurbughwan into the presence of Moolraj. When he had made salaam, Moolraj said to us, "There is a well-known proverb among you, that, 'If any man will light a lamp I will go near to it.' I have lighted the lamp, why do you not pour oil We replied: "We will neither approach the lamp you have lit, nor will we pour oil on it. We are here in the capa-city of vakeels, and wish to speak to you in private." On this Moolraj, taking with him seven or eight of his friends, led the way to a more private place, where, having called me to him, he said, "Deliver the message of Saheb." I then repeated, as from the Sahebs, the words Khan Singh had desired me sa say. Moolraj smiled and said, "It is no longer in my power to do as I should wish; the army is all powerful." I then said, "If that is the case, then come alone to the Sahebs, they are anxious to be your friend." Moolraj answered: "When Rajah Lal Singh gave himself up he was unjustly imprisoned in Agra. The Maharanee was also treated in a similar manner, and so was Sheikh Emam-ood-deen. If I do so, also I shall be transported. I am childless. I shall fight." I said: "It will be much better for you to make peace, and cease firing." Moolraj said: "My men will not obey me." When I asked him what his own wish was, he replied: "My wish is that you do return to Lahore." In my heart I thought it would be better then to leave Mooltan, and to return when we should be reinforced. Moolraj and his friends, having held a short consultation to zether, said to me, "We wish you to give up to us the persons of the Sahebs, and the guns of the Sikarie." I replied, "Our men will fight you with these guns, but will not give them to you." Moolraj said: "Do not believe that." I added: "All who will join you have already left us; they are the bad men whom we can well spare; you have been firing on us since morning. Have any more come over to you?" I then saw that further conversation would be productive of harm rather than good, and only added, "It will be better for you to cease fighting and enter into terms with the Sahebs." Moolraj replied, I wish you to day to strike your tents, and leave Mooltan. "I wish you to day to strike your to say, and which your wessel, "Give to us the camels and bullocks of which your recolls have rabbed us, and we will willingly go." The dewan people have robbed us, and we will willingly go." gave orders to Hurbughwan to return to us our cattle; he then said to me, "Cause to be written by the officers and men of your force, a promise to leave Mooltan, and not fight with my troops." I replied, "It shall be done, but you also should give me a promise that my men shall not be robbed by your people if we move." This Moolraj promised to do. I then said to him, "It is near night; if you will order the firing to be put an end to, then we shall prepare to depart." Moolraj sent with me to the walls four of his officers, by name Hurbughwan, Ussud Khan, Hussin Allie, and Hakim Bahie, to put a stop to the firing. These officers ordered the artillery men to desist, saying, "We have promised to these people not to fight with them. To-morrow morning they will depart from Mooltan." The Sepoys seized their swords and threatened the officers, saying, "Wo is Moolraj and who are you? We will continue to fire." After much expostulation one gun was silenced. It was soon after that the Lahore force fraternized with Moolraj's army. Moolraj was then in the Am Khas, which is distant from the Ava about a quarter kos. In the evening, after the Saheb's troops had deserted them, the attack was made on Eedgah. Hurbughwan put all four of us in prison in his camp, and everything we had at Eedgah was robbed.

Seikh Ghoolam Mustapha, regimental moonshee, deposed:

I arrived with the Sahebs at Rajghat on the 17th April, and on the 18th went to Eedgah; at 10 A.M. Moolraj paid his first visit to the Sahebs, by whom he was received in the tent of Khan Singh. After a short interview he returned to Mooltan, and came back to Eedgah about 4 P.M.; there were ten chairs in the tent, two of them were placed before the rest. Moolraj was on the left of Agnew; Khan Sing on the left of Moolraj. Agnew and Moolraj conversed together. On the advanced chairs were seated, Dusteree Davee Eita, Moolraj's brother, and a Mussulman. Agnew asked for the papers for ten years. Moolraj replied that he would give up the papers connected with all that had occurred during the time he had been Dewan, but that he had not the papers of his predecessor, Sawun Mull. Agnew appeared annoyed at this and said to Khan Singh:
"Bring forward your chair, and listen to what Moolraj says."
Khan Sing sat down close to Saheb, and said to Moolraj:—
"Give to Saheb the papers he requires." Moolraj repeated the answer he had given to Agnew. Toolsee Ram whispered something in the ear of Moolraj, who then said to Saheb:—
"To-morrow, having sought for the papers of Sawun Mull, I will give them to you." I did not hear him mention abox. Ongoing away Saheb said to Moolraj:—"To-morrow I will visit the fort with you." When the Sabebs left the fort they did so by the Sikhee gate.

Outside the bridge a person wounded Saheb on the side with a spear, and then ran away. The umbrella bearer of Saheb took the spear in his hand. After this the person who had first wounded Saheb returned, and with a tulwar wounded him on the The umbrella bearer of Saheb took arm and shoulder. Saheb fell to the ground, and on getting up struck twice this man (Ameer Chund). Kassim Khan and Elihie Buksh at this moment came up, and dismounting, the latter struck Ameer Chund with his tulwar in the face. Ameer Chund sell into the ditch. When this became known in the city, all the people clapped their hands, and cricd—" Well done! son of Sawun Mull, you have treated Khan Singh as he deserves." Moolraj gallopped to the Am Khas when Saheb sell, and all his suwars accompanied him. I was about ten paces from Saheb when he was wounded. The two Sahebs and Khan Singh want to Enderh on saleshing the Market Sahebs and Khan Singh went to Eedgah on one elephant. Near the Dowlut gate two muskets were fired, but without wounding any one .-Do you think the man who wounded Saheb had received orders from any one to do so? A. I do not think he had. -Q. Did you see Ameer Chund after these events? A. Three months after, when he was confined with me in the house of Nurrain, I saw him.—Q. Was he well treated? A. He was well treated; his fetters were light, and Moolraj twice sent him food; moreover he was in the receipt of four rupees per month. — Q. Do you know why he was imprisoned? A. I do not. — Q. When was he liberated? A. Three days after the city was taken. — Was he interacted? A. Three days after the city was taken.—
Q. What jemadar was that who gave nuzzur to Saheb? Say what you know of him? A. Hindoo Singh was jemadar of a gun, with seven or eight men; he offered a nuzzur to Saheb. Sahed asked, "What manner of man is this?" The people answered—" He is an old servant of the sirkar."—Q. struck the first blow, Saheb or Ameer Chund? A. Ameer Chund.

Ninth day, June 11.

Kunjun Singh, havildar, 3rd co. Ghoorka regt. examined:
Q. Did you accompany Agnew Saheb and Anderson Saheb to Mooltan? A. I did.—Q. Was your company one of those two which went with the Sahebs to the fort, or did you yourself go with the Sahebs? A. I did not go to the fort with them. I remained in Saheb's out-houses (cook shop) when he went to the fort.—Q, Do you know anything about the fraternising of the Lahore army with that of Mooltan? If so, state all you do know. A. I do not know what led to the desertion of the Sahebs by their troops. -Q. Did you, whilst residing in Mooltan, write down any or all of the evidence you are now giving? A. When in Mooltan, Wuzeer Alee Khan used threats towards me and compelled me to write down, as emanating from myself, evidence which he dictated .- Q. Was the evidence in question written before any Saheb? A. Yes, after the fall of Mooltan, I wrote down my evidence before a Saheb; a few minutes previous to this, W. A. Khan took me aside and made relation to me of the evidence he wished that I should give, and said that I should meet with much harm, if I gave other than that he had told me. - Q. What did Wuzeer Alee Khan tell you to write? A. He told me to state, that Bugwan Singh and Deedar Singh left the service of Moolenj to join us .- Q. If the force to which you were attached was not tampered with by the officers or men of the Mooltan army, why did it go over to the enemy? A. The officers first went and the men in consequence followed I also went. I received pay from Moolraj.

Tenth day, June 12. Mr. John Lawrence sworn. - Q. Can you explain the terms under which Moolraj held Mooltan; and the circumstances under which he resigned? A. I can. He was nazim of the province, with general powers over the revenue, military, and civil administration. He paid twenty lacs of rupees per annum, and the profit and loss of the management was his own. He got a lease for three years in 1846, about October. His former lease was more favourable; but early in that year, Raja Lal Sing endeavoured to turn him out altogether, and called on him to pay the nuzzerana, which he had agreed to give on succeeding his father. In the general disorganization of the country, during the first Sikh war, he had fullen into arrears. minister sent troops against him, and Moo!raj defeated them. The representative of the British Government, with the consent of Government, mediated between the rival parties; and eventually Moolraj came to Lahore on the resident's guarantee that he should come and go in safety, and that the resident should do his best to arrange an amicable settlement. At his request also Raja Deena Nath was sent from Lahore to Mooltan to fetch Moolraj. Eventually, after considerable delay, a compromise was come to, by which Moolraj resigned about onethird of his old charge, and engaged to pay about one-fourth more for what was left. He also agreed to pay up his arrears, from sixteen to twenty lacs of rupees. He was himself much pleased with this issue, and remarked, that but for our intervention he would have lost everything, even his life. He then returned to Mooltan, and fulfilled his engagements. In November, 1847, on hearing that Colonel Lawrence was about to leave the Punjab, Moolraj wrote up and asked for leave to come to Lahore to bid him good bye, which was granted; but the dewan arrived too late. I received him, and expressed my regret that he had not seen the Resident before his departure. He replied, that his business could be transacted very well with me. A day or two afterwards he paid me a visit, and explained his desire to resign the charge of the Mooltan province, which I told him not to do in a hurry, but consult the Durbar, and his friend Deena Nath. Some days afterwards, Deena Nath read out in Durbar Moolraj's resignation, which I refused, as the conditions would have involved us in a long revenue account and eventual loss. I explained that I did not wish Moolraj to resign, but that if he really desired it he might do so, provided that it was not in the middle of a harvest. To this the Durbar all agreed, and seemed to think that his proposal was not sincere. Some days afterwards Moolraj again came to me, and again tendered his resignation. He gave two reasons for doing so :-1st. That the new custom arrangements in the Punjab (which however did not include Mooltan) had an injurious effect on his however did not include Mooltan) had an injurious effect on his revenue; for his people did not like to pay any longer those dues which had been abolished every where else. To this I replied, "Then introduce our system; you will be no loser!" But Moolraj did not like to try the experiment, 2ndly. He seemed to think that his power of coercing the people was insufficient now.a-days, in consecurate of their human sectors are now.a-days, in Consecurate of their human sectors are now.a-days. quence of their having now got an appeal at Lahore. Of the two grievances this last was the greatest, for Moolraj dis-tinctly said, that he would wave the former about the customs, if I would promise not to liten to complaints from Mooltan. To this I would not consent; saying that I did not wish to interfere with his jurisdiction in petty matters; but that no authority could be permitted to exist in the Punjab independent of appeal, and unaccountable to the law. The fact is, that at that time, there were several compliants against him; the decisions in two of which happened to be against him, and he was much annoyed. One was a case in which he had imprisoned a number of bankers in Mooltan. It had been originally investigated by either Lieut. Nicholson or Mr. Bowring, whose exact decision I do not remember, but the plaintiffs were not satisfied, and carried their complaint to the Governor General, who directed a fresh inquiry. The dispute involved the inspection and scrutiny of a mass of accounts and ledgers, and I therefore referred it for settlement to a punchayet of Lahore bankers, mutually agreed to by the parties. The committee carried on their investigation in my presence, and came to an unanimous decision against Moolraj. this verdict, Moolraj lost some five lakhs of rupees, and was obliged to release the prisoners. The other case was one of some Mahommedan soldiers who claimed arrears of pay; and this also went against him. In short Moolraj felt that he could no longer do as he pleased; and that when he punished he must be prepared to show cause for doing so. The dewan had never been really independent. His strength or weakness, like that of all Nazims, was in an inverse ratio with that of the crown. When the Government was strong he was weak; when they were weak, he was strong. Under Runjeet Singh all Nazims were accountable for their acts. To return : the result of the Dewan's discussion with me was, that he seemed determined to resign. I tried much to dissuade him, but he was resolute. He then required two promises from me, one of which I granted, the other refused. He wished me to guarantee him a Jagheer on resignation of Mooltan, which I could not do, but said I doubted not it would meet with favourable consideration, as all the servants of the Government, who had behaved well, had been rewarded. The fact was, that Colonel Lawrence, before going away, had remarked to me, that if ever Moolraj left Mooltan, he would be a good man to put into the Lahore council, in which position he would of course get a Jagheer. But I did not tell him this, as it was a matter on which Government would have to be consulted, and which might not after all be approved. Besides, it would depend altogether on the way in which Moolraj made over the country. However, Moolraj was well aware that I was personally well disposed to him, and he went away quite satisfied. His other request was that I would keep his resignation a profound secret, especially from the Durbar, which I consented to with the reservation, that I should inform my own Government and the political officers under me. He asked me for a writing to the above effect, which I gave. The understanding was that he was to account for the revenue to the end of April, and the Durbar take charge from that time; my proposal was that two or three months before his resignation, two British officers should go down to Mooltan, whom he should gradually initiate into the state of the country, and ultimately instal in charge. He was satisfied with this arrangement, and on my objecting, that perhaps it would discover his intention to resign, he replied, that he thought not, as the resident's assistants were in the habit of visiting all parts of the country to make settlements; for instance, Mr. Cocks was at that moment settling Jhung close to Mooltan, and it would be thought by the public that a similar settlement was contemplated in Mooltan. He explained that his reason for secrecy was his wish to prevent any disturbance amongst his own people, and quietly get away. All these circumstances were reported by me to government, and I requested instructions; in reply to which I was told to take no further steps in the matter, but leave it to Sir Frederick Currie. -Q. Can you state why the course of secrecy recommended by Moolraj was not followed? A. Sir Frederick Currie's arrival was delayed till 6th of March, and in the interval Moolraj's proposed resignation got abroad. As soon as it was finally settled that Sir F. Currie was to come to Lahore, I wrote to Moolraj, that if he repented his resignation, he had now an opportunity of withdrawing it. He replied, that he had not changed his mind. I wrote and told Sir F. Currie all that was going on at Lahore, and particularly about Moolraj's resignation, which seemed to me the most pressing matter. When Sir F. Currie arrived, he at once entered upon this affair, and proposed consulting the Durbar, to which I objected on the score of the promise of secrecy; but Sir Frederick replied, that it was no longer a secret, as he had heard it at Agra. I urged Moolraj's particular reas he had heard it at Agra. I urged Mooira's particular request that the Durbar might not be told; and pointed out that there was a difference between the publicity of a rumour, and that of an authorised announcement. The resident was, however, of opinion that the Durbar ought to be consulted; and that doing so on a matter so generally bruited abroad could do no harm. He was nevertheless averse to Moolraj's resignation, and wrote down to Mooltan to give the Dewan the option of yet remaining He also sent for his vakeel, and asked him, what his master's wishes were? The latter replied, that he did not know. Moolraj answered Sir F. Currie's letter by express, that he wished to resign, and his answer was read out before the members of council and myself.—Q. Have you any reason for supposing that, previous to Mr. Agnew's arrival at Mooltan, the Dewan's feelings had undergone any change as to the resignation? A. As far as I know, none; but I do not know what happened while that gentleman was on the road. I never heard of any circumstances which could have induced Moolraj to change his mind. He was very wealthy. In one of our interviews I remember his dwelling on the dissensions of his own family; and, baring his arm (which was very thin) he asked me, if that was the arm wherewith to control a province? - Q. Can you speak as to Moolraj's disposition being humane or otherwise? A. I do not think him a cruel man. He was a popular governor, perhaps the most so in the Punjab, with the exception of Lena Singh Mujeeteea. -Q. Can you give the court any information on the subject of the demand for accounts made from Moolraj at the time of his resignation? A. Yes, I recollect telling him that to settle the revenue we should require the accounts of some previous years; and though I do not remember his precise answer, he certainly consented. This indeed was one of the conditions the fulfilment of which would entitle him to a jageer; and I purposely mentioned it to Moolraj, because I was aware, that rendering accounts is a thing to which all natives have the greatest objection; while demanding them is both just and expedient.-Q. Did you, in your conversation with Moolraj, intend to convey to him the impression that no pecuniary demand would be made on him by the Lahore Government on account of the Mooltan revenues for the time which he farmed them, previous to the Hindoo year 1904, or during his father's time? Our conversation was only a general one, and I forget whether this point was particularly discussed; but I believe that Mool-raj quite understood such to be the case, and that when he paid up the nuzzerana in 1846, it was considered to be in full of all claims. -Q. In your opinion, could any remarks of Mr. Agnew's, about giving up detailed accounts, have caused Moolraj to suppose that he could be made to refund any sum of money; or would the remarks affect him as disclosing what he wished to conceal; or otherwise cause annoyance? A. I do not think that any remarks of Mr. Agnew (who was a very straight-forward and honest-minded man) were likely to lead Moolraj to suspect any other object than that which Mr. Agnew expressed; but, on the other hand, it is possible, that the way in which the accounts were asked for may have annoyed Moolraj. It is possible, also, that the people about either Mr. Agnew or Khan Singh may have alarmed Moolraj, or affronted him, with a view to extort money.—Q. by prosecutor. Was there any difference between the arrangements you proposed for relieving Moolraj, and those made by Sir Frederick Currie? A. Yes; an essential one. I selected Mr. Cocks and Mr. Agnew. Sir F. Currie required Mr. Cocks' serving at Lahore, and sent Mr. Agnew as principal, with Mr. Anderson as his assistant. Again; I would not have sent one Nazim. Whoever I sent, should have been subordinate to the British officers, the latter being the responsible rulers. Sir F. Currie thought that the Nazim should sible rulers. Sir F. Currie thought that the Nazim should be the representative of the Durbar, and that he should have had full authority, though not independent of the British officers.—Q. by prosecutor. Did you inform Moolraj of the arrangements you proposed to make regarding the management of the country? A. Yes, generally; I mentioned two British officers, and I believe by name. Q. by prosecutor.—Was Moolraj informed that a nazim would be sent to relieve him? A. I am not certain that the durbar be sent to relieve him? A. I am not certain that the durbar wrote this; but if they did not, Deena Nath would have done so; as would his own vakeel—Q by prosecutor. In your opinion, did the appointment of Sirdar Khan Sing as nazim, in any way affect Moolraj's desire to resign his charge? A. I do not think it ought to have done so. It might have had that effect; but it did not strike me at the time, or I would have certainly pointed it out .- Q. by prisoner's counsel. Can you mention in what part of the country is the mass of Moolraj's property? A. No, I cannot.—Q. Do you know what number of troops accompanied Mr. Agnew to Mooltan? A. Yes, I do; there was the Goorkha regt. upwards of 600, a troop of horse artillery, and 500 or 600 cavalry, regular and irregular.—Q. Was it intended that these troops should relieve Moolraj's? A. The chief object was their forming an escort; but ultimately, they were to have supplied the place of a portion of the Mooltan troops; some of which were to come to Lahore, some to remain, some to be reduced. Q. Can you state to what extent reduction was to be made? A. Not positively. It depended on the report of the British officers after their arrival.—Q. Can you mention the description of troops proposed to be reduced? A. New Jamics regressions of foots for would have suffered most —Q. Do levies, garrisons of forts, &c. would have suffered most. - Q. Do you know the number of troops in the province and city of Mooltan at the time of the outbreak? A. I could not make an estimate; Moolraj said he had 12,000 men during the Sutlej campaign, which he reduced afterwards to 6,000. I know that after he left Lahore, in the end of 1847, he made still further reductions, for I heard complaints. A portion of his men must have been at Leiah and other outposts. On the whole, therefore, I do not think he had more than 2,000 at Mooltan. Natives said less. Still we must bear in mind, that large bodies of men can be collected in a short time. - Q. Are you aware what took place between Moolraj and the durbar about his selling stores? A. I do not recollect any correspondence of this kind; and think there was none. I understood that the stores in Mooltan belonged to the Lahore Government. However, if any orders were sent, copies must be forthcoming.

The case for the prosecution here closed.

Eleventh Day, June 13.

The case for the defence commenced this day. Toolsee Ram, mohurrir in the time of Sawun Mull, and also in that of Moolraj, examined .- I was at Mooltan when the two Sahebs and Khan Singh arrived there. On Tucsday, 8th Basakh, the Sahebs left the Raj Ghat for the Eedgah. When Anderson Saheb asked me if any house or dwelling place had been make ready for them, I replied that the Huzooree Bagh and the Begee Bagh were then being prepared for their reception, but that they were at liberty to choose what other place of residence they thought proper. Their choice fell on the Eedgah.

After their arrival there, the dewan sent me to them to inform them that he was about to pay them a visit. I communicated this to the Sahebs, who remarked that Moolraj was putting himself to much trouble on their account. The first visit of the dewan was entirely one of ceremony, and in consequence short. In the afternoon, however, he returned for the purpose of entering more into details with the Sahebs respecting the object of their visit. On the return of the dewan from his first visit, he gave orders that sweetmeats, &c. &c. should be sent to the Sahebs, which was done. About three P.M. the dewan returned to the Eedgah. One of Khan Singh's tents had been pitched, and a carpet spread in it, to the edge of which the Sahebs advanced to meet the down; Agrew led him by the hand to a seat. To the left of Agnew was Moolraj, on his left Anderson. After the usual preliminary remarks, Moolraj said I shall ever be a faithful servant to the Lahore sirker; your arrival inspires me with gladness, as this fort, and army, and district, were a great charge to me; the management of them I was unequal to. They are now yours. Whatever order you give I shall obey." Moolraj at that time experienced some difficulty in hearing with one ear; he therefore said to me Remain near me; much of what the Sahebs say, I do not perfectly understand; you will explain their words to me." stood behind his chair. Agnew said, that to-morrow would be a fortunate day for Sirdar Khan Singh, as he would take possession of the fort, district, &c. of Mooltan. He also said to Moolraj-"To-morrow you will accompany me to instal the new Nazim in his newly-acquired authority." Moolraj expressed himself willing to obey the Sahebs in every thing. When Agnew demanded for inspection the accounts of Mooltan for the ten previous years, Moolraj replied, that Mooitan for the ten previous years, mooiral replied, that all accounts and papers relating to business transacted during his nizamut were ready, and would be at once forthcoming, but that those of Sawun Mull had been destroyed by insects; that Saheb might satisfy himself of that by looking at the boxes in which they had been kept. Agnew said:—"Do not be uneasy, I do not ask for those papers that I may call you to account, but to make myself conpapers that I may call you to account, but to make myself conversant with the present state of the country, and become acquainted with the fiscal and general arrangements made by Sirdar Sawun Mull and yourself." Moolraj said—"All the papers are with the putwaree (keeper of state papers); I shall order him to get them ready and send them to you" I made representation that much time would be requisite to get into proper order for reference the old papers of Sawun Muli's time, Saheb said:—"Then send to me the papers or the last six years, those will be sufficient." Moolraj promised to do so. Saheb then said:—"I shall listen to all complaints made by those who deem themselves to have been injured by you. Moolraj answered: - "This is my custom, when any one over whom I have authority behaves improperly, or acts unjustly towards another, a fine is nflicted on him. Now you wish to give redress to all those who have complaints to bring against me, that is not right. I have surrendered to you my country; do not ask me for an explanation of all my acts." Saheb answered:—"I shall take no notice of aught that happened during the first two years of your nizamut, but the complaints of the last year. I shall listen to you, and those complainants whose cases are worthy of consideration or redress, I shall send to you, that you may make them happy." Moolraj said—"Very good," and soon after took his leave. Sahebs said:—"To-morrow morning be in readiness. I shall visit the fort and make further arrangements with you." In the morning I accompanied the dewan to meet the Sahebs, and returned with them to the fort. We entered by the Sikhie gate. Sunt Singh, Killedar, and Lallakhan, jemadar of Gezailchees, were under the gateway. Moolraj said to them:—"You are now under the orders of Saheb. I am no longer your master:" Saheb having ordered one company of the Goorkalis, who accompanied him, to enter the fort, dismounted, and with Moolraj went all over it. After visiting the fortifications, he went to the magazines of corn and ammunition. Over the former he placed a century and moonshee, saying to Moolraj :--" when I know how much this magazine contains, I will give you a receipt for it." Moolraj and Saheb then visited a large gun which was in the fort. I returned to my house.
Shortly afterwards, I heard a noise in the city, and the report was circulated through the whole town that there had been a fight. I left home and hastened to the dewan. I found him in the Top-Khana, with sentries at the doors; he was not permit-ted by them to go out. I said to him,—"What is this that I have heard?" He replied:—"Wicked men have wounded the Sahebs; it was not my fault." Lalla Ram Rung came in and said, that after binding the wounds of Agnew, he had placed him on an elephant, and sent him to the Eedgah. Mooiraj asked us both to give him advice as to his future conduct. We urged him to go at once to the Sahebs, that they might see how blameless he was of all that had occurred. Moolraj said,-" Well; do you go on before; you are on foot, I shall soon overtake you." Near the Shums-tabreez Moolraj was only a few paces behind me, followed by Ram Rung. An orderly carabineer advanced upon Ram Rung, and struck him with his tulwar, and the sepoys and ryots assembled near, used threatening language, and ordered us to return to Mooltan, saying,-" What business can you have with the Sahebs?" In the midst of this slight commotion, the dewan's horse reared, and its rider fell to the ground. Moolraj was compelled to return to his home on foot. Moolraj said to me,-" This is a very bad business; go and tell the Sabebs, that it has been caused by bad men, and that I am guilt-less." I replied,—" If God spares me, then will I repeat your words to the Sahebs." Finding the gates shut, I got out of an opening in the wall; a sentry hailed me, and was ordering me to return, when another sepoy said to him,—"Let him go, he can do no harm." When I arrived at the Eedgah, I was asked by Khan Singh, who I was, and what was my business. I replied,—" I have come from Moolraj, report my arrival to Agnew Saheb." When my arrival was known, I was conducted into the room where Saheb was. Having made my salaam, I sat down on a setrengee beside his bed, and related to him what had happened to Ram Rung and Moolraj; and the message of the latter, and requested orders from him. Saheb desired me to return to Moolraj and give him consolution:—" Tell him I.am well-aware of his innocence, but that he must take active measures to secure the persons of those who have wounded me, that they may be punished as they deserve." I requested Saheb to put these words in writing, as Moolraj would then more readily give credence to them. I returned to Moolraj who having made some excuse to leave those who were with him, came outside and took the Saheb's chitee from me.-Q. When Moolraj returned from Lahore, after having tendered his resignation to the Resident Salieb, what arrangements did he make to carry into effect the promise he had made? A. Do you know if the Lahore government granted permission to Moolraj to sell the stores contained in the fort of Mooltan? A. I am not aware that it did.—Q. What was the reason of the former rebellion of Moolraj's army? A. The Lahore army had received two months pay and a necklace to each man; Moolraj's men wanted the same and threatened to depose him if he did not agree to their demands. -Q. When the Sahebs arrived at Mooltan, were the sepoys of Moolraj disaffected? A. They were in consequence of Moolraj having reduced their number. -Q. Twelfth day, June 15.

Ram Rung, commanded a brigade of all arms, examined:

—I am related to Moolraj. I was in Mooltan, when Agnew Saheb arrived there. When he arrived within the Sikhie gate, he said to Moolraj, "Now I will visit with you every part of the fort." The Sahebs, Khan Singh, and Moolraj, were then between the Sikhie gate and the Shah Bahawul Huk gate, where a number of artillerymen and other sepoys were assembled. These men had downcast countenances. Saheb spoke to them and said, "The charge, which is taking place, will not affect."

you; you shall still remain in service. Now go to your quarters." The whole of the fort, including magazines, &c., was then inspected by the Saheba, who ordered the officer commanding the Ghoorkah detachment to place a man of his own beside every sentry of Moolraj's. Having seen this order obeyed, Saheb prepared to leave the fort. Near the gate, many Jesailchees and Rohilla sepoys were observed, preparing also to leave the fort to go to their homes. On hearing this, Mool-raj said to these men:—" You are no longer in my service, you are the servants of Saheb." Agnew Saheb confirmed these words. This took place in the Kummer Kota gate. When we arrived outside, my horse becoming unmanageable, I was unable to see the order in which the party left the fort. When my horse became more quiet, I observed that Moolraj was on the right of Agnew and Anderson on his left. Ameera (Ameer Chund) was then a few feet beyond the bridge, on the outer side of the ditch, and as Saheb approached, wounded him in the side with a spear. I did not see this, but I saw him strike Saheb twice with a tulwar. Saheb returned these blows with a stick. He had, after receiving the first wound, fallen from his horse. I saw Ameer Chund fall into the ditch. I went to the Saheb, who said it was unfortunate that such a circumstance should have happened, as the consequences might disagreeable, and it might retard, if not prevent, an amicable arrangement of Mooltan affairs. I took off my Kummurbund and handkerchief, and bound up the wounds of Saheb. Khan Singh and some orderlies arrived at this time. When Saheb was wounded, all with and near him were on horseback; an elephant was procured, on which Khan Singh and Saheb went towards the Eedgah; I accompanied them as far as the Dowlut gate, and then took my leave. I begged Saheb to give orders to his servants not to hurt me. He replied:—
"Do not be afraid, no harm will befall you for what has happened." As the Saheb and Khan Sing passed the Am Khas, guns were being dragged out of it, and a number of gunners and ryots were assembled together. When Saheb dismissed me, he said:—" Encourage as much as you can the sepoys who have been in the service of Moolraj; tell them they will still be soldiers. Say also to the Dewan, that I do not think the man who wounded me did so by his orders, but that he ought to clear himself of all suspicion by at once punishing all concerned in it." I conveyed to the sepoys the message of Saheb; the good men amongst them remained silent. The bad said:—"What has been done is the Saheb's fault, he has deserved it; we wish to fight with him." On his way to the Eedrah. Saheb nassed the On his way to the Eedgah, Saheb passed the guns which had been brought out of the Am Khas, and, for a short distance accompanied them, but afterwards turned off the read by a small pathway, and reached Eedgah. I remained at the fort, and asked the men stationed there, where Moolraj was? They replied, that he is coming. The Dewan soon arrived on feot. He said to me:—"What is all this that has happened?" I replied that it was the will of God. Moolraj said:—"Where I replied that it was the will of God. Moolraj said:—"Where were you when Saheb was wounded?" I told him I had bound up the wounds of Saheb with some of my clothing." He asked me, what the Saheb had said. I repeated to him the message Saheb entrusted to me; I also told him that his men were so angry with me for having remained, even in for so short a time, near the Saheb, that they would kill me. I strongly urged him to go to the Eedgah, to exculpate himself from any blame the Sahebs might attach to him for the events of the morning. The Dewan agreed with me, and we both proceeded on foot towards the Eedgah. Near Baboo Rae's garden, the sepoys ordered us to return to the city. Our horses at this moment arrived, and I proposed to Moolraj to gallop by a more circuitous route to the Eedgah:—" Unless we make use of some such stratagem, we will not be able to visit the Saheb." In the act of mounting, with one foot in the stirrup, I received three cuts of a tulwar from a carabineer on the arm (here the witness bared his arm, and showed those wounds, as well as one on his forehead). The pain occasioned by this frightened the Dewan's horse, which pain occasioned by this frightened the Dewan's norse, which resered, and spilled his rider. On this, I, through fear of my life, fled at full speed to Am Khas. After this I know not what happened, but I heard that Moolraj had confined some sepoys engaged in the fray—the person who told me this also told me that the report of my death had been spread, and that some people said that I had fled.—Q. When Moolraj returned from I calors, after having tendered his resignation to the Burn Saheh Lahore, after having tendered his resignation to the Bura Saheb, did he make any decrease in his army? A. He did. I then commanded a corps 500 strong; all but 175 were disbanded.

—Question by the Court. Did he at that time sell any stores? A. Yes, he sold many things, and cheaply, in order to realize quickly the money. -Q. Did he sell any wood, or iron, or lead? A. I heard that he sold some. He gave to me five maunds of balls to convert into chains, staples, and other articles used in buildings .- Q. Did he dismount any gwns? A. I do not know; I had under my command six guns, the tackle of which was in a very dilapidated condition; Moolraj told me not to repair it or to procure new.—Q. How large is the Kummur Kota gate?

A. A buggy might drive through it.—Q. Is there any small doorway in this gate?

A. Yes, there is.—Q. What was Moolraj's intention in sending in his resignation?

A. He intended to petition the Sirkar Company for a Jagheer, then to go on a pilgrimage, and on his return to live in retirement.—Q. When the Sabebs were murdered did Moolraj speak to you about the surrender of the fort? A. Yes: he spoke of leaving it, but remained on account of his family.—Q. Was there a council held in Mooltan the night before the Saliebs visited the fort? A. Yes, there was; Moolraj at it told me that Sahebs would on the morrow arrive from Lahore, to take charge of Mooltan from him. I expressed astonishment, and Moolraj said, "Why are you surprised? I do this thing voluntarily; if I get a jagheer, I shall remember you."—Q. by prosecutor. Before this, had any of Moolraj's army mutinied or rebelled? A. On the death of Sawun Mull, two regiments mutinied, but they were reduced to obedience by those troops who remained faithful to the Dewan; these troops consisted principally of Rohillas and Pathans.—Q. When you went to the Dewan, after leaving the Sahebs at the Dowlut gate, were there any officers with him? A. When I went with him towards Eedgah, several officers followed and joined us.—Q. Was Toolsee Ram with Moolraj? A. He was.—Q. What remarks did Moolraj make to you on the event of the 19th? A. He said that his army had deserted him, and that he was desirous of going to the Sahebs.—Q. Why did these people wound you? A. Because I wished to take the Dewan to the Sahebs, and they were afraid of the consequences to themselves, should such a meeting take place.—Q. by prisoner's counsel. When the Sahebs issued from the gate, who went before them? A. Some of Khan Sing's and Moolraj's orderlies.

Sing's and Moolraj's orderlies.

Boodoo Mull, Mahajun, examined.—When Messrs, Agnew and Anderson went to Mooltan I was residing in the city of Mooltan. When the Sahebs had decided definitely to reside in the Eedgal, I went with Ambur Dass, Marwarrie, and other leading residents of Mooltan, to pay a visit to the Dewan, and make representations to him that it was the wish of many merchants and others to make salaam to the Sahebs. The Dewan said to us: —"I am their servant, you are their ryots; go and visit them if you wish." The same evening the Punchayut met together and decided to visit the Sahebs on the following morning. Accordingly, next day, at an early hour, we went, to the number of about 150, towards the Eedgah, taking with us sweetmeats and other presents for the Sahebs. Near the Dowlut Gate we were told that the Sahebs and Moolraj were then in the fort. When we wished to enter by the Shurkee Gate, the sentries placed there by order of the Sahebs refused us permission to go inside, saying that we might pay our respects to Saheb, when he left the fort. We sat down beyond the ditch. In a little while the two Sahebs came out of the gate, followed by Moolraj. Behind the latter came Khan Singh and Ram Rung. Ameera was standing outside the gate, a spear in his hand, with which he wounded the Saheb in the side. Saheb fell from his horse, and when he recovered himself was again struck twice by Ameer Chund, these times with a tulwar-Upon this there was a great tumult, and much confusion, as near the gate I and all who came with me returned through fear to our houses. I heard it said afterwards that when Saheb was wounded, and Moolraj fled, Khan Sing gave orders to his people to follow, and slay the latter (Moolraj).

Q. What was the feeling in the city regarding the affair? A. All whom I saw condemned the conduct of Ameer Chund; they also appeared to be in much grief .- Q. Why? A. Because Moolraj had resigned and sold the stores in the fort, principally to merchants in the city, and at very low prices. -Q. It has been stated in evidence that the townspeople rejoiced and illuminated their houses, when the Sahebs were wounded. Is that true? A. There were no rejoicings, nor were there any illumination.—Q. Did Mooirs) after this send, by you or any other person, money to Umritsur? A. He sent bills by his agent to Umritsur, and some by me.—Q. Do you think that Mooirs sanctioned the murder of the Sahebs. A. I do not think he did, for this reason, that he had sold or sent away so many of the stores. He also received money from different quarters, and tne stores. He also received money from different quarters, and every one supposed he was going to leave Mooltan.—Q. Do you know Wuzeer Allee? A. Yes, I came with him from Mooltan to Lahore. James Saheb ordered that we should be placed together.—Q. Had you any conversation with him on the subject of the murder of the Sahebs. A. On the first halt after leaving Mooltan, Wuzeer Alee asked me if I knew why James Saheb had placed us together; I replied that I did not. He then said, "It is for this reason, that whatever I say to you now you will give it in evidence at Lahore. What evidence will you give?" I answered, that what I had seen I thould faithyou give?" fully relate, and that I should tell only the truth. At Siddoo Serai, he said, "God has been good to me. I shall now be revenged on Moolraj for what he has done to me."— Q. When the Sahebs arrived on the bridge, were there any A. I did not see him.—Q. Did Moolraj reward the man who cut off the head of Agnew Saheb? A. I did not hear that he had done so.—Q. by prosecutor. Are you a mahajun or goomashta? A. Mahajun. I had been, for some months before the arrival of the Sahebs, treasurer.—Q. Had you any of Mool-The arrival of the Sanebs, treasurer.—Q. Had you any of Moolrajs money with you when the Sahebs were wounded? A. About Rs. 6,000 or 7,000. A month afterwards I gave them to Moolraj.—Q. Who were with you when you went to visit the Sahebs? A. Sham Singh, Kirpa Bazaz, Rahdoo Mull, and others. Q. How many men were in the gateway? A. Four or five of Saheb's sentries; outside the ditch were the Lahore suwars.—Q. Did Khan Singh give orders to his men to follow and kill Moolraj when he fled? A. Some persons told me a story to that effect; their words I do not remember.—Q. Did Moolraj run away before or after Agnew was wounded? A. After.—Q. How far was he then from Saheb? A. A few paces —Q. Did Moolraj order Ameer Chund to be seized? A. I do not know.—Q. Have you ever related to any one the conversations you had with Wuzur Allee, on the road from Mooltan to Lahore? A. Yes, twice; once to a Brahmin at Durm Salie, and once to Jubboo Malee, resident of Mooltan. Sham Singh, Mahajun, examined :- (The evidence of this witness is similar to that of the preceding; the only difference is, that Sham Sing deposes to having collected revenue for Moolraj at Toolumbah and other places, and that the army of Mooltan was more rebellious in Moolraj's time than in that of Sawun Mull.)

Mohkum, Furrash, examined:—Q. Where were you when Sahebs went to the fort? A. I went with them, and took a carpet and punkah; I was a few paces before Agnew when he was wounded. Moolraj was on the right hand and Anderson on the left of Agnew. Khan Sing followed them.—Q. Did you see Ameer Chund? A. I saw him wound Saleb twice? Saleb struck him with a stick.—Q. Did Wuzeer Allee go with the Salebs to the fort, or not? A. He remained in the Musjeed in the Eedgah. I know this, because when I told at the Eedgah that Saheb had been wounded, Wuzeer Allee came out of the Musjeed.—Q. Were you the first to arrive at the Eedgah after Saheb was wounded? A. Yes.—Q. What Amlahs or Moonshees went with the Sahebs to the fort? A. Kootub S'ah, Sheikh, Mustapha, Rhyut Ram, and others. Eesr Singh, E'ahee Buksh, and Kurm Elahee were also there. - Q. When the Sahebs were killed where were you? A. In the Furrath Khana at the Eedgah. Hearing gurs discharged, I came out and saw Khan Singh being led away by Moolraj's people; the body of Agnew was on the ground, and that of Anderson on a charpae. I did not see Wuzeer Allee. The morning after the Sahebs were murdered, I saw the head of Saheb. afterwards that Moolraj rent cloths to wrap the bodies in, and gave orders to bury them. When I saw Saheb's head it was about 200 paces from Moolraj's house.—Q. Was the hair burnt with gunpowder or not? A. It was not.

Thirteenth day, June 16.

Asoo Kupra Wallah examined.—I was in Mooltan when the Sahebs went them.

Sahebs went there. I went with the punchayat to visit them. At the gate the sentries of Saheb refused to let us in. sat down at the edge of the ditch. In about an hour the Sahebs came out; they were on horseback, Moolraj was a little behind them, and Khan Singh and Ram Rung came last. Outside the gate, on the outer side of the bridge, was Ameer Chund, who stood up and wounded Saheb with a spear as he passed; he afterwards struck him twice with a tulwar. The punchayut returned to their homes, Ameer Chund fell into the ditch. The townspeople were not glad at what had taken place, they became thoughtful, and feared the consequences to themselves. There were no illuminations in the city. I do not think Ameer Chund received any orders from Moolraj to wound the Saliebs; he was mad, and in the habit of stimulating himself with bhang. He lived at the Loharee gate, and I had often seen him two or three days after he fell into the ditch, I saw him near his own house, he had a wound in his face, and his ancle was bound up. People said his leg was broken; twenty-five days after he wounded Saheb, when his wounds became better, he put on his best clothes, and went to the dewan, and asked for a reward for his bravery, Moolraj was angry and ordered him to be turned out; he was soon after this put in prison for injuring a dhobee. —Q. Did you hear that Moolraj gave presents to the man who brought him the head of Saheb? A. No, I did not hear that he did. - Q. Why have you come to Lahore? A. To plead inability to pay the ransom-money due from the merchants of Mooltan.—Q. Were you a friend of Ameer Chund? A. No; Moolraj galloped towards the Dowlut gate, he was alone. Khan Singh gave orders to pursue and kill him. Anderson followed Moolraj.

Jesoo, agent, examined :- When the Sahebs went to Mooltan, I was in the city, and went with the Punchayut. The sentries would not allow us to enter the gate, so we remained outside. As Saheb was crossing the bridge, Ameer Chund wounded him with a spear, and again with a sword. Ameer Chund fell into the ditch. I and all those with me fled from fear. I turned back and saw Khan Sing and Ram Rung binding up the wounds of Saheb. I saw Ameer Chund often before this. I have seen him since. He used to drink bhang, and was crazy. The residents were not happy at what had taken place; they were sorry. I do not know if Moolraj gave presents to the man who brought him the head of Saheb.—Q. Who accompanied you to the fort?

A. Sham Singh, Tej Rhang, and about 150 others were with me. I saw no one conversing with Ameer Chund. Moolraj was on the right of Saheb when the latter was wounded. I saw Khan Singh point towards Moolraj. I do not know where he went to. I did not hear Khan Singh give any orders. I have come to Lahore to petition to be let off payment of the ransom-money. I was in prison during the trial of Goodur Sing.

Asumut, who was Moolraj's Vakeel, and lived at the Residency, Lahore, examined:—Q. After Moolraj offered his resigdency, Lahore, examined:— Q. After Mooraj oneted his resignation to the Resident Saheb in Lahore, when did he pay up the instalments due by him? A. On the 1st Baisakh, 1905, (Sumbut) he paid one lakh and Rs. 75,900. When the news of the Saheb's murder came to Lahore, I was put in prison. I heard that Moolraj's Gomashta, at Amritsur had also been put in prison, and seven lakhs, Rs. 75,000 taken from him, and that the money and goods at Akalgurh also were confiscated.

Misr Gooda, Moonshee to the Lahore treasury, examined:-Q. Do you know when Moolraj sent the last instalment due by him to the Lahore Sirkar? state what is recorded in the treasury office. A. On the last Baisakh, Sumhur, 1905, the last instal-ment of Nanuk Shaie, Rs. 1,73,440, was paid into the treasury of Motee Munder. It is recorded on the papers of the treasuryoffice, that all the instalments for the year 1905 Sumbut were paid.—Q. When his property was confiscated, do you know how much money was realised? A. From the 18th Baisakh to the 28th Sawan, the sum of Rs. 10,72,431-11 arrived in the Lahore treasury. Deena Nath knows what more was received.

Fourteenth day, June 18. Moolvie Saiud Ayaz Hossein examined.

I know Wuzeer Alee, who went with Agnew Saheb from Lahore to Mooltan. During the last two or three months, I have had conversation with him concerning the trial of Moolraj. One day, in kutcheree (before Wuzeer Alee gave his evidence), I said to him that he did wrong who endeavoured without reason to take away the life of another, and that whether the hakim wished Moolraj to be brought in guilty or not, he should tell the truth. Wuzeer Alee answered,—"Moolraj is a Kafir; it will be good to put an end to him." When he said this, I continued my work and ceased to peak to him. - Q. For what reason did you make use of the above-mentioned words to Wuzeer Alee? A. Because it had been told to me that he wished the life of Moolraj, and out of friendship to himself said these words to him.—Q. Did you then think that he would give false evidence? A. I did not know; but from what people said I thought it likely he would. For this reason, I cautioned him against doing so. June 22.

The Court opened this morning at an early hour, and, after a speech of some length from Mr. Bowring, was closed and did not re-open till nearly eleven o'clock, when the prisoner was called into Court to hear his sentence.

The shereshtadar then read aloud the three charges on which Moolraj, ex-Nazim of Mooltan, had been arraigned, viz.-First, for having aided and abetted in the murder of Mr. Vans Agnew, late of the Bengal civil service; and Lieut. Anderson, late of the Bombay military service. Second, In having been an accessory before the fact, inasmuch as he had instigated his troops to the attack and murder of Messrs. Agnew and Anderson; and Third, In having been an accessory after the fact, inasmuch as had rewarded the murderers.

The Court, having duly deliberated upon the evidence brought before them in support of, and against these charges, are of opinion that Moolraj, ex-Nazim of Mooltan, is guilty of all the charges; they, therefore, sentence him to suffer death; but the execution of this sentence shall not be carried into effect, until the pleasure of the Governor-General be known, to whom, with this sentence and the other proceedings of the Court, a recommendation for mercy shall be forwarded, on the ground that Moolraj was the victim of circumstances,

At mention of each of the charges on which he had been arraigned, Moolraj shook his head as if to express his denial, but offered no observations on his sentence.

The Court broke up, after offering to Mr. Bowring and Capt. Hamilton their thanks for the zeal, ability, and talent displayed by them in this trying case. The president (Mr. Mansel) also thanked Capt. Wakefield for the services he had rendered as interpreter and recorder.

When the sentence was read, there were not many natives in Court, and about twenty or twenty-five civilians and officers. There would in all probability have been many more had it been more generally known that the sentence was to have been deliwered to-day, but even those in constant attendance in the Court were not certain that it would not be postponed to another day.

THE USE OF FOREIGN TERMS IN REPORTS FOR-BIDDEN BY THE NEW COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

A correspondent at Barrackpore sends us the following extract from the division orders, to which we refer our military readers.

"BARRACKPORE DIVISION ORDERS.

"July 8, 1849.

"Pursuant to instructions from his Excellency the Commanderin-Chief, the major-general commanding the division intimates to all officers that they are not to introduce words in Hindustani, French, or other foreign languages, in any proceedings of courts of inquiry, courts-martial, or other official correspondence. Any documents containing phrases or words other than English will be returned for alteration."

Sir Charles Napier will puzzle the members of courts-martial if he insists upon their literal adherence to this order. The half of our military language is French or German, and in this country Hindustani words must be used to express things which are unknown in England. Perhaps, Sir Charles Napier will allow a certain term of service to be sufficient to naturalize a word as it does a foreign volunteer. If not, we must have a new military dictionary. Sir Charles must not send an aide-de-camp with a message, nor address it to a lieutenant; the first must be translated a waiting gentleman, and the second a place-holder. At a review he must not order the troops to advance in echellon, but in ladder steps; and he must never cry halt! for that is German; his word of command must be stop a little. As for Hindustani, what substitutes are we to find for havildars and soubadars? Is a bezaar English ever since there has been one in Soho-square? and is Paddy still to mean a sort of grain, or only to designate the Commander-in-Chief and his countrymen?

We suppose, however, that Sir Charles Napier only means to level his prohibition against the affected substitution of foreign words for English in ordinary discourse. He would object of course to amende, au fait, tapis, &c. and perhaps would not tolerate being told by a writer who uses such terms, that he was at a non plus for the want of them. If the order is only meant to prevent slip-slop phraseology, it is well; but as far as our knowledge of Indian official documents goes, there is less reason to complain on that score here than in England. There are certain words, whether French, Latin, or Hindustani, that may have improperly crept into use, but we are inclined to believe that most of them will be found to have been preferred for the sake of precision. They have a certain definite technical meaning, which perhaps their English equivalents have not, because applied to other than local objects, and there may be no little inconvenience in a change, which to insure the precise meaning, may require considerable circumlocution.

To understand exactly what is intended, it will be necessary to have a specimen of the objectionable phraseology. We must know which of our military schoolboys has deserved the master's rod, before we can advise others how they may avoid it.—Engtishman, July 10.

ESCHEAT OF FIEFS TO THE BRITISH GOVERN-MENT—ANNEXATION OF SATTARA.

The last mail brings information that after an unusually warm discussion in the Court of Proprietors, the annexation of Sattara has been approved of by a majority of two to one, in an assembly of more than three hundred. We have as yet no report of the debates, and are simply informed that the propriety of this proceeding was strenuously resisted by Sir Henry Willock, Mr. Holt Mackenzie, and Mr. H. T. Prinsep. It appears that all the papers connected with this important question have been published by order of Parliament, in a Blue Book, of which, however, we have unfortunately as yet received no copy. But the Bombay Times of the 2nd of June has given us copious extracts from this publication, and from the minutes of the members of Government, and has thus enabled us to understand the ground upon which the absorption of the Sattara territory rests. We have thus unfolded to us the new principle upon which the British Government has now, for the first time, determined to act in regard to the question of perpetuating the independence of native states, after the death of the reigning chief without male heirs.

The deposed Rajah of Sattara, who was conveyed to Benares as a prisoner of state, and died there some little time back, had no natural heirs, but adopted a son while on the road to that city. Although the mother fondly decks the lad out in the insignia of royalty, and gives peculiar prominence to the crest of the royal house of Sevajee—the fish—he has never been acknowledged by the British Government. The Rajah, who was placed on the throne on the deposition of the ex-Rajah Pertab Sing, also died childless, last year. When attacked with the disease which proved fatal, he appears to have made application to the British Government for permission to adopt a son. Five days before his death, when addressing the resident on the subject of adopting, he observed, that "it would probably take a long time to get an answer to his yad regarding the adoption; that should he, in the meantime, feel his end approaching, he would be compelled to adopt, leaving the recognition of the adoption to the generosity of Government;" the Rajah believing that he was dying from the effects of magic, and that a favourite lady had been before murdered by incantations. He could not fix on a son for adoption, until his horoscope had been conferred, and the astrologers had foretold that his reign would be a fortunate one. The adoption was, at length, made, but without the sanction of the paramount authority in the state, which has turned out to be a matter of more importance than "the auspicious conjunction of the heavenly intelli-gences." The boy whose reign was to be so fortunate has not been allowed to commence it. In the papers published by Parliament, and extracted by our contemporary, we have the very able minutes—and they are among the ablest we have ever seen—of Sir George Clerk, Mr. Reid, Mr. Willoughby, and Lord Falkland, on this subject. The former earnestly contends, that the adoption of the deceased Rajah should be considered as conferring on the son all the rights of the natural heir. The three latter argue as strongly, and perhaps more soundly, for the nullification of this ceremony, on the ground that the adoption never received the sauction of the British Government. Sir George Clerk closes his minute by the following remark:—"It will, therefore, be convenient for us, and acceptable to the people, if the determination of the present question should lead to the declaration of fixed principles for the regulation, under the authority of the British Government, of successions in de-fault of heirs." The truth of this observation will be at once apparent by a reference to our proceedings in the case of Gwalior. Col. Speirs, the resident, writing to the Government of India in February, 1841, stated that the late Muha Raja Dowlut Rao Scindia himself declared to Major Stewart, the then resident, that he had none but very distant relations, and of them he knew nothing. The Muha Rajah then on the throne was childless, very weak, and much reduced, and his only wife was a girl of about eleven years of age; and the resident proposed that, in the event of his death without male issue, he should be authorized to recommend to his widow to adopt a son from the family of Scindia, to which it appears that Lord Auckland gave his concurrence. The Muha Rajah lingered on for nearly two years. After Lord Ellenborough's arrival, Colonel Speirs submitted to him a genealogical table of the Scindia family, from which it appeared that the boy Bhageerat Rao was nearest in blood to the reigning monarch. Such was the opinion of the chiefs at Gwalior, and such was also the opinion of the Governor-General. On the 7th of February, 1843, Colonel Speirs reported the death of the Muha Rajah. On the 8th he reported that Bhageerat Rao, "a fine boy of eight years of age," had been adopted as the son of the rance, who was thirteen, with the concurrence of the chiefs, and had ascended the vacant musnud. It would appear, therefore, that the British Government had no idea, at that time, that its permission was indispensably necessary to the validity of adoption, but merely thought that the choice should not fall upon one who was not approved of by the Governor-General. Sir George Clerk, therefore, might well affirm that "our views and practice in India in regard to adoption to chiefships had been inconsistent and capricious." In the decision of this question of the escheat of Sattara, the British Government was, therefore, making a "declaration of the fixed principles of succession in default of heirs." It was creating a precedent. The question was one which involved the most momentous consequences. It was to determine the future tenure of the native principalities in India, and to fix, in a measure, the period of their future existence. It was to settle whether all these several little "independencies" should be for ever perpetuated by adoptions, or, should be gradually absorbed in one great empire, and the undivided authority of Government, throughout India, centralized in the hands of the Queen's representative. It was, therefore, no matter of surprise that the debate should have been deemed of sufficient importance to attract to the India-House men of weight and character, who seldom mingle in the squabbles of that little Pedlington.

The arguments by which the annexation were supported, were, that the British Government was entitled to claim throughout India all the prerogatives of suzerain, one of which was the power of granting or withholding permission to adopt; and that in every case in which there was a default of heirs, and this permission was not granted, the territory lapsed to the British Government. Mr. Willoughby says in his minute,—"I am no advocate for the extinction of the native states of India by violent and unjust means; when, however, they fairly lapse to us, as they would have done to the Government which preceded us, I would not, except under special circumstances, perpetuate them by adoption, under what I conceive to be a groundless impression that any accession of territory weakens rather than strengthens our authority in this country."

The decision which has been passed on the Sattara case, and which has received the sanction of her Majesty's cabinet, of the Parliament, and the Court of Proprietors, thus provides for the gradual extinction of the separate principalities of India, without violence or injustice, and the gradual establishment of one paramount authority throughout the country. It is by far the most important determination which the British Government in India has ever adopted, because it provides for the steady augmentation of our territories, and holds out the all but certain expectation that before a century has elapsed all the native governments in the country will have become extinct. This increase of terri-tories will be accompanied with a vast increase of responsibilities, and the effect of this new principle ought most certainly to be made apparent in an increased desire to improve our institutions, and to adapt our administration much more to the wants and feelings and habits of the people than we have yet succeeded in doing .- Friend of India.

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26, 1849.

Wm. Anderson v. Col. Pew and others. - This was an action on a promissory note in the following form :-

"We the undersigned, being the Committee of Management of the Ganges Steam Navigation Company, do hereby acknowledge to have received on the credit of the said Company from the Calcutta branch of the Oriental Bank the sum of Co.'s Rs. 28,544-4-4, by way of loan and advance to the said Company, and do further acknowledge that there is now due from the said Company to the said Bank, the principal and interest on such loan, the sum of Co.'s Rs. 33,824-4-1, and in consideration thereof we do hereby, in the name and on behalf of the said Company, promise, three months the name and on behalf of the said Company, promise, three months after date hereof, to pny to S. J. D. Campbell, Esq., manager of the Calcutta branch of the Oriental Bank, or order, the said sum of Co.'s Rs. 33,824-4-1, with interest thereon at the rate of eleven per cent. per annum.

March 1, 1848. Due 1/4 June, 1848.

P. L. Pew, W. M. Stewart. Alexr. Duncan."

The plaintiff was endorsee. A member of the Ganges Steam Navigation Company stated that the defendants were all members of the Company at that time. That he (the witness) had been a partner from the beginning of the Company, and held a certificate of shares; but had never seen or signed any deed of partnership, though he had seen a printed copy.

Mr. Morton and Mr. Peterson for the plaintiff.

Mr. Dickens for the defendants.

The Court gave a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of the note with interest .- Bengal Hurkaru, June 27.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE Oriental with the London Mail of May 24 reached Calcutta July 10.

-We have been told on the best authority, COLONEL CHEAPE. and we have heard the news with great pleasure, that Col. Cheape is to be raised to the dignity of a K. C. B. This promotion will doubtless be preceded by the bestowal of the brevet rank of major-general.-Hurkaru, July 13.

THE PUNIAR. - From the want of time in providing sufficient accommodation for the men, the heats being close at hand, when our military operations closed a good deal of sickness and suffering have occurred, and the following amongst other casualties are reported : - Lieut. Waddilove, 53rd foot, at Rawul Pindee; Lieut. Dilkes, 61st foot, at Peshawur; Capt. Hughes, 4th Bombay Rifles; and 2nd Lieut. Anderson, artillery at Mooltan; and Dr. Dearlove, Bombay army on his way down from Peshawur to Sukkur. - Bombay Times.

Corps of Guides. - An order has been issued for the increase of the corps of guides, which was established by Lord Har-

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF thus snubs a recent Court-Martial, in a note to the published proceedings: - " Confirmed, I cannot say approved, for I never read such inefficient proceedings in my life. Court, judge-advocate, and evidence, all inefficient. The prisoner must return to his duty."

MEDICAL COLLEGE. - According to the Hindu Intelligencer, the salaries of the officers of the Medical College are undergoing reduction, it having been settled to reduce the pay of Mr. Walker, professor of anatomy, from Rs 800 to Rs 400 a month, and that of Dr. Goodeve from Rs. 600 to Rs. 400. It is also said that the salary of Dr. Mouat, the secretary, will be reduced from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 600. We suppose the right of private practice, hitherto withheld from these gentlemen, will be conceded as a compensation for these serious clippings.

Mr. C. B. Ransom, and eleven of the crew of the missing vessel the Cabrass, have been picked up on Saugor island. pilot, Mr. Harrison, has not been heard of, and it is feared has been lost.-Hurkaru.

GAMBLING .-- The new superintendent of police has exhibited an unusual amount of activity by arresting the keeper of a sort of hotel in Banstollah gully, together with four or five of his customers, on a charge of gambling. One of the persons arrested belongs to the civil service, and is said to have recently lost from Rs. 6,000 to 8,000 at cards in the house in question. The prisoners were all dismissed for want of sufficient evidence to satisfy legal technicalities; though the magistrate, in ordering their discharge, remarked that there could be but little doubt of their The case is to be tried again, fresh evidence having been discovered. - Hurkaru.

MR. C. N. COOKE, of the Bank of Bengal, and Baboo Kissenchunder Dutt, of the General Treasury, have been appointed auditors of the accounts of the administrator-general for the official year 1848.9.

INLAND GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—In the Supreme Court, in the matter of an arbitration between Alexander Garioch Mackenzie, formerly managing director of the Inland General Steam Navigation Company, and the present director of the company, judgment has been given in favour of Mr. Mackenzie. It seems that the company owed Mr. Mackenzie certain arrears of salary, the amount of which was fixed by arbitration at Rs. 13,000; but the directors objected to the award, and brought an application into court to have it set aside. the court has refused to do.

SIMLAH. - The general impression at Simlah is, that although Sir Charles Napier has taken a house recently occupied by one of Lord Gough's aides de camp, it is only for a short time, and that he is not likely to remain in the hills more than three weeks or a month at furthest. "His whole time is devoted to business." The balls to be given by Lady Dalhousie are to take place on the 6th July and 3rd of August. The heavy rain had continued, and the weather had become very pleasant. More items will be found under the head of "Local Intelligence."-

Delhi Gazette, Junc 30.

DEENANUGGUR, 25th June .- " Just as the officers had made themselves as comfortable as circumstances would admit for the ensuing rains, an order arrives dispersing the force here as follows:—34th N.I. to Hajeepore, 71st N.I. and Captain Burnett's battery to Boodee Pind, 2nd Irregulars to Hoshearpore, to move as soon as carriage is procured. Deenanuggur will therefore be again without any troops. We have had one or two pleasant showers, and the weather pretty cool. Thank goodness none of us have laid out much more. A hundred or so to a sub is nothing nowadays! The order for the move only arrived last evening by dak, as this will probably be new to you.'

PIND DADUR KHAN .- A letter from Lahore informs us that the 4th Punjab irregular cavalry and 2nd infantry, which were to have been stationed at Pind Dadur Khan, are obliged to move to Shahpore, about thirty koss down the Jhelum, it having been found impracticable to form a cantonment in the neighbourhood. The reason of this is, that where water is procurable, the country is inundated, and where the ground is higher towards the Salt range, the element is not to be had at all.—Mofussilite.

Col. Pew.-Col. Pew is not a Hudson. He began life with large means, derived from patrimonial estate. By speculating largely, but with great judgment and caution, he amassed an enormous fortune, which recent unfortunate adventures have sapped. We believe Col. Pew's losses will be very great; but we have no doubt he will be able to meet them all. In speculation he has found that excitement which such an eccentric mind required. It has been to him, for many years past, what opium is to a Chinaman, or cards and dyce to the famous Sir Geo. Armitage. Though generous to a degree, his personal expenses have never been greater than those of the youngest ensign in the army. Like Sir Charles Napier, he is insensible to what men call comforts. He was sanguine about the success of the sugar-works. He has lost heavily by them. He was sanguine about the Ganges Steam Company. He has lost heavily by it. He was sanguine about other joint-stock companies. He has lost heavily by them-not nominally, but in Many men in this country, who consulted him as to how they should embark capital, have made large fortunes by following his advice. Others, on the other hand, by following his advice, have lost their all. We know of one man, from whom he took Rs. 25,000 to speculate with, and to whom, in two years, he returned a lac, and advised him to leave off, and settle what he had on his large family. Colonel Pew's apparently desperate course in the Benares Bank, is, we confess, to us inexplicable. But we feel assured that few, if any, will lose by him. It is not the love of money that has led to Colonel Pew's ventures and temporary difficulties; but the passion to risk it. At one time he returned to England on 10,000% a year, and would have lived a rich and influential man; but such a life has no charms for him. We do not think Colonel Pew's losses, provided his property can cover them (and we believe it will do so), will much affect him, and, therefore, we do not pity him his reverses. We may here narrate an anecdote of Colonel Pew, for the truth of which many in these provinces can vouch. He was playing whist at the artillery mess at Delhi, when an officer approached the table and told an item of news which had just come up from Calcutta; one of the large agency houses had gone (Alexander's we believe). Colonel Pew had in that house a very large sum of money (we are told that it was nearly two laklis of rupees); but no one knew this until the next day - so utterly unconcerned did he listen to the announcement at the card-table, where he continued to play for hours after he had heard it. Let not our readers suppose we are now defending Col. Pew, or apologizing for his conduct in the Benares Bank affair. We confess it surprised us, and at present we admit it looks extremely ill, but we cannot yet believe Col. Pew is a rogue, or a dishonest man-or that he sanctioned or advised the advance of the bank's capital with a foreknowledge that the proprietary would be damnified eventually. We hear, and we believe, that a large slice of the Union Bank capital was recently invested in the purchase of a fine estate in France—now the property of one of the Union Bank's late directors. Wether this be true or not, we cannot say; but we hear it from Calcutta, "on good authority." thing of this kind can be laid to the charge of Colonel Pew, nor can he be compared with Hudson, nor with any man who commenced his speculations with nothing, and whose object was aggrandizement and self-benefit -" no matter how." - Mofussilite,

APPLICATIONS FOR LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO OFFICERS .- " Many applications for leave of absence having been made to the Commander in Chief, which applications are grounded upon former general orders, those general orders are hereby cancelled." requires no nice discrimination of style to detect the strong hand of a Napier in the above quotation, especially in its last six words. And what a mass of inconvenient precedents and authorities do these words quietly but irresistibly sweep away. Officers are not to go up to Sir Charles in the assurance that they must have leave because some general order of some forgotten predecessor seems to apply, or is made to apply, to their case:— he will judge for himself of the propriety of granting or refusing, and so to save useless trouble to applicants and bother to himself, he repeals all the laws of leave by a dash of his pen. It may be objected, perhaps, that the antecedent of "those" is somewhat vague, and we think some more precise definition of the general orders thus cancelled may be required hereafter; but the object and the effect are alike good, and we hope what is not fully expressed will be nevertheless clearly understood. The sentence which we have quoted is the first paragraph of a General Order on the subject of leave, and which throughout displays a determination to uphold the interests of the army, without bearing too hard upon individual members of the service. That everything but an humane consideration for those afflicted with the ills that flesh is heir to, must give way to the claims of discipline and a regard for efficiency, is the basis of the Napierian rules for leave. declaration that "no regiment has an officer to spare, but on the contrary they have all of them too few," coming from such a quarter, holds out the promise of a reform in the system of detaching officers on staff employ, and also that our new Commander-in-Chief will use his powerful influence to obtain an adequate increase in the number of European officers, the want of which on the battle-field he felt and deplored at Meanee. - Hurkaru, July 7.

SIR H. LAWRENCE was last heard of at Kussowlee, on his return to Lahore from Simla.

THE BARQUE Victoria, Capt. Potter, of Calcutta, was wrecked in Cojung Bay, near False Point, on the 22nd June; officers and crew saved.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Head Quarters, Simla, June 27, 1849.—1. Many applications for leave of absence having been made to the C.-in-C., which applications are grounded upon former G. O., those G. O. are hereby cancelled.

The C.-in-C. does not wish to refuse a fair portion of leave of absence, when it can be granted without detriment to the service, but the conquest of a large country is not concluded by the battle which wins it: the army must remain alert in its cantonment to support the civil authorities till the country be settled.

This is the present position of the Queen's and Comp.'s armies in India, and the C.-in-C. will not grant leaves of absence to officers except on special occasions supported by cogent reasons. Officers must remain at their posts with their non-commissioned officers and private soldiers. No regiment has an officer to spare, but on the contrary, they have all of them too few; and the duties of those few must not be increased by leaves of absence lightly conceded; therefore-

2. Commanders of divisions, brigades, and regiments, are requested not to apply for leave of absence for any one under their command without forwarding, publicly or confidentially, the special reasons which induce them to sanction such applications for leave.

3. Any officer in command allowing an applicant for leave to quit his post in anticipation of such application being granted, does so at his own no small responsibility; the sickness of an officer, non-commissioned officer, or private soldier, or of any one belonging to them, is of course an exception to this order, the object of which is to support discipline, not to produce or increase individual afflictions.

COURT MARTIAL.

2nd Charge-For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having appeared at the theatre in the cantonment near Kurrachee, at or about nine o'clock p. m. on Feb. 3, 1849, in company with non-commissioned officers and privates of the garrison, and familiarly associated with them.

MADRAS.

MISCRELANEOUS.

INDIAN MINERALS, &c .- Dr. Hunter, at Chingleput, bids fair to exhaust in that district every subject of scientific interest. "The Indian minerals, of which a list is now in process of publication, were to be deposited in the Polytechnic Institution soon. A few of the following substances, however, were still required. Sails of different kinds, particularly rich ones from Cuddapah, Tanjore, or other fertile districts. Varieties of cotton soil from Bellary, or other localities. The fine white sand procurable near Madras; specimens of the metals or ores, particularly lead, copper, and manganese. Mr. Walter Elliott has collected the minerais from the northern division; Mr. Mayne the large slats of alaty marble from Cuddapah. They answer well for flooring, washing-vats for clay, and for several processes in pottery. A large collection of seeds of timber-trees, the scientific botanical mes of which have been ascertained at the horticultural gardens, had been made by Mr. Mayne. Sir Henry Montgomery has chtained seeds of the Mimosa flexuosa, or Vaghaymarum. It is a quick-growing tree, and comes up in four or five days after being planted; two trees of it have been found at Chingleput, and a great many seeds have been planted; 150 seedlings were planted ent lately. Major Reid has sent a collection of seeds from the mediantural gardens; many of them have been put in the ground, and are now thriving young seedling trees. A packet of about eighty species has been forwarded to J. H. Balfour, Esq. M.D. Professor of Botany, Edinburgh, with a request that he will send others in exchange to the Horticultural Gardens."

DIOCESAN ADDITIONAL CLERGY SOCIETY .- The secretary of the Madras Diocesan Additional Clergy Society acknowledges large contributions received on behalf of the above society from January 1st to June 30th. The sum of Rs. 9,000 has been years' salary for the first clergyman; and there was on June 30 a miance in the treasurer's bands of Rs. 3678-14-2. Towards obtaining a second clergyman there would be a balance. Mysore, Cochin, and several other places, are in the greatest need of spiritual assistance, and are making every effort to secure their object. Dut the monthly income of the Society must average nearly Rs. 200 more before the engagement of a second clergyman can be undertaken.

MR. LAWFORD'S COTTON FIELDS .- Mr. Lawford, writing to the Athenaum on the subject of his amateur cotton-fields near Trichinopoly, is loud in testifying the success of the experiment, but he observes :- "My greatest enemies in this experiment are field rats, which during the night attack and destroy the ripe pods, devour the seed, and scatter the wool. I am very careful in gathering the produce to prevent the mixture of leaves and dirt, but care does not involve expense, and in plantations under European superintendence this means of securing a valuable produce might always be attended to. I have counted on one fine bush one hundred well-formed pods, besides many flowers. These pods are the second crop since March, and it appears to me that the produce generally is heavier than that of the first crop."

THE SAUGOR AND NERBUDDA TERRITORIES have, we learn, been made over to the charge of the Madras army, though the matter has not yet been definitely arranged.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE Queen, with the London Mail of June 7, reached Bombay July 7.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION AND MR. GREEN. - The Board of Education, having failed to obtain the services of Major Candy as principal of the Elphinstone Institution, has ordered Mr. Green, the superintendent of the educational establishments in Guzerat, to proceed to the presidency forthwith, for the purpose of assuming the duties of that important office, which involve the control and discipline of nearly one thousand students.

SICKNESS IN H. M.'s 8TH FOOT .- The European troops at Hydrabad, consisting of a wing of H. M.'s 8th regt., were suffering from sickness; one or more were dying daily. The cause generally is apoplexy. The barracks were first-rate, but in a very bad situation. It would have been far preferable, it is said, had they been built on the right bank of the river, where it is not by any means so hot as it is amongst the limestone hills about the city. An order directing the European part of the troops at Hydrabad to return to Kurrachee is suggested.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE BANK OF BOMBAY have declared a dividend for the last half year at the rate of six per cent. per annum, and the same is in course of payment to the proprietors. The profit and loss account exhibits a gain of Rs. 148,152. 15. 2, during the six months, after paying all current expenses of the hank.

THE COMMERCIAL BANK had declared a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. From the accounts of this establishment it would appear that the net profit for the half-year, after deducting all losses and charges, amounts to Rs. 1,22,778; that one eighth of this, or Rs. 15.347, has (in accordance with a rule of the bank) been carried to the reserve fund; and that to make up the amount of the 6 per cent. dividend (Rs. 1,10,340), it has been necessary to come upon this fund for a sum of Rs. 2,908. Or, to render matters plainer, the profit of the half-year has proved insufficient for the dividend, and for the regulated contribution to the reserve fund, by just Rs. 2,908. The reserve fund now stands at Rs. 40,123, against Rs. 63,302 on the 30th December last; but the directors have written off Rs. 50,000 in part of the debt due by Gibson, Read, Davidson, and Co., and the business of the half-year, therefore, presents by no means an unfavourable aspect.

CHANGES IN BOMBAY MERCANTILE FIRMS.—The rapid changes in Bombay mercantile establishments are as striking as they are melancholy. Mr. L. Grant, of the firm of Forbes & Co., retired in 1840—Mr. J. Bowman in 1846—Dr. Malcolmson, Mr. Baxter, and Mr. C. and Mr. A. Forbes have since 1844 been removed by death,—so that, with the exception of Mr. Willis, removed by death,—so that, with the exception of Mr. While, there is scarcely an European in Bombay now connected with it who was so nine years ago. In the other great house, that of Remington & Co., we have had Messrs. Remington and Hadow for ten years or more; Mr. T. W. Henderson retired in 1841, and is still alive; Mr. Fawcett in 1845,—he died shortly after his return home; and Mr. R. W. Crawford left us in 1846. Out of heaven thing and form Furgueen houses in Rombay, there of between thirty and forty European houses in Bombay, there are not now half-a dozen members still in business who were so in 1840.

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF PENSIONS. - Capt. Hart, the superintendent of pensions, has been appointed a member of the Education Board; and a better selection could not have been made by Government. Capt. Hart is an able, an accomplished, and thoroughly amiable and benevolent man. A ripe Oriental scholar, long and minutely familiar with the tongue, habits, and characters of the natives; he is an enthusiast, in the best sense of the term, in the cause of public instruction. He is secretary of the Poons Translation Society, and as such, has been, since the establishment of that institution, constantly straining every nerve to obtain reading for the natives. He has indeed ever been ready to lend a hand in any good or philanthropic work that presented itself to his notice, and possesses a greater familiarity with, and more extended knowledge of, the educational wants and requirements of the people, than any other member of the board .- Bombay Times.

MOVEMENT OF THE 78TH HIGHLANDERS. - A letter from Belgaum states that the head-quarter wing of the 78th Highlanders is, after the monsoon, to proceed to Aden to relieve that of the 2nd European L.I.; the left wing coming down to the Presi-

CAPT. W. G. C. Hughes.—We regret to announce the death at Mooltan, on the 1st July, of Capt. W. G. C. Hughes, of the 4th Bo. N.I. (rifles). The deceased entered the army as a cadet in 1836, obtained his commission as ensign on the 12th June, 1837, his lieutenancy on the 2nd May, 1840, and his captaincy on the 21st January, 1846. The following notice of the deceased officer has been supplied our daily brethren by a the deceased officer has been supplied our daily brethren by a friend:-" The deceased was the third son of Captain George Fenner Hughes, well known for many years as magistrate of Mahim; and who, after holding the office of high sheriff of Bombay four several times, closed his official connexion with the presidency by the construction of the present magnificent road up the Bhore Ghaut, during the administration, and under the patronage, of Sir John Mulcolm. His death closes a long list of losses sustained in India by the elder Captain Hughes within a comparatively short period. He has seen one daughter, three sons, and two sons in law (the latter five in the public service), all swept off, one after another.

PRESIDENCY OF THE GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.—The Bombay Geographical Society have raised Captain D. Ross to the honour of honorary president, and requested that he would allow them to procure a portrait of him, to be kept in their rooms. The Hon. J. P. Willoughby, Esq., member of Council, was elected president in the room of Captain Ross. The hon gentleman now presides over every society at the presidency save the Medical and Physical, and nowhere could they be better provided. Captain Lushington, commander-in-chief of the Indian navy, was chosen vice-president in the room of Mr. Willoughby. The whole of the mountain barometers ordered by the Society for the supply of those willing to pay for them have been already taken off their hands, and more required to be ordered.

LADY FALKLAND.—Gaieties and amusements of every description were in progress at Poona (July), where several balls have been, or were about to be, given to Lady Falkland.

PENSION OF THE MASTER ATTENDANT.—Much astonishment has been created by the refusal of the Board of Control to allow Captain Ross, late master attendant, the highest pension of his rank. He has for fifty years been almost continually employed in the scientific department of the service; he bears a name as an hydrographer second only to that of Horsburgh; and his charts and surveys have been the means of saving numberless lives and uncounted fortunes. Instead of remaining master attendant on the full emoluments of his office while the duties were discharged by a deputy, he retired as he found the infirmities of years advancing, and has been requited with a salary less than that of the youngest boy civilian!

DEATH OF BRIGADIER-GENERAL S. HUGHES, C.B. COLONEL OF THE 26TH BOMBAY N.I.—The death of Brigadier-General S. Hughes, c.B. colonel 26th Bombay N.I. late commanding the southern division of the army, occurred at Bombay on the 9th July. The deceased had resided in Bombay with his daughter, Mrs. Thompson, from the time of his retirement in April 1848, and was till within a short time of his death in the enjoyment of better health than he had been during the two preceding years. The late Brigadier Hughes entered the army as a cadet in 1800, at the early age of fourteen years, and was consequently in his sixty-third year. He obtained his ensigncy on the lst September, 1801, was promoted to lieutenant on the 25th July, 1805, to captain on the 4th May, 1820, to major on the 13th April, 1826, to lieutenant-colonel on the 9th February, 1830, and to colonel on the 26th December, 1841. Brigadier Hughes obtained his regimental colonelcy on the 16th August, 1845. He was actively employed in 1818-19 in the Conkan with the forces under Colonels Prother and Kennedy, during which he shared in the reduction of a number of the enemy's strongholds. After this he held the appointments of brigade-major in the Concan, and military secretary to Sir C. Helett the Concan, and military secretary to Sir C. Helett the Concan, and military secretary to Sir C. Helett the Concan, and military secretary to Sir C. Helett the Concan, and military secretary to Sir C. Halkett when Commander in-Chief of the Bombay rary to Sir C. Halkett when Commander in-Chief of the Bombay army. He was made a Companion of the Bath on the 26th September, 1831. He was appointed commandant of the garrison at Bombay on the 4th March, 1843, and very shortly after became involved in a quarrel with the townmajor, which led to the trial of the latter officer at Poons in August following. The decision of the court-martial and remarks of Sir T. M'Mahon furnished food for anything but favourable comment at the time in all the military circles in India. On the expiration of the tour upon the staff of Major-general Delamotte, Brigadier Hughes was permanently appointed a briga-dier-general on the divisional staff from the 25th of April, 1845. About the middle of the year 1846 the health of Brigadier-general Hughes began to fail him. He was appointed to the command of the southern division of the army on the departure of Major-general Morse for England. In this command he continued till 1848, when he was permitted to resign, the honourable the Governor in Council recording his high sense of the honourable and faithful services rendered by the brigadier-general, during his long career of forty-four years. Brigadier Hughes was a man almost universally beloved by those with whom he came in contact, either in public or private life, and his death will be sincerely regretted by not a few. He has left a wife and family to deplore his loss. His remains were interred on Monday evening in the cathedral yard, being followed to their last resting-place by Brigadier Derinzy, and the staff of the garrison, and a large number of other officers and private gentlemen.

PUNJAUS CHIT-CHAT.—Our friends at Rawul Pindee complain (June 13) that they have no means of remitting money except through the Wuzzerabad paymaster. They will, ere this, have received the intimation (published in a recent Supplement of Government notifications), that a treasury would be established there under the charge of the deputy commissioner. It was feared that some honders, granted to the sepoys by a native Government servant, would not be duly honoured. The formation of lines in the locality fixed on is considered a perfect farce.—The three companies of H.M.'s 53rd foot, with their regimental band, had arrived from Lahore, and were snugly housed with their comrades in the Sikh lines, where, being furnished with tattees, they say they are better off and cooler than in the Huzooreebagh at Lahore. - One of our correspondents cannot understand why the Government should go to the expense of building barracks for the Europeans when the Sikh lines answer every purpose. The new buildings are being constructed of mud bricks, and were not likely to be roofed-in before the commencement of the rains, workmen being scarce and charging high wages. The brigadier commanding had housed himself in the dwelling of the former Sikh commandant, while the subalterns were enjoying the luxury of a hill tent with the thermometer at 115, the high wages given by Government alluring all the available workmen. The coolness of the nights made up, however, for the heat of the day .- Delhi Gazette, June 20 .- A letter from Rawul Pindee says :- " H. M.'s 53rd foot are under orders to move," but why or wherefore the writer himself does not know .- Delhi Gazette, July 7 .- A friend at the new station of Rawul Pindee, writing on the 2nd of July, says:—"We are now three months in arrears, and no bills are to be had at the Commissioner's treasury, as there is no establishment to keep the accounts. Numerous mud edifices are at last rearing their heads, but workmen are so scarce and expensive that the buildings are by no means of an elaborate nature; * * * and several others have been away to the hills about forty miles from this. They say the climate is lovely, and the sheekar abundant; bears, barasinghas, goorul, pheasants, cheekores, &c. abound; but I fancy the leave will be put a stop to, except in cases of sickness, as there is a talk of Sir Charles Napier coming up this way, and commanding officers are in a deadly stew, and already talk of brushing-up their brigades and corps. I think you may reckon on eight or nine months decent weather here. A few of the folks at this place have built a large hut on Mount Nara, about thirty-eight miles away from this, for the accommodation of invalids and others going there on leave. We have had very little rain yet, and but little sickness."—Delhi Gazette, July 14.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

INTERPRETERS IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

Bombay Castle, June 25th, 1849.—The Right Honourable the Governor in Council having received the instructions of the Honourable the Court of Directors, is pleased, in conformity therewith, to publish the following rules for regulating the appointment of interpreters in the Indian Navy, in supercession of the General Order, No. 65 of 1848, and all former Orders upon the subject:—

lst. The languages to be studied and recognised as qualifying for the office of interpreter in the Indian navy, are—1st, Hindoostanee; 2nd, Persian; 3rd, Arabic; 4th, Malay; and 5th, Scindee.

2nd. The examinations of officers of the Indian navy are to be held under the same rules, and before the same Committee as those of the army; and the Commander-in-Chief, before submitting to Government the name of any officer to be sent before the Committee, will satisfy himself that a sufficient degree of proficiency has been attained to render the examination proper.

3rd. Moonshee allowance will be granted, as in the army, to every officer of the Indian navy who passes the prescribed examination, at the rate of Rs. 30 per mensem for six months, for each language.

4th. The appointments of interpreters in the Indian navy are restricted to three, viz. :-

One for the Persian Gulf station.

One for the Aden station.

One for any squadron or vessel proceeding on special service.

These appointments are to be held by officers below the rank of commander, and not being the 1st lieutenant of any ship.

The remuneration for the office of interpreter is fixed at Rs. 100 per mensem, and it is to be clearly understood, that the officer so appointed will nevertheless continue to perform every duty on board or on shore, which may fall to him as an effective officer of the ship.

5th. To be eligible for office as an interpreter, an officer must have passed the prescribed examination in Hindoostanee, and in Persian, and in at least one of the other three of the languages above named; and it is distinctly declared, that without due certificates no officer will be entitled either to the moonshee allowance or to the appointment of interpreter.

BOLITION OF THE SCINDE CAMEL CORPS.

Bombay Castle, July 14, 1849. - Under the authority of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the Scinde Camel Corps be reduced and abolished from the 15th September next.

2. The Sepoys of the Camel corps are to have the option of discharge, or of being re-transferred to the corps of the line; the commissioned and non-commissioned officers in the rank they at present hold to be borne as supernumeraries until absorbed by casualties.

3. The commanding officer of the corps, and the adjutant and quarter-master, together with their office establishments, will remain until the 15th October, to complete the settlement of the accounts and other necessary arrangements.

OFFICES OF MASTER ATTENDANT AND NAVAL STORE-KEEPER. Bombay Castle, July 14, 1849.—The Hon. the Court of Directors having been pleased to order that in future the appointments of master attendant and Indian naval storekeeper shall be held by officers of the rank of captain on the effective list of the Indian navy, but not for more than three years consecutively by the same officers, unless specially reappointed, and further, that the allowances attached to these appointments shall hereafter be fixed as stated in the margin. The Right Hon. the Governor in Council directs that this modification in the establishment of the dockyard shall take effect from the 1st of September next.

LABUAN.

SIR JAMES BROOKE and suite arrived here (May 23) from Sarawak, en route to Sooloo, where the Dutch had been intruding themselves. A grand attack on the pirates of Sakarran and Sarebus was to take place in June. The Meander was earnestly looked for from China. The Albatross was at Sarawak. The Semiramis and Nemesis steamers, and the brig Royalist, were also to assist, which, with about 4,000 natives to be raised by the Rajah (Sir James Brooke), will be the force employed.

In the course of a recent survey of the line of road near the village of Sarraroo, in Bundelcund, the prismatic surveying compass, 3½ inches in diameter, deviated to the extent of no less than 105°. Upon digging at the spot, at a depth of about five feet, a highly magnetic stone, in large masses, was found, which proved to be a diorite (a mineral compounded of felspar and hornblende), with a strong admixture of magnetic iron ore, giving it distinct polarity.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (vol. i. part 1), just published, contains the continuation of Major Rawlinson's Memoir on the Persian Cuneiform Inscriptions at Behistun, of which it forms the fourth chapter, consisting of a vocabulary of the ancient Persian language, including all the words, in the original arrow-headed character, which occur in the inscriptions, accompanied by etymological explanations.

The discoveries of Major Rawlinson, in this department of archæology, which rank next in merit to, if they do not vie in importance with, those of the late James Prinsep, are scarcely yet sufficiently known and appreciated. This gentleman has performed a task which long defied the persevering efforts of the most profound and skilful philologists, having deciphered and translated the cunciform inscriptions, and, in the chapter now under consideration, he has furnished, in fact, a dictionary of the words, or groups of characters, the meaning and grammatical value of which he has illustrated by a vast extent of learning, bringing to bear upon the subject the results of the investiga tions prosecuted by the able continental scholars who have di-rected their attention to these remarkable inscriptions.

As an example of the prodigality of illustration, which the erudition and researches of Major Rawlinson have enabled him to bestow upon the proper names in the inscriptions, we subjoin the article "Asagarta," the name of a country by the Greek writers called "Sagartia:"—

"The country of Asagarta appears in the inscriptions to have been situated between Media and Parthia, but to have been included within the political limits of the former province; I judge of its situation from observing that it heads the list of 'Eastern' Satrapies* (of which the western boundaries must have been the Caspian Streights), the names of Asagarta, Parthwa, and Zaraka being given in succession, and evidently in geographical order; while its political dependence can be proved by the omission of the name in three out of four of the lists of the Satrapies; by the fact of the rebel Chitratakhma, who threw Sagartia into revolt, claiming to be of the Median family of Cyaxares; and particularly by the employment of an expression in the fifteenth paragraph of the second column at Behistun, 'This is what was done by me in Media,' in reference to the reduction of Sagartia, as well as to the defeat of the Median pretender Phraortes.

"The name of Assgarta suggests many important considerations.

M. Jacquet (Journal Asiatique for October, 1838, p. 407) by a somewhat forced etymology, translates the title by 'the great eiver,' and supposes the tribe accordingly to which it appertained to have dwelt on the banks of the Oxus. Garta, however, is probably the same territorial suffix which occurs in the Sanskrit

त्रिवात, † and the original ethnic form, therefore, will be Asa. Now without inquiring whether these Asa may have been connected with the Aswas (च्याः) or Aooi, whose subsequent conquests were so renowned in history, tit is at any rate worthy of remark, that the Scandinavian nations, whose Eastern origin is unquestionable, retained in their mythology the name of Asyard, § and regarded the happy region which was thus designated with much the same veneration that the Hindus paid to the fabulous Mers, or the early Persians to Airyanem Vaejo. It may be presumed then, I think, that the Scandinavian races either sprang from the country of Asagaria, or that the tribe of that name in its original emigration with the other Arian colonists to the westward, threw off a branch which first settled on the Euxine, and subsequently penetrated to the north of Europe.

"Of the Persian Asagarta or Sagartii our knowledge is very limited. By Herodotus, they are classed with the Sarangians, the * See Ins. No. 4, 1. 15. I continue to read "dahydra tyd parauriya," the Thamanians, the Utians, and the Mecians,* and the Satrapy thus composed would appear to have encircled the great salt desert of Persia to the eastward. They are in another passage described by the same author as a nation of Persian descent, speaking the Persian language, forming in their dress a connecting link between the Persians and Pactyans, and serving with the Persian cavalry in the army of Xerxes,† In Justin, also, there is a remarkable notice of them. 'The Porthians,' he says, 'were Scythian exiles, driven out of their country by domestic wars; they occupied the deserts between Hyrcania, the Dahi, the Arii, the Sagartians, and the Margians.'‡ Ptolemy further places them in Media to the north of gians. † Ptolemy further places them in Media to the Boston Choromithene, and in the eastern parts of the range of Zagros. § From all this I infer, that, forming a part of the Arian immigration which is figured in Persian romance as the conquest of Feridún, they established themselves particularly along the mountain range to the south of the Caspian, this is fact being the extreme western point which the colonists had reached at the time of the composition of the first Fargard of the Vendidád, and the locality being more-over especially connected with all those antique traditions which commemorated the advent of the race into Persia, and their sup-pression both of Scythian and of Semitic power. When the great pression both of Scythian and of Semitic power. When the great mass of colonists moved to the South, and spread themselves over the plains of Persis, raising a native dynasty to the throne, which first acquired celebrity under its third member, Achæmenes, I further believe the Sagartians and Thamanians to have remained in their seats along the Caspian mountains; and although, from their position, politically subservient to the Medes, and separated by the great salt desert from their brethren in Persis, to have still retained, —at any rate, as late as the age of Herodotus, and probably much later,—a close connection with the true Perso-Arian stock.||

"I shall have occasion to revert to this subject in the historical chapter, and will only therefore at present add, that we may probably trace an early position of the Asa in the Asapuragán, on the north-western skirts of Paropamisus,** while I have no doubt but that to the same race is to be attributed the very remarkable fort of Lasgird,†† which is situated in the very heart of their permanent seats between Parthia and Media."

 Lib. III. c. 93; the Σαράγγαι are of course the inhabitants of Zaranj, of whom more hereafter. In the θαμάναι, I recognize the tribe which gave its name to Damaghan, Joseph Damawend, &c. The Ourton may, perhaps, be identified with the Yutiya of the Inscriptions, and the Makot colonized مكران Mekran.

† Lib. VII. c. 85: the Pactyans are a disputed race, but may, I think, be compared with the Zend Baghdhi, which by common consent is identified with Bactria.

‡ Lib. XLI. c. 1; in all editions of Justin that I have consulted, the name is written Spartani, but this must be an error for Sagartani.

§ Lib. VI. c. 2; Ptolemy's Geography of Media is very loose; he appears to join Zagros, Orontes, Jasonium (Damaceand), and Coronus in a continuous chain, and where he mentions Zagros in allusion to the Sagartis, I understand him to speak of that part of the range about the Caspian Gates. In his Χωρομιθρήνη I recognise خوار κιάτ, although he names the same district in his account of Parthia, Χοροάνη.

ABORIGINAL RACES OF INDIA. - Mr. B. H. Hodgson, in prosecution of the steps taken by him for obtaining means of comparing the affinities of all the various aboriginal races tenantcomparing the aminues of all the various aboriginal races tenanting the whole continent of India, has communicated to the Asiatic Society of Bengal a comparative vocabulary of seven of the southern tongues (furnished by Mr. Walter Elliot, of Madras),—five, namely Tamil, Malayalam, Telugu, Carnataca, and Tulava, belonging to the cultivated class, and two, the Curzi and the Todava, to the uncultivated. Mr. Elliot observes that the application of the people to application Desiring for chesicistics. the aptitude of the people to substitute Prakritic for aboriginal words is a stumbling-block in the search for affinities; and that all the southern dialects become considerably intermixed as they approach each other's limits.

The Indian papers contain a suggestion for the establishment of regular steam communication between Bombay and the Persian Gulf, the Red Sea, &c. It is said that already, whenever opportunities have occurred, steam conveyance has been eagerly made use of by the Mahomedan pilgrims to Mecca, and that, if regular means were afforded, this traffic, together with the ordinary exports and imports and passenger business between the places, would prove sufficiently remunerative. It appears that the total registered tonnage, in 1847, employed between Bombay and the Gulf of Persia was 17,050 tons, and that the estimated number of passengers each way was 6,300.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

FRIDAY, August 31, 1849.

THE present mail announces the termination of the trial of the ex-Dewan of Mooltan, who has been pronounced guilty of all the charges imputed to him, namely, aiding and abetting the murder of Messrs. Vans Agnew and Anderson, instigating his troops to attack them, and rewarding the murderers. The Court has adjudged him to suffer death for these offences, but has suspended execution until the pleasure of the Governor-General be known, to whom a recommendation for mercy has been forwarded, "on the ground that Moolraj was the victim of circumstances." If these are the terms of the recommendation, they imply that the unfortunate personage is really not guilty of that crime which the English law denominates "murder," namely, a wilful and premeditated destruction of life, for a murderer can never be said to be the victim of circumstances, the definition of the crime supposing that he had an entire freedom of will.

The immense mass of the evidence, and its loose and contradictory nature, preclude us, at the present moment, from reviewing it carefully, and determining how far it establishes satisfactorily the guilt of the prisoner. But there are certain anomalies upon the very face of the proceedings which cannot be passed without notice.

The legality of the tribunal is somewhat equivocal; the right of the British authorities to try the governor of a Sikh province, for an offence growing out of acts for which he could be responsible, at the time, only to his own sovereign, is extremely doubtful. He was not a British subject in any sense of the term, nor answerable to our jurisdiction; yet the indictment against him has been framed in the technical language of the English common law, charging him with being an accessary before and after the fact,—which is in neither case a capital offence according to the Sikh code, the only law which, we imagine, could be applied to the case.

Waving this consideration, however, a cursory perusal of the evidence, and of the very able defence of Moolraj by Captain Hamilton, disposes us to think that an English jury would have acquitted the prisoner, against whom there is no direct and unequivocal proof of guilt by credible witnesses, whilst circumstances transpire which allow the fair inference that the assassination of the two gentlemen was the result of a sudden tumult, to which Moolraj was no party, and that the utmost extent of his complicity was a backwardness to interfere for the preservation of their lives, perhaps from a consciousness that interference on his part, whilst it would have been unavailing, might have compromised his own safety.

The ex-Nazim, it appears, had a turbulent and unruly army, which had upon former occasions mutined against his authority and attempted his life. The reforms forced appen him by the durbar, under the advice of the British Resident at Lahore, had impaired his influence with his troops; and the new administration prescribed to him was so repugnant to his views and habits, that he tendered his resignation, which had been accepted by the Lahore durbar. Of the sincerity of this resignation there can be no doubt, after reading the very candid evidence of Mr. J. Lawrence. Moolraj made all the necessary arrangements for laying down his authority, and for paying the arrears of revenue due to the Government; and he even remitted a portion of his private capital to Umritsur. These acts are totally inconsistent with any premeditated design even to raise the standard of rebellion.

Some stress is laid by Captain Hamilton upon the want of consideration evinced by Mr. Vans Agnew towards Moolraj at their interview; and there seems little doubt that the unfortunate ex-Dewan foresaw, or fancied he foresaw, on the part of that young officer, a determination to subject him to hard measures. The call for long-adjusted accounts; the intimation that complaints against his government would be listened to and investigated, were very unpalatable to an eastern governor, about to part with his power, and lie at the mercy of enemies. This may have generated a feeling that indisposed him to run unusual risks for the protection of those from whom he expected little tenderness.

That the first attack upon Mr. Vans Agnew, by Ameer Chund, a miscreant brutified by bhang, was unpremeditated, and uncountenanced by Moolraj, is clear; that Moolraj rewarded Ameer Chund, as alleged, is disproved; that, at a later period, when the work of assassination was in progress or preparing, Mooraj was under duresse by his mutinous troops, is pretty well established; and that the attack upon the Eedgah was the work of an infuriated rabble, under no leader, is patent. Perhaps the best exculpation of Moolraj, as Captain Hamilton observes, is to be found in the reiterated declaration of Mr. Vans Agnew, that he did not consider him in any manner implicated in the attack. The last lines which that unfortunate gentleman wrote distinctly describe the affair as a popular tumult and mutiny.

Without entering, at present, any further into the case, we must confess our disappointment at the result of this trial. The ex-Dewan might have been convicted, upon the evidence, before a legal tribunal, of breach of allegiance, rebellion, treason, towards his proper sovereign; but we cannot prevail upon ourselves to concur with the verdict of the Court, that he is guilty of murder.

THEVES' ASSOCIATION IN AUSTRALIA.—The following statement appears in the Melbourne Morning Herald:—"Mr. Pittman, who yesterday advertised a letter to the Thieves' Association through our columns, requesting the restoration of his pocket-book, has received the following communication—and his pocket-book:—'Melbourne, 19th Feb. 1849. F. Pittman, Esq. Sir,—I am directed by the Thieves' Association to return your pocket-book, as the contents are of little value to us; and we are the more induced to do so from the handsome manner in which you have come forward in making our association public, and to show the truth of the old adage, that there is still honour amongst thieves. By order of the committee, H. S. Hon. Sec. N.B.—Please acknowledge the receipt in tomorrow's paper."

Mr. Robinson, Inspector of Government Schools in Assam, in some valuable notes on the languages spoken by the various tribes inhabiting the valley of Assam and its mountain confines, observes that they are intimately connected with the great Chinese stock, and "a striking peculiarity in them all is, the absence of infections; which is made up for by the use of small particles and appendages, though more frequently by the relative position of words in the formation of sentences, which is found amply sufficient to remove all ambiguities."

THE BATTLE OF CHILLIANWALLAH.

From the Morning Chronicle of yesterday we extract the following correspondence, containing the official details of the engagement with the enemy's cavalry :—
"Camp, Chillianwallah, Feb. 4, 1849.

"Sir,-That part of the despatch of his Excellency the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, of the 16th ult., to the Right Hon. the Governor-General, which refers to the proceedings of the 2nd Cavalry Brigade on the 13th ult., being open to the inference that the confusion alluded to had been occasioned by some order, or misapprehension of an order, given by me, I request you will do me the honour to submit to his lordship the Commander-in-Chief, that after having sent out the strong party noted in the margin,* to cover the right flank, and keep a large body of the enemy in check, and subsequently formed my line to the front, the only order I gave, on perceiving the enemy in my ewn front, was to attack them, followed by the trumpet sounds, and a call to come on; that the cheers of the brigade assured me the order was well and properly understood, and clearly shown to have been so, when, having myself been severely wounded in the head almost immediately after coming upon the enemy's besse, and compelled to proceed to the field hospital, I left the brigade in action with the enemy under the foregoing circumstances. I trust I may, in reference to my own feelings, and the character I have borne in the service for upwards of forty years, selicit to have the gratification of finding that his Excellency the Birtht Hon the Commander-in-Chief does not suppose that I gave any order that could, by any possible construction, have led to the untoward movement in question, which occurred after I had been wounded and proceeded to the field hospital.

" Camp, Chillianwallah, February 12, 1849. Sir-I am instructed by Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell, K.C.B. and K.H., commanding the Cavalry Division, Army of the Punjab, to forward the enclosed copy of a letter from the Adjutant-General, in reply to your letter of the 4th instant.

"I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, (Signed) "E. T. Paatt, Captain, Deputy Adjutant-General, Cavalry Division.

To Brigadier A. Pope, C. B., late commanding 2nd Brigade Cavalry."

" Camp, Chillianwallah, Adjutant-General's Office, "Head-Quarters.

" Sir-I have had the honour to submit to the Commanderin-Chief a letter, bearing your counter-signature, dated the 4th inst., from Brigadier Pope, C.B., late commanding 2nd Brigade of Cavalry, explaining, with reference to that portion of his Excellency's despatch of the 16th ult. which alludes to the proceedings of the 2nd brigade in the action of the 13th inst., that no order was given by him (the brigadier) which could by any possible construction have led to the retirement which took place on that occasion. In reply, I am instructed to state, that the Commander-in-Chief fully accepts the denial of Brigadier Pope of any such order having emanated from him; and I am to state further that the brigadier's explanation will be forwarded for the information of the Right Hon, the Governor-General of India.

" To Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell, commanding Cavalry Division."

" Camp, Chillianwallah, January 15, 1819. Sir,-In obedience to cavalry division orders of the 14th inst., I have the honour to report that, pursuant to instructions received, I marched from camp at half-past seven o'clock on the morning of the 13th inst., with the 2nd cavalry brigade, which was shortly afterwards joined by the 14th regiment of light dragoons, and having thrown out a strong party from the 9th lancers and light cavalry, which was soon after reinforced by eight horse artillery guns, under Lieut.-Col. Lane, C.B., to watch a large body of the enemy on our right flank, proceeded parallel with the infantry column under Maj.-Gen. Sir W. M.

Gilbert, K.C.B., until it halted and deployed into line. I then changed front to the left, forming line to the right of the horse artillery, which was drawn up to the right of the infantry line. A body of the enemy's horse being perceived immediately in front of the brigade, I ordered the attack to be made, leading it in front of H.M.'s 14th dragoons, and the line proceeded in as good order and at as rapid a pace as the nature of the ground in our front would admit of to attack the enemy, and soon got amongst them. Having almost immediately after been severely wounded by a sabre cut across my head, I was obliged to proceed to the field hospital, leaving the line in action with the enemy. During the preceding operations I received every assistance from Captain Fergusson, major of brigade.

Herewith I have the honour to forward a return of the killed, wounded, and missing in the action. It is with extreme regret I have to add that I have just received a report of the loss of a standard of the 6th light cavelry, and do myself the honour to forward the same for the major-general's information.

"I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, (Signed) "Alex. Pore, Brigadier,
Commanding 2nd Cavalry Brigade.

" To Capt. Pratt, A. A. General, Cavalry Division, Camp."

" Camp, Chillianwellah, January 17, 1849.

"Sir-Having been called upon by Brigadier Pope, C. B., to give an account of the operations of the 2nd brigade of caralry in the action of the 13th, after he had been wounded and had gone to the rear, I beg to state that not having observed when the brigadier was disabled, and no report having reached me on the subject until after the action was over, I am unable to take up the brigadier's narrative, but I beg to be allowed to report the proceedings from the beginning as far as came under my own observation. After the enemy's first position at Chillianwallah had been carried, the second brigade having changed front to the right, I observed that we were opposed to a considerable body of the enemy's horsemen, and immediatly afterwards Brigadier Pupe ordered the line to attack to the front, and gave the order to advance, followed by the trumpet sound to trot and gallop. line advanced as regularly as the nature of the ground admitted, under a matchlock fire, directed by the 14th dragoen until on the point of closing with the enemy, when, instead of the pace increasing to the usual rurls, it slackened, and the enemy were engaged not faster than a trot. A number of single-handed encounters with the enemy then ensued. I observed officers and men of the 14th dragooms and light cavalry engaged with the enemy, and the same was going on on our right along the line, but very shortly the treeps, without any order, went about, and without any apparent reason the whole line gallopped to the rear, nor could all the exercisons of the officers arrest the panic. The halt was repeatedly sounded by my trumpeters, and at one time there appeared a prospect of stopping the disorder, and bringing back the men to the charge, but the appearance of the enemy on the flank sent the whole of the troops in one mass to the left; nor could the men be haited until they formed in rear of the guns. I then, for the first time, heard that Brigadier Pope, C.B., was wounded and had gone to the rear, and I assumed command of the brigade as senior officer on the field; and by the order of the Adjutant-General of the army, disposed of the brigade so as to cover the guns then in position. I beg, in conclusion, to express my extreme regret and mortification at the failure of the attack, and for the co quences that have resulted from it, and have only to add, that two squadrons of her Majesty's 9th lancers, a wing of the lst light cavalry under Captain Scott, with a wing of the 6th light cavalry, were early in the day detached to support Colonel Lane's troop of horse artillery, and consequently this portion of the brigade was not in the affair.

"Camp, Chillianwallah, Jan. 17, 1849. "Sir-Agreeably to the desire of Major-General Sir J. Thackwell, K.C.B. and K.H., commanding cavalry division, commandicated by you, I requested Lieutenant-Colonel Bradford, commanding the 1st light cavalry, who, after I had been wounded and been obliged to proceed to the field hospital, was the senior officer of the brigade (present with it) to continue my report of its proceedings in action with the enemy on the 13th instant. In forwarding herewith the letter in original just received from Lieutenant-Colonel Bradford, I beg to express the extreme mortification and regret I feel by the circumstances he therein mentions in the concluding part "Received Jan. 17.

"Sir-I have the honour to report, for the information of Brigadier Pope, C.B., commanding the 2nd Cavalry Brigade, Army of the Punjab, the movements of the detachment of cavalry and horse artillery placed under my command, for the protection of the right flank of the army, in the action with the Sikhs, on the 13th instant. At the period the attack was made on the enemy's position by the main body of the army, the detachment* as per margin which had been previously moving parallel with the column, formed line on an open space to the right, the guns in the centre, the right wing of the 9th lancers on the right, and detachments of the 1st and 6th light cavalry on the left; skirmishers were thrown out in advance, to keep a look-out on the movements of the enemy, who at this time had assembled in large masses, principally horse, on the hills; in fact, on observing the enemy advancing down the hill, moving to his right, and menacing an attack on the flank of the army, I moved the detachment forwards, and when in their range ordered the horse artillery to open a smart fire, which effectually checked his progress. I then made an oblique movement to the left front with the view of preventing any attempt on the rear and baggage. Shortly after this a considerable body of horse and foot from the left, evidently retiring, passed within a short distance of our front, upon which the whole of our guns played on them with grape, and completely dispersed them. The action about this time ceased, and I then received instructions from the Adjutant-General of the army to retire with the detachment to the village of Chillian-

"The steadiness and conduct of the detachment throughout, during the short period it was under my command, were most exemplary; and I have to express to Capt. Barton, commanding the cavalry and detachment of native cavalry on the left, and to Capt. Yule, commanding her Majesty's 9th lancers, and to Lieut. Courtney, commanding the artillery, and all other officers and men, my best thanks for the services rendered on this occasion. I am also greatly indebted to Lieut. Francis, of her Majesty's 9th lancers, for his zealous exertions in keeping me accurately informed of the enemy's change of position, and in conveying orders. I must not omit to mention that Capt. Barton reports the gallantry of a non-commissioned officer of his troop, who, single handed, attacked and killed one of the enemy's horse. I have requested him to bring the case prominently to the notice of the commanding officer of his

"I am happy to be able to add that the casualties in the detachment amount only to one gunner, 2nd troop, slightly wounded.

"In conclusion I beg to observe, that I consider it highly fortunate so large a detachment was placed on the flank, otherwise I apprehend that there would have been considerable difficulty in keeping the enemy in check.

RIVER NAVIGATION IN INDIA.

THE accompanying diagram map will illustrate the extent to which steam navigation may be accomplished on the rivers of India, according to the statement set forth in Mr. Bourne's report; it also shows the length of railways at present proposed, leading out of Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras. It must be obvious how large are the tracts of country and cotton districts opened up by the rivers in comparison with those intersected by the proposed railways.

With reference to the probability of accomplishing steam navigation on the main Indian rivers,—viz. the Ganges and Jumna, the Indus and its tributaries, the Godavery and Wurdah, and the Tapty and part of the Nerbudda (as shown on the map)—if we examine what has been already done by our own boat and engine builders in the construction of steam-vessels and machinery for the German and French rivers, it will appear that they have already, in some instances, completely overcome the obstacles preventing the navigation of rivers nearly as shallow as those in India. On the Moselle and the Rhine, on the Danube, the Seine, and the Loire, boats are running, which draw only twelve to twenty-four inches of water, while those which at present exist on the Ganges and Indus draw, when loaded, three to four feet. It is clear, therefore, that, as regards draught of water, were the most improved boats already tried to be used, these rivers could be ascended to a much greater extent than is at present attempted. The difficulty is to carry a remunerative amount of cargo upon this small draught of water. Hitherto the cargo has either been put into a separate vessel, impelled by a steam-tug, or into the steamer lengthened out for its reception. The evil of the first plan is the increased resistance which an additional bow offers to the current, and the small extra amount of cargo capable of being carried, together with the objectionable mode of fastening and separate steering. The evil of the second plan is the comparatively limited amount of cargo capable of being carried on a small draught of water, in consequence of an ill-adapted transverse section, and the extra length requiring extra scantlings to give due strength, but which add greatly to the weight; and then the slow rate of speed attained, from some cause as yet unexplained.

These evils Mr. Bourne has endeavoured to surmount by a junction of the two plans just named. His steam train, as already stated in a former Mail, consists of a series of pontoons, or flatbottomed barges, but so fastened together as yet to form one long articulated boat, on the first of which is placed the steam power, and on the others the cargo, passengers, &c. in deck houses. He thus avoids the increased resistance due to additional bows, and gains displacement without requiring extra scantlings or extra strength. His boat will be thereby enabled to carry such an amount of cargo during the dry season as to return a good profit over the working expenses and interest on capital, and will, in all probability, be able to ascend to the points shown on the map, performing the journey with regularity and dispatch.

A writer in the Times of yesterday despairs of the practicability of rapid river navigation in India, owing to the peculiar characters of the rivers. He speaks disparagingly of the scheme of providing the steamers with wheels to help them over the shallows. " Of what strength and weight must these wheels be?" he asks, " and what is to be done with them when not in use? If left in the water, they deaden the steamer's way; if hoisted on board, their great weight increases the draught. Even allowing these wheels to be useful on a hard and smooth sand-bank, they will be worse than useless on one covered with holes, which is often the case, or on a bank of mud." It is easy to suggest objections which look formidable upon paper; but our opinion is that Mr. Bourne's plan is a feasible one, and deserves encouragement.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The second half-yearly general meeting was held on the 28th August, Mr. Aglionby, M.P. (chairman of the Company), in the chair, when the secretary read the Report, of which the following is an abstract:—The interest of five per cent. per annum guaranteed by the East-India Company will, on and from the 17th of August instant, include the preliminary deposit of 5s. paid on the existing shares in the Company, and upon which hitherto no interest has been paid. The liability of each shareholder is limited to the amount of his or her shares in the Com-The Board of Directors have reduced the shares in the Company from 501. to 201., and have made a redistribution of the capital into 50,000 shares of 201, each. In consequence of an intimation that it was the feeling of the authorities that the number of directors should be reduced, powers for that object were inserted in the Act, and the directors recommend that their number be reduced from thirteen to nine, of which three The directors have received a tender from Mr. be a quorum. Jackson, of Pimlico, for the construction of the first line of railway to be undertaken by the Company. This tender embraces the construction and completion of the railway within two years from the commencement of operations, and its maintenance for three years after completion, at a cost, including a double line of rails and stations, of 8,500l per mile. Mr. Rendel, the consulting engineer, has recommended the acceptance of this tender, and the directors have submitted it to the Court of Directors of the East-India Company for their consideration. review of all the circumstances of the past history of the Company, the board congratulate the shareholders on the success which, after so great a lapse of time, and so many opposing obstacles, has at length attended the efforts of the Company. From henceforth they consider the undertaking to be under the direct auspices of the East-India Company. No step can be taken, as to the construction of the railway, until possession of the land has been given by the Government of India, and all the ulterior proceedings of the Company are subject to the control of the East-India Company, and dependent for success on the cordial concurrence and co-operation of the authorities, both at home and abroad.

The Chairman stated that the contract limited the profits to ten per cent., and the question now was, whether that was to be a positive maximum, or whether, after the profits had reached that amount, Government should step in and interfere with the tolls. He thought Government would not perform their duty if they left the tolls to the control of the Company, so as to leave it at their discretion to inflict an arbitrary burden on the people of India. Practically, the East-India Government would have no power to interfere till the profits exceeded ten per cent., and in all probability they would not step in if any very small sum were involved; but when the profits came to twelve or fifteen per cent. they would say to the Company that their tolls were too large, and that they should be reduced so as to lower the profits to ten per cent. The power of the Government was permissive, and it was not likely they would interfere in any toll where some small fraction of a coin was concerned.

Mr. Hitchin inquired, if the shares would have coupons attached to them, as in the Peninsular Railway? It would very much enhance the convenience and value of the shares.

The Chairman replied, that though the clause providing for coupons to the shares, similar to the clause in the Peninsular Railway Company's Bill, had been struck out, it was considered indisputable that the directors had power to provide for the issue of coupons, and could certainly ask for further powers if it should be thought necessary.

Col. Smith suggested the fixing some time for the calls, as well as for the payment of dividends. He wished to ask if the proprietors could pay up the whole amount of the calls at once?

The Chairman observed, that the consent of the East India Company would be required before the proprietors could pay up the whole capital of 1,000,000l, at once; and as the calls were to bear interest at five per cent., it was not likely the East-India Company would allow more money to be paid up than was actually required, or would permit any further calls than those absolutely necessary for working expenses. The question was entirely for the consideration of the East-India Government. As to the time for paying the calls, they could make it matter of arrangement, except so far as it was provided by their Act that the Company should pay up not less than 164,000l. in four calendar months, and not less than 300,000l per annum. He could not but express the greatest satisfaction at the evident anxiety of the proprietary to pay up their calls at once; for he could not but recollect that during eighteen months the directors found the greatest difficulty in getting a farthing, and the Company, in fact, was nearly swamped. He had, however, always anticipated the versent result, for though he had not entered the Company as speculator, he certainly thought it offered a fair investment for his money, and was satisfied the object they had in view must ultimately be realized.

Mr. Hitchin. — I should be very glad to take the whole 1,000,000l. and payit up in case of an arrangement.

Captain Barber congratulated the meeting on the prospects now opening upon the company. The prejudices against rail-ways which unfortunately existed in India would soon be removed by experience, and even if passengers would not travel in their carriages, the company could do without them, as the goods traffic would be quite enough for them.

Mr. Beaumont asked if the guarantee of 5 per cent. extended to the whole expense of carrying out the railway? He also wished the meeting to consider how far it was for the honour of the company that the directors who had conducted their affairs to so prosperous an issue should still remain unremunerated.

The Chairman replied, that if the expenses in carrying out the work should exceed the contemplated capital of 1,000,000l., the guarantee extended to the surplus. He further stated that, if the experiment succeeded for the 70 miles, the line would no doubt be extended 900 miles to Delhi and the north-west provinces, with whatever branches the East-India Company might approve of. He could not pledge himself that the company would necessarily be intrusted with the completion of it; but, being the pioneers in the work, they certainly would be entitled to a preference. Should they fail in raising the required sums, other parties must be applied to. It must not be understood that the contract offered by Mr. Jackson, of Pimlico, of 8,500l. a mile, was accepted; but the company had submitted it to the East-India Company, with the approbation of Mr. Rendel, the engineer, and the respectability of the contractor afforded every security for the satisfactory completion of the work.

The Report was then adopted unanimously.

The next resolution, that the number of directors should be reduced from eighteen to nine, of whom three should form a quorum, and that Messrs. Bruce, Kelsall, and Stewart should go out of office accordingly, was, after some expressions of regret on the part of the chairman at the necessity of losing the services of those gentlemen, also carried unanimously.

Mr. Baines Armstrong moved that a certain sum should be set aside for the remuneration of the directors.

The Chairman suggested that the resolution should be passed in general terms. The directors felt greatly indebted to the proprietary for such a mark of their approbation, and he would not affect to say there was any difficulty in accepting the offer, as it was the custom in other companies to pay the directors. The confidence of the company hitherto had been the directors' best reward.

Mr. Beaument begged to submit a resolution, which he had no doubt would be received with every favour by the directors and proprietary. They all knew how assiduously their managing director, Mr. Rowland Macdonald Stephenson, had laboured in They all knew how assiduously their managing their service till the project had reached its present successful For eight years of his life he had devoted himself to the completion of this great work, with an amount of bodily and mental toil equal to an ordinary man's life, and he was now about to undertake his fourth voyage to India with some anxiety on his mind as to his return to his home and family. He wished to propose that Mr. Stephenson should receive some substantial mark of their favour before he went, - such a one, at least, as would set his mind at ease as to the prospects of his family. He therefore submitted a resolution to the effect that a percentage (hereafter to be determined) on the company's profits over 5 per cent. should be settled on himself, and on his family after his decease.

Captain Barber seconded the resolution.

The Chairman, in putting it, expressed the pleasure he and his brother-directors felt in recommending the resolution, which was agreed to, with the understanding that the precise amount of the per-centage should be submitted to the next meeting.

Mr. Harrison inquired what would be done with the surplus capital, if 700,000l. was enough to complete the line?

The Chairman said, he could not give any definite reply without some intimation of opinion from the East-India Company.

When the king of Dahomey, who employs a military orce in his annual slave-hunts, the proceeds of which yield him 20,000 dollars, was assured by Mr. Cruickshank that, if he relinquished this trade in human flesh, and promoted legitimate commerce and agricultural industry, his country would be enriched, he replied that that was the last thing he wished, for whenever a town grew wealthy, it disowned his sway.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CEYLON. - The third report of the Select Committee on Ceylon and British Guiana is to the following effect:- "Your Committee regret that, from the termination of the session, they have not been able to conclude their inquiries into the grievances in connection with the administration and government of Ceylon, and especially into the causes of the late insurrection in that colony, and into the means adopted by the local Government for its repression; but, from the gravity of the circumstances which these inquiries have elicited, your Committee express their opinion, that it is expedient that they should be reappointed next session to pursue their investigation, and that means should be adopted in the interval by the Secretary of State to insure the attendance before the Committee of the Queen's Advocate at Ceylon, of Capt. Watson, and of others whose evidence may be necessary to explain and establish the circumstances under which martial law was recently proclaimed in Ceylon, and to give information as to all proceedings which were thereupon adopted by the Government."

The Tinnevelly Cotton.—The Aurora, from India, has brought sixty bales of native indigenous cotton, grown at Tinnevelly, and consigned to Mr. Hugh Fleming, secretary of the Manchester Commercial Association, by order of the East-India Board, for sale. This cotton was purchased of the native ryot growers, and cleaned at Tinnevelly, under the superintendence of Mr. Finney, an American cotton planter, who was sent thither to superintend the culture, picking, and cleaning of cotton. It is a fine, clean, bright cotton, and thought well of by the manufacturers. Of the sixty bales, thirty were saw-ginned (Whitney's American gin), and thirty churkaed. The latter had a little better staple than the ginned, but the whole was so clean and of so good a colour that the entire quantity was disposed of in two lots, one of fifty and the other of ten bales, both at the same satisfactory price of 5d. per pound. This, for native cotton, is a very striking result.—Manchester Guardian.

PORTRAIT OF SIR JAMES BROOKE.—An engraving has recently appeared, executed by Mr. G. Raphael Ward, 31, Fitzroy-square, from the portrait of His Excellency Sir James Brooke, Rajah of Sarawak, painted by F. Grant, A.R.A. This engraving we think meritorious as a work of art, and can bear testimony to the fidelity of the likeness. The many admirers of the enterprizing and philanthropic Rajah Brooke have now an opportunity of possessing an excellent and characteristic impression of the fea-tures of one of " our celebrities" in the Eastern world.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS. — The Duke of Bedford has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Madras, and the Hindostan and Nimrod for the like purpose to Bombay.

Agricultural Resources of the Punjab; being a Memorandum on the application of the Waste Waters of the Punjab to purposes of irrigation. By Lieut. R. Baird Smith, F.G.S., Bengal Engineers. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE object of this memoir is to demonstrate the advantages, agricultural, commercial, and political, of forming canals for irrigation and transit in the country between the Jelum and the Gherra, comprising the Baree, Rechna, and Jetch doabs. Lieut. Smith shows that (neglecting minor streams) the Ravee, Chenab, and Jelum would furnish for irrigation a total supply of water equal to (Ravee 3,000 + Chenab 5,000 + Jelum 4,000) 12,000 cubic feet per second; the whole, or very nearly the whole, of which is now running waste to the sea, without material benefit to the state or to the people. The cost of the necessary works he calculates (upon sufficient data) at Rs. 4,000 per mile; and the result appears to be that, by a total expenditure of Rs. 58,00,000, or 580,000l., in works for applying to agricultural uses the now waste waters of the Ravee, Chenab, and Jelum, an annual land revenue, amounting to Rs. 340,00,000, or 3,400,000l., might be obtained from the districts under the influence of these rivers.

The works suggested, Lieut. Smith observes-

"Although primarily agricultural, may yet be made to promote "Although primarily agricultural, may yet be made to promote commercial interests, in a very important measure. Independently of the effect they would have in exciting and increasing the demand for English goods, by augmenting largely the wealth of the agricultural classes,—by far the largest body of consumers in the kingdom, the canals would facilitate transit just at those points where the rivers of the Punjab cease to be available, or, if available, are so only with great difficulty and delay. The cost of adapting a canal of irrigation for transit is about one-twentieth of the entire outlay required: and by an addition of not more than Rs. 5.00,000, or required; and by an addition of not more than Rs. 5,00,000, or 50,000l, to the sum required for irrigation alone, nearly 800 miles of 50,0001. to the sum required for irrigation alone, nearly 800 miles of inland navigation would be formed, stretching like a net-work over the surface of the country, and linking all its great towns and marts with each other, and with the rivers, which, uniting in the Indus, connect the Punjab with the sea. A reference to the accompanying outline map will show where the suggested canals will terminate. To these termini the rivers are navigable without any serious difficulty. North of them, however, difficulties increase rapidly, and there is very little hope to be entertained that they can ever be efficiently overcome. Artificial lines, therefore, may be made to replace these inefficient natural ones; and, with the improvement of the agriculture of the country, its internal and external commerce may, by the same means, be vivified and extended."

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK. Ladies and Gentlemen.-

TO LADIES travelling, or while otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, ROWLANDS' the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, ROWLANDS' KALYDOR will prove a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored clasticity and healthful state of the skin. Composed of choice exotics of balsamic nature, utterly free from all mineral admixture, and pleasing and delightful in its effects, Rowlands **Kalydor-tends-to-neutralize the action of the atmosphere upon the skin, and to promote that healthy action of the microscopic vessels, by which its general well-being and the heauty of its appearance are so essentially promoted. In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani-salso by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had ever advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

"If condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable,—if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forbes's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patronas and students of Hindustani literature."—Friend of India, October 19, 1848.

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlej, or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—it is valuable for present and permanent reference.....Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical student, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh."—John Bull.

"The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the diligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

"It is an authentic work, and its statements are perfectly trustworthy. Indeed, it will be necessary for every one having a library to add this to the historical department, while the miscellaneous reader will find a powerful claim in its novel and stirring information."—Cheltenham Journal.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

SOME anxiety has been unnecessarily felt in consequence of the delay of this month's mid-monthly mail, which is not unusual at this season. It appears that the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer, the Precursor, with the mail from Calcutta, encountered adverse winds and very severe weather (the ordinary concomitants of the monsoon change) after leaving Ceylon, and, when coming out of Aden, she had the misfortune to get upon a sandbank, which occasioned an additional detention of twelve hours.

The intelligence from all parts of the East, contained in the advices brought by this mail, is barren to a degree which is rare even in a part of the year when the elements prescribe a law of inaction seldom violated except upon emergency. The political news may be summed up concisely in the word "tranquillity," which seemed to pervade not only our own ancient dominions to the eastward of the Sutlej, but our newly-acquired territory in the Punjab, and its north-western frontier. Even the Khyberries, it is said in letters from Peshawur, have not only of late abstained from their accustomed predatory excursions, but resolved, at a grand council of these turbulent and rapacious tribes, "to hold out the hand of friendship to the Feringhees." This determination, it was supposed, had been the result not of a spontaneous desire to pursue honest courses, but of an intimation sent to these lords of the passes, by Major Lawrence, that if they did not abandon their habits of rapine, a force would be sent into the mountains to chastise them, and destroy their dwellings. The fate of the insurgent Sikhs, the capture of the fortress of Mooltan, and the subversion of the dynasty of Runjeet Singh, are events which must have suggested to the Khyberries, that the transient disaster experienced by the British arms in their neighbourhood has in no degree impaired British power, and that its injunctions, when issued, must be obeyed. The sincerity of the tribes has been proved by their restoration of camels and other animals, which had been "lifted" by those hereditary robbers.

The disposition and designs of Maharajah Gholab Singh still form a theme of controversy in the newspapers of the different presidencies, without, apparently, any fresh facts upon which to found hypothesis or argument. The Delhi paper, a well-informed journal, repeats the contradiction, given in our last Summary, of the story that a demand had been made of the Maharajah for the surrender of his artillery (in consequence of the detection of his treachery), and that he had refused compliance. A Bombay paper, however, upon the authority of letters from Scinde and from Peshawur, reiterates the statement, that the proceedings of Gholab Singh had excited apprehensions of a Cashmere campaign, and mentions rumours in circulation that all the disbanded Sikhs had sought and received service with him. The Bombay journal adds a fact which has no necessary connection with a Cashmere war, that the steamers belonging to the Indian flotilla had been ordered up, in order to be distributed in each of the tributaries of the Indus.

We hold these reports of impending hostilities, which are probably merely reverberations of the discredited story, readily diffused by those who do not deprecate a war, to be without any real foundation. Judging of the future policy of Gholab Singh from his character and past conduct, we should augur that he would prove a fast and faithful ally of the British, so long as their power lasts, and so far as dependence can be placed upon the fidelity of an Eastern potentate, whose course of action is invariably dictated, not by principle, but by obvious interest. Had the Jummoo chief meditated mischief, his time of action would have been when the whole Punjab was in a state of insurrection, the court, the army, and the people combining in one common cause against us. If he has suffered that critical moment to escape, he is too crafty and cautious, perhaps too timid, to rush upon certain destruction by engaging single-handed in a war with us, after insurrection had been crushed and foreign invaders chased into their own territory with disgrace, and when the resources of the Punjab are in a great measure at our command. During the whole of the Sikh insurrection nothing occurred to compromise Gholab Singh; and when the British Resident at Lahore, worked upon by the many rumours of his intended defection, sent him what he terms a "warning letter," the Maharajah returned a reply, which was an indignant denial of an implied accusation, considered by him to be unjust and undeserved.

"It is notorious as the day," says the Maharajah, "in what manner I have been treated by the Sikhs since the death of Maharajah Runjeet Singh, and their feelings towards me remain unchanged. The result has been, that I have thrown aside all my former connections and interests, and attached myself unreservedly to the British; and so strongly do I adhere to this resolution, that, even if the mountains should rock, I should, nevertheless, firmly retain my position: with the exception of the British, I regard all, whether Sikhs or Affghans, as my enemics. The Sikhs are they who murdered five of my family and plundered my property. The Affghans look upon this country as their hereditary possession, and without the aid of the British I could not have kept my hold of it. On the first occurrence of the present disturbances, my desire was, personally, to lend my assistance; but, as this did not meet with your approval, I considered my own wishes to be subordinate to your orders, and I occupied myself in lending all the aid in my power to Captain Abbott. The Barukzyes, who consider Cashmere to be an hereditary possession of their family, have sent purwannas to several persons, promising them jagheers, and have their eyes fixed upon the country. As yet, however, I remain firm in my possession by the assistance and support of the British; and my only hope is to reside under the shade of their protection."*

Meanwhile, the Punjab division, under Sir Walter Gilbert, numbering 54,000 men, in high condition, is amply sufficient to maintain peace in that country; and if Gholab Singh is really bent, through some unaccountable obliquity of judgment, upon offering himself as a last victim upon the altar of public tranquillity in India, Sir Charles Napier will not linger at Simla.

A communication from Lahore intimates that Sir Henry Lawrence reached that city on the 17th July, and that it was his intention to proceed to Cashmere, to "transact business with Maharajah Gholab Singh."

The Delhi Gazette states that a disarming proclamation was about to be issued throughout the Punjab, the pains and penalties of which are to commence on the 1st of October.

Respecting the fate of Moolraj, letters from Lahore state, that certain information was believed to have been received that the capital sentence on Moolraj would not be carried into effect, and that the result of the proceedings, accompanied by the Governor-General's decision, and the expression of his Lordship's thanks to the Commission and all'the officers intrusted with any duty therein, would be made public in a Government notification. It is said that his Lordship was highly pleased with the manner in which the trial was conducted. The Delhi Gazette says:—

"It seems that Moolraj, although apparently indifferent to the proceedings of the trial, while they were going on, became painfully alive to the real peril of his situation when the sentence was pronounced, and abstained from food for three entire days after the closing of the court; he then addressed himself to the task of aiding in the preparation of a memorial to the Governor-General, which was in time to accompany the copy of the entire proceedings that was forwarded to his lordship by express on the 28th June."

The Delhi Gazette has received authentic intelligence of the death, near Naoshera, on his way to Cashmere, of Ajeet Singh, the ex-rajah of Ladwa, whose escape from Allahabad created a considerable sensation at the time it occurred. He was detected in his hiding-place by a soldier of Gholab Singh's. He died of mortification of the foot.

At none of the native states of India has anything occurred worthy of comment, except that of the Nizam, who has dismissed his minister, Shums-ool-Omrah, who was exerting himself to remove abuses. It is not known who is to be his successor. The Calcutta Englishman, on the authority of a correspondent at Hyderabad, states that certain zemindars. being feudatories of the Mogul, obtained the privilege of coining money at their own mints (which they still retain), being bound to issue coin of equal weight and fineness to the current coin of the country; and that two of these zemindars had lately debased their issues, and been occupied in purchasing up the current coin. "The effect which is expected from these proceedings, unless forcibly interfered with, is a derangement of all the exchanges, and a heavy loss to the Nizam's revenue, which, in the present state of the country, it can ill bear."

The Governor-General, as well as the Commander-in-Chief (Sir Charles Napier), and Lord Gough, were, at the date of the latest accounts, still at Simla. It is stated in the Calcutta papers that the Marquess of Dalhousie had taken a house there for a year, and it is thence inferred that he would not quit the hills until the end of 1850. Sir C. Napier, according to the Dehli Gazette, had issued a circular to his staff, intimating his intention to leave Simla for Peshawur the middle of October, and directing them to confine their marching equipage to two hill tents! The remarks of Sir Charles upon the proceedings of courtsmartial continue to excite comment upon their eccentricity. Those which are appended to the sentence of one of these courts, published in our present issue, however peculiar the style in which they are conveyed, and however severe in their tone, are characterized by sound sense and justice.

The local incidents at the Presidencies are few. At Calcutta, an investigation has been entered upon into the condition and working of the metropolitan police, the general inefficiency and corruption of which department had been for some time the theme of complaint; and so vehement at last was the expression of public discontent, that Government took this step to ascertain how far this dissatisfaction was well founded. The pecuniary embarrassments of the police magistrates, says the Englishman, "have long been notorious, and public opinion has attributed everything wrong in the establishment to that cause." The senior magistrate, Major Birch (who had been compelled to apply for the protection of the Insolvent Act), has been dismissed from his office, and remanded to his regimental duties; and a commission has been appointed, consisting of Messrs. Colvin and Dampier, to inquire into the pecuniary liabilities of the heads of the police generally, both executive and judicial. "In the course of the inquiry, a number of startling facts have been elicited, but all tending to prove negligence, and a want of that active supervision which is so necessary to keep subordinates to their duty, rather than any improper bias. Indeed it would be unjust to the magistrates not to state that their judicial duties appear to have been honestly though not civilly performed, though the executive police has become a nuisance and a terror to the inhabitants, for want of efficient control."

The inquiry was expected to occupy some time, and it was supposed that the whole system would be remodelled, and such checks devised as will deter underlings from acts of rapacity and oppression. The Madras Athenaum observes: "What has already transpired affords too much reason to fear that the animadversions of the press, and the complaints of suitors, have not been exaggerated; the Bench, with only a single exception, as well as the subordinate officials, appear to be under considerable obligations to wealthy natives living within their jurisdiction, and, as a necessary consequence, the administration of justice has been much under the corrupt influence of these native creditors, men generally of very unprincipled character."

The Commissioners have issued the following notice or invitation :-

"The Commissioners appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the police will be happy to receive from any residents of the town, statements in writing, authenticated by their signature, on any point connected with the recent workings of the system in force, in respect both to the judicial and the executive branches of the duties of the magistrates of Calcutta."

The proceedings in connection with the Benares Bank have terminated in a resolution, on the part of the shareholders, to wind up the affairs of the institution under a committee.

A moonshee, belonging to Fort William College, had been detected in the very fact of affording assistance to a young civilian, a student of the college, while under examination. On inquiry, it was found that the system was not of modern date; that Bengal civilians had clandestinely availed themselves in this way of the friendly assistance of moonshees.

At Madras, a general order, raising the standard of literary attainments for the office of interpreter to regiments serving at that Presidency,-prescribing that no officer shall be appointed to the interpretership of a corps who has not passed an examination in Tamil or Teloogoo, in addition to Hindustani,-has raised an outcry, which is directed against Sir Henry Pottinger (though the order purports to be issued under instructions from the Court of Directors), who is accused of inventing a new tax upon the industry and purse of the young officers of the army.

No Bombay papers have been brought by this mail. The intelligence from that Presidency, communicated through the Madras papers (which is to the 4th August), comprises no local incidents worth noticing. The speculations as to the probable successor to the post of Commander-in-Chief, vacant by the resignation of Sir W. Cotton, continue, and hopes are indulged in, that, if the office should be refused by Sir Wm. Gomm, it may be conferred upon a Company's officer. A special general meeting of the shareholders of the Commercial Bank was held on the 2nd August, in consequence of reports prejudicial to the bank having found currency through the medium of the public prints. Explanations were entered into at great length by the directors, which were considered satisfactory. union of the Commercial Bank with the Oriental remains still under consideration.

The Singapore papers announce the termination of the Dutch expedition to Java, observing, that "the complete subjugation and annexation of Bali was to have been the result; but the Dutch leave the Balinese still in arms, and content themselves with exacting an embassy and recognition of submission, which will probably turn out as hollow and insincere as on the previous occasion." The Free Press states that Sir James Brooke had paid a visit to the Sultan of Sulu, by whom he was cordially received, and induced him to sign a treaty, which will probably lead to friendly intercourse.

The advices from China, like those from India, furnish little intelligence. The affair of Mr. Summers, who was forcibly liberated by Captain Keppel from the prison at Macao, where he had been confined by the Governor for disrespect towards a Roman Catholic procession in the streets of that city, continued to excite attention. It will probably be adjusted by means of communications between the two Governments in Europe.

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, JULY 10. (Before a full Court.)

John Allan and Others v. Robert Castle Jenkins, Secretary of the Union Bank.—This was an action upon four Union Bank post-bills, declared upon in the plaint as promissory notes. pleas denied the making of the bills by the bank, or that they had been sighted as alleged. The making and the sighting of the bills were proved by Mr. Abbott, himself the secretary of the bank at the time; but the case was decided on another ground.

Mr. W. P. Grant had obtained a loan of Company's paper from the Laudable Society in June 1847, to the amount of Co.'s Rs. 50,000; and as a security for the repayment thereof, gave his note of hand to Mr. Storm, the secretary of the Laudable, and deposited a set of Union Bank post-bills for Co.'s Rs. 50,000, payable three months after sight. A further loan was afterwards made to him on the deposit of a post-bill for Co.'s Rs. 10,000; and in Oct. 1847, a further loan on the deposit of two sets of post-bills, one for Co.'s Rs. 50,000, the other for Co.'s Rs. 28,000; with each loan was given a power of sale, on nonpayment within six months.

In December, 1847, Mr. Grant (through Hickey, Bailey, and Co.) assigned thirteen hundred maunds of indigo to the Laudable as a further callateral security for the repayment, with a power of sale. The loan not being repaid, the indigo was sold by public sale, and realized Co.'s Rs. 114,326 only, and the plaintiffs to whom the bank post-bills had been indorsed by Mr. Storm, brought the present action in order to recover the balance due after the sale of the indigo, being Co.'s Rs. 41,339. The defendants, besides disputing the validity of the post-bills, also pleaded that the indigo had been received by the Laudable Society in full satisfaction. A commission to England was lately applied for by the bank to examine Mr. Richards in support of this last plea, but the Court refused it.

It appeared on the evidence that both Mr. Storm, the first indorsee of the bills, and Mr. Allan, one of the plaintiffs, to whom the bills had been indorsed, were directors and shareholders of the Union Bank. Mr. Storm and Mr. Grant were both directors at the date of the issue of the bills, viz. June 1846, but Mr. Allan had ceased to be a shareholder in July 1845.

Mr. Ritchie and Mr. Edlin for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Morton for the defendant cited Hastie's case (July 12, 1848), as being on all fours with this. The Court there decided that shareholders of the bank, or parties holding for their benefit or in privity with them, could not enforce post-bills, issued in contravention of the deed. The present plaintiffs were in no better position than Mr. Grant or Mr. Storm would have been; and those gentlemen were not only shareholders but directors of the bank at the time these securities were issued. They would, of course, have been precluded from recovering on these bills. How were the present plaintiffs in a better position? They gave no fresh consideration, and probably took the bills when overdue. Storm was a trustee for the society, it is true, but the society was affected by all the legal disabilities which attached to his title. Then one of the plaintiffs, Mr. Allan, had also been a shareholder a few months before the date of the bills. That was notice of the contents of the deed, and he had no right to assume that the deed had been altered in the brief interval which had elapsed.

Mr. John Storm was called as a witness on behalf of the defence, and admitted that all of the post-bills were in fact indorsed by him after they had become overdue. He took them originally, however, on behalf of the Laudable Society, of which he was then and still continued to be secretary.

Mr. Ritchie was heard in reply, and he endeavoured to distinguish the case from Hastie's case.

The Court.—We cannot distinguish this case from Hastie's, even supposing that Mr. Allan's not being a shareholder at the date these bills were issued (though he was so less than a twelvemonth previously) made any difference, as to notice of the want of power in the directors to issue post-bills under the deed; still the evidence is that Mr. Storm was the real holder, and that he indorsed after the bills had fallen due, and for no fresh consideration. At law his holding the bills as trustee for the Laudable Society (which is not a corporation) does not alter the legal rights. The cestui que trust is affected by the legal defects and disabilities of his trustee. We do not, therefore, see any distinction between this action and Hastie's case. There we held that these post-bills being in violation of the express provisions of the deed of copartnership, though valid in the hands of a bond fide holder without notice, are not enforceable in the hands of partners of the bank itself, and the plaintiffs here as indorsees after the bill became due stand in the same situation as Mr. Storm. The counsel for the plaintiffs may move on this point if so ad-

Verdict for the defendants.

THE BENGAL CIVIL FUND.

At the half-yearly general meeting of subscribers to the Bengal Civil Fund, held on the 31st January last, a committee, consisting of Messrs. J. J. Harvey, E. Currie, J. P. Grant, J. H. Young, and Cecil Beadon, was appointed "to consider the existing rules of the fund, and to report upon any projects for amending the same that may be submitted to it." This committee has sent in two reports. The first is on a proposal of the Benares and Goruckpore subscribers to alter the rule which requires the concurrent voices of nine subscribers, actually present, to carry a motion to a meeting The committee admits that the objection to the rule is reasonable and just, seeing that it gives an undue preponderance to the votes of subscribers residing at and near the presidency, and is frequently the cause of business being inconveniently retarded, and of the disposal of a question being indefinitely postponed, if not altogether prevented, for want of sufficient attendance at general meetings. The committee does not, however, adopt the modification proposed by the Benares and Goruckpore subscribers, which is not set forth in the report. It recommends that the words "actu-ally present" should be struck out of the rule, but that to secure the benefits of full discussion and intelligent judgment at the meetings of subscribers, the votes of absent subscribers should be received only from proxies, and not be addressed to the chairman of the meeting, as has hitherto been allowed.

The second and most important report is upon certain proposals for altering the rules as to the allowances to the families of deceased subscribers. That of the managers was for a fixed allowance without reference to private property. Mr. Harvey recommended a graduated scale according to rank in the service. Mr. Beadon proposed a diminution in the rate of pension to widows, and an increase in the amount of private income enjoyable by each family without prejudice to its claims upon the fund. Lastly, Mr. J. H. Young recommended the adoption of the Bombay rules, the main principle of which is in accordance with the proposal of the managers. The report informs us that at an early stage of the proceedings the committee was strongly impressed with the superior advantages to be gained by the adoption of rules formed on this principle, and that Messrs. Harvey and Beadon desired to withdraw their proposals. We are glad that the committee has come to this decision, which seems to us the only fair and proper one at which it could have When this question was first publicly mooted, we which involved the necessity of inquisitorial inquiries, encouraged extravagance, and took away all inducement to economy; we hardly need say, then, that we trust the subscribers generally will adopt the recommendation of their committee.

We cannot close this brief notice of the report more satisfactorily than in the words of the committee, which thus sums up the advantages to be derived from the proposed modification of the rules, and states the price at which these advantages are to be obtained:—

"In conclusion, your committee will recapitulate in brief the advantages to be expected from the adoption of the rules which they now have the honour to submit for the consideration of the service. A fixed and certain amount of income will be secured to the widows and children of all subscribers who may die on or after the 1st of January, 1850, equal to what they are entitled to under the present rules, but over and above, and without reference to any private income they may possess or may afterwards acquire. A donation of 3001, will be provided for the daughters of deceased subscribers on their marriage. Widows who remarry will be allowed an income during their second coverture, equal to one-half the income they enjoyed during widowhood. The amount payable by subscribers on their retirement from the service in order to secure to their families the benefits of the fund will be more equitably adjusted. The limitation of 6001, a year imposed under Article XXV. of the present rules upon the amount which the family of any one subscriber may receive from the fund, will be dispensed with. The necessity for any inquiry into the pecuniary circumstances of deceased subscribers will be avoided, and with it the perplexing and unpleasant questions that now constantly arise in respect to the amount of support to which families are entitled, and to the principle by which that amount is to be regulated. The natural inducements to economy, especially among the junior members of the service, which the present rules of the fund have a tendency almost entirely to neutralise, will be promoted and strengthened. And lastly, a capital, equal to the present value of all liabilities, will be gradually accumulated, and thus the pensions of incumbents will be secured to them independent of any contingency that can arise, short of a dissolution of the empire, or the failure of the public eredit.

"To attain these advantages, your committee propose to levy an additional subscription of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on official emoluments from married, and of only  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. from unmarried subscribers, the  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. in either case being required for the purposes of the fund as it is now constituted, and a further optional contribution from married and widower subscribers of  $\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. for every daughter, and  $\frac{1}{8}$  per cent. for every son."

We think that the subscribers generally will agree with the committee in regarding the advantages enumerated as most desirable in themselves and cheaply purchased at so small a sacrifice.—Hurkaru.

TRADE OF CALCUTTA.

Mr. Wilkinson's report on the year ending the 30th of April last exhibits a decided improvement in the trade of Calcutta. The total increase over the previous year is,—in imports Rs. 30,78,100, and exports Rs. 1,21,69,204. On the import side, however, this increase is entirely owing to the large amount of treasure imported, which exceeds by Rs. 50,28,979 that of the preceding year. In merchandise imported there has been an actual decrease of Rs. 10,50,879. The increase in exports is made up of Rs. 1,08,76,558 in merchandise, and Rs. 12,92,646 of treasure.

The entire amount of imports for the year was—merchandise Rs. 4,27,56,181, treasure Rs. 1,43,09,586,—total Rs. 5,70,59,767. The exports were—of merchandise, Rs. 9,41,98,591, treasure, Rs. 43,46,506,—total, Rs. 9,85,45,097.

The following statements show the value of the imports and exports respectively for the last five years:—

IMPORTS. 1844-45 7,69,26,298 Re 1845-46 ,, 6.29.11.297 1846-47 1847-48 6,47,33,826 ,, 5,39,81,607 " 1848-49 5,70,59,767 " EXPORTS. 1844-45 Ra. 10,33,17,912 : 1845-46 10,44,87,438 1846-47 9,78,85,142 ,, 1847-48 8,63,75,893 ,,

The trade of foreigners with this port has not increased to the extent that might have been expected under the equalization of duties established by Lord Dalhousie in Maroh 1848. The increase of imports from France is only Rs. 60,091, and from North America Rs. 5,93,603. The American export trade has actually fallen off to the extent of Rs. 7,26,562, but that of France has increased Rs. 13,24,473. The exports to France, which in 1846-47 were Rs. 40,31,748, and sunk to Rs. 25,80,120, have now again risen to Rs. 39,04,593. The improvement in the export trade is owing chiefly to the larger shipments to Great Britain, which rose fr. Rs. 4,15,31,783 in 1847-48, to Rs. 5,06,42,168 in 1848-49. Of this last amount, however, Rs. 31,22,789 was in treasure.

In the increased shipments silk, indigo, and opium figure most largely.

The total amount of duties collected at the Custom-House was Rs. 74,43,359, against Rs. 76,08,265 in 1847-48, the next decrease being Rs. 1,64,906. There is a decrease of Rs. 5,48,803 in the duties on salt imported in British and Foreign bottoms, against which may be set an increase of Rs. 4,56,776 on bonded salt imported in British bottoms. The duties on Foreign imports show a deficit of Rs. 1,31,131, while there is an increase on Foreign imports of Rs. 1,01,433.

The trade of Calcutta has been carried in 771 British vessels of an aggregate burden of 2,67,228 tons, and 110 Foreign vessels of 42,321 tons, importing; and in 624 British vessels of 2,59,814 tons, and 112 Foreigners of 44,568 tons exporting. This includes coasting craft.

BANK MEETING AT BENARES.

At the Bank meeting held at Benares, on the 9th instant, it was resolved to terminate the existence of the unfortunate concern. There were present eight European and fifteen native shareholders, who were in convocation for four hours, during which time, as we learn with pleasure and surprise, "good humour prevailed," a happy state of things which must, we suppose, be attributed, at least in part, to the judicious management of the Rev. Mr. Shurman, who occupied the chair.

According to a statement drawn up by Mr. Dunbar, the secretary of the bank, it may be assumed that the concern is perfectly solvent as regards third parties, and that the maximum of the loss to be borne by the shareholders is not more than Rs. 3,62,097. This sum is represented as "just about equal to what is due by one party in his individual capacity, and conjointly with others for loans taken for the use of a steam company and two sugar companies." In other words, the only doubtful debt is that of Colonel Pew and his associates. The remaining two lacs out of the paid-up capital of five-and-a-half is believed to be realisable within six months; and, according to Major Stewart, one of the directors, there is room to hope that the greater part of Colonel Pew's debt will be eventually recovered. The Colonel himself says that his balance sheet "looks well."

The plan proposed by Mr. Dunbar for winding up the affairs of the bank is a somewhat complicated one; but the basis of it is an absorption of the shares at a discount of 30 per cent., the estimated amount of deficiency after third parties have been paid, and good debts realised.

The most critical subject of discussion at the meeting seems to have been the propriety or impropriety of publishing the history of the bank and its downfal, for the benefit of its shareholders. The tug of war was betwixt the Chips, led by Dr. Berwick, and the Chaps, marshalled by Dr. Edlin. We need hardly say that the public party carried it against the private one, or that for the sake of all parties we are pleased with the result. We rather admire Dr. Berwick's appeal to evangelical Christianity in a meeting chiefly composed of devoted Hindoos in their own most holy city.— Hurkaru, July 19.

The Benares Recorder confirms what we said of the trial of Dr. Edlin, by court-martial, for accusing one of the Benares bank directors of cheating. Our contemporary states that the charge had been furnished from head-quarters, and was for unbecoming conduct in having used insulting language towards Capt. Fagan, deputy-paymaster of the division, and one of the bank directors.

The Recorder, describing the Kashinath Biswas, who read such a lecture on the short-comings of Col. Pew, at the Ganges Company's meeting, says he is "a young lad of about 17 or 18, who, on the death of his father; late head-writer in the Governor-General's agent's office, was employed in his place."—Ibid. July 21.

MILITARY GAMBLING.

GAMBLING is becoming, we are happy to think, all but obsolete as a system in the Indian army even in the hill stations. Now and then, nevertheless, one does hear of gross instances of glaring departures from the rules of propriety in this respect, and in proportion to their rarity seems to be their enormity. A recent case has come to our knowledge, which we consider a fair and proper subject for public notice. An officer in a regiment of N.I. now posted beyond the Sutlej, but at the time of the transaction under the command of Sir Dudley Hill, incautiously confided to a friend that he had, on some former occasion, either been expelled from, or refused admittance into, one of the gambling-houses abounding in that sink of iniquity Baden-Baden. Soon after this singular revelation, this officer and his friend, a major commanding a regiment of native infantry in the Bengal army, sat down to gamble, and before the game they were engaged on was concluded, the captain (we purposely avoid the use of the designation "gentleman" in either case) had won from his opponent the small sum of Rs. 26,000! The major, nettled at his loss it is presumeable, and probably unable to pay, resorted to the subterfuge, in order to evade the demand, of alleging the necessity of his opponent explaining the circumstance under which he was expelled the gambling-house in Germany, before he could claim payment of his winnings from him. The captain scouted the idea, and threatened to, indeed did, report the case to higher regimental authority; the major feared the matter might become serious, was cowed, and offered a compromise to the amount of Rs. 13,000, exclusive of a buggy and horse, which were at once made over to the winner, and which he uses in the face of the public of the station, to whom the circumstances of the whole case are patent. No money had been paid up to the date of our last letter on the subject. Now the peculiar features of this transaction are, that the loser is, as we have said, an officer of standing in the army, that he exercises the responsible charge of the command of his regiment, and that, instead of setting to his subordinates an example of propriety and good conduct, he positively holds out, by his precept, a premium to indulgence in a propensity of the most degrading nature. Considering the notoriety this case has obtained, we cannot but express our surprise that an inquiry has not been made, and that the major and captain have not both been called upon to explain or extenuate their conduct, if in a position to do so. The officer commanding the Punjab Division has only to ask the first man he meets with, who is alluded to, and he will be told; that is, presuming he does not already know .- Delhi Gaz. July 11.

The Friend of India gives the following version of the case :-

"Two officers in the Army of Reserve sat down to ccarté, and one of them, who was in command of a corps, lost a sum stated at Rs. 26,000 to the other. Some report had been spread of some unpleasant affair in which the winner had been implicated at one of the baths in Germany, and the loser refused to pay down the amount till it was satisfactorily explained. This refusal brought the circumstances to the knowledge of the public, and the winner is said to have appealed for protection from the slander to the officer commanding his own corps. We are now informed that the commanding officer who was so unfortunate at cearté was induced to retract the insinuation, and that the matter has been compromised by the payment of Rs. 13,000 and a horse and buggy."

What will our readers say, when we tell them that before the play commenced the commanding officer made his junior satisfactorily prove to him that he could pay Rs. 25,000 if he lost it; and it was not until the younger man declined, on request, to forego a part of his winnings that the older one heard of his having been "turned out of a hell at Baden Baden some years ago"—a matter, by the way, which no one else ever heard of before?

The case must become the subject of inquiry, and therefore, for the present, we shall say nothing further about it.—Mofussilite, July 12.

The Mofussilite adds: "Touching the amount of Rs. 13,000, which the winner (Captain Da Costa, 58th N.I.) is said to have accepted, we are informed that such sum was a varded to him by certain parties to whom the affair was referred—and that as far as the winner was concerned, he held out for every rupee being paid to him. After the report, set affoat by his opponent, it would, indeed, be a serious reflection upon his character, if he voluntarily resorted to a compromise."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to June 7, reached Calcutta July 16; and that of June 25, per Bentinck, on Aug. 6.

-It is said that the local government have received CONVICTS. instructions to send all convicts to the Cape, instead of Van Diemen's Land.

GENERAL WHISR'S return to the Presidency will, it is reported, be celebrated by an entertainment at Dum-Dum.

QUEEN'S TROOPS. - We are told that the arrangements for the Queen's troops are as follow :- Part of the 96th embark to-day for Ghazeepore. When the regiment has all gone up, the 70th is to be marched into the fort from Dum-Dum. On the arrival of the 87th from England, the 70th is to be sent up-country; and the fort is to be garrisoned for the next year by the 87th. The 75th, which is also on the way here, is to be sent either to Dum. Dum or Chinsurah, as may be determined on, but most likely to Chinsurah. Should any regiments be required for China, the 75th will be available at once. - Hurharu, July 14.

THE HARDINGE STATUE.-We are requested to mention that the committee of the Hardinge statue fund have the pleasure to communicate for the information of the subscribers, that they have received intimation of the arrangements made by the London committee, consisting of Mr. C. H. Cameron, the Right Hon. Sir Edward Ryan, and Colonel Wood, with Mr. Foley, for the execution of an equestrian statue of Lord Hardinge in bronze. Lord Hardinge's figure is to be eight feet in height, and the first sitting had been quite satisfactory. The committee have further to intimate their having remitted 1,600l. to Mr. Cameron, by the last mail, on account of the statue.—Ibid.

GOVERNMENT SAVINGS BANK.—The receipts of the Government Savings Bank during the last official year were Rs. 94.83,177; the withdrawals Rs. 51,96,471. The total number of depositors at present is 6,127, of whom nearly one-third are natives. The average amount deposited is Rs. 700 for each individual.

Successor to Major Birch.—The Englishman hears that Mr. Macleod Wylie, junior commissioner in the Court of Requests, is likely to succeed to the vacancy on the bench of magistrates created by the removal of Major Birch. We have also heard that Mr. Reddie, clerk to Sir Arthur Buller, has a fair chance of the appointment; but there can, we hope, be no truth in this rumour; as Mr. Reddie, who has been in India but a very short time, and whose merits are quite untried, can, if the appointment is not disposed of according to interest alone, have no claims that will stand against those of Mr. Wylie, who has been long known at the bar and the Court of Requests. - Hurkaru, July 24.

Scinde Prize-money. - A second and final distribution of Scinde prize-money has been ordered. The amount for division are upon various deductions, including one of Rs. 2,73,677 for Sir Charles Napier's additional sixteenth of the former instalment, is Rs. 10,89,360, of which Sir Charles takes an eighth, or Rs. 1,36,170. The entire amount of the conqueror's share of the spoils of Scinde is Rs. 6,83,522-very little short of the eventy thousand pounds at which it had been estimated. Hurkaru, August 7.

THE CENTRALIZATION of our Indian administration is one main cause of the absence of progressive improvement. one seems to be trusted with the smallest responsibility which can possibly be thrown upon those to whom he is subordinate. The smallest matters are incessantly referred to the highest authority; and hence the witty remark of Jacquemont, that the Government of India was a Government of paper. whose vocation it should be to give their minds up to the consideration of large and comprehensive views, and to bring broad plans of improvement to maturity, are smothered with details. It is the system which is at fault, and not those who move and act in it; and the system will never be reformed, except by reiterated exposures of its absurdity, and of the disadvantages it inflicts upon the country.—Friend of India.

BOONDER.—Letters from Kotah state that the Rajah of Boondee was constructing a bridge of boats across the Chumbul, and that he intended making roads and bridges throughout his dominions. Government had granted the services of a gunner of the artillery for these purposes, who had had extensive experience in such works in England. The Boondee Rajah is represented as an intelligent man. He it was who first introduced into Rajwarra the practice of medicine and surgery, on European principles, in 1814, by establishing a hospital at his capital, under a native doctor, who now enjoys the honour of prescribing occasionally for the prince and his family, as well as for the domestic priest and Hindoo physician. The Bengal Government very liberally provide drugs and surgical instruments at prime CONVEYANCE OF INTELLIGENCE.—The Englishman reports that a letter, covered with unknown characters, which had been taken from the leg of a pigeon, was brought to the office of that journal. It is not improbable that it is by means of these birds that intelligence is often conveyed from various parts of India to the native merchants, long before it reaches the ears even of the members of Government.

ESTATE OF MACKINTOSH AND Co.—The seventh dividend at Company's annas five per Sa. Rs. 100 is now payable at the office of John Cochrane, esq., official assignee, Calcutta.

ABYSSINIA .- A letter from Suez, quoted in the Englishman, mentions that Mr. Plowden, H. M.'s consul in Abyssinia, had reached Gondar, and delivered his presents to Ras Ali, who was much pleased.

AT THE BATTLE OF CHILIANWALLAH, when the Sikhs had outflanked Godby's brigade and attacked the 2nd (Company's) European regiment in the rear, a little drummer-boy, not more than thirteen years of age, who accompanied the corps at his own urgent request into the field, stood his ground with the steadiness of a veteran, while the Sikh cavalry charged on either side of him. Such rare courage in a boy excited the admiration of his comrades; but the lad's reply to his mother's inquiry regarding the affair is deserving of greater commendation: "I was not afraid, mother; it was the Lord's will that I should be spared." Let him that would sneer at the simple answer of a simple boy be placed in similar circumstances and act as well. -Benares Recorder.

OPIUM .- The Calcutta papers state that Government has announced its determination to bring nearly the same quantity of opium into the market in the year 1849-50 as that which formed the investment of the previous year. The following is a tabular statement of the operations of the past three years :

In the year 1846-47 the supply was, 21,649 chests.

,, 1848 49 36,000

,, 1848 49 ,, 36,000 ,, The clear profit of the British Government of India from the consumption of opium by the Chinese, at the end of the official year 1848-49, including the tax on Malwa opium at Bombay, will be found to have fallen very little short of 3,200,000/.

COLONEL MOUNTAIN, the adjutant-general of H. M. forces in India, has had a dangerous attack of cholera at Simla, but at the date of the last advices was pronounced out of danger. believed to be the first case of spasmodic cholera which has occurred to a resident at this sanatarium.

RUSTOMJEE COWASJEE, Esq., the eminent Parsee merchant, has been compelled to seek the protection of the Insolvent Court Examinations at the College of Fort William .- There was a report lately that some of the moonshees of Fort William College had been detected in supplying to some of the young civilians the written translations which the latter were to hand to the examiners as their own. We have heard that the circumstance was reported to the Government, and that in the course of the inquiry which was made, the moonshees admitted their delinquency, but excused themselves by declaring that the young civilians obliged them to act as they had done, and that several (naming them), who had passed college as competent linguists, had done so by the adoption of translations supplied to them. As the statements of the moonshees implicated so many civil servants, some of whom were in employ in distant parts of the country, the Government, it seems, thought it prudent to hush up the matter, and have merely ordered that the delinquent moonshees shall be discharged if again caught in the fact. The examiners, however, have been reprimanded for having permitted such a system to exist without detection a hint to them that they should not have made any stir about the matter. It is the result of such practices that the civil servants are ordinarily so deficient in the vernacular tongues. Few of them can comprehend papers written in the Bengalee, and few make themselves readily understood by the natives. But the service must be maintained, that is certain, and no more need be said on the subject at present.—Englishman, July 21.

LIEUT. GILBERT .- The Delhi Gazette records the death of Lieut. Gilbert, of the 2nd grenadiers, in assisting to extinguish a fire in the lines of the 9th regiment N.I. While pulling a chopper off one of the huts, he fell, and literally impaled himself on some bamboos that were sticking up; he had just strength enough to call for help to lift him off, when he became insensible, and died half-an-hour afterwards.

COURT MARTIAL.

ENSIGN WILLIAM HENRY HANKET, 38th L I.

Head-quarters, 9th July, 1849.—At a general court-martial assembled at Lucknow, on Wednesday, June 27th, 1849. Ens. W. H. Hankey, 88th L.I., was arraigned on the following charge,

For highly unbecoming conduct.

First. - In having at Lucknow, on or about Feb. 28th, 1849, retained and fraudulently appropriated to his own use, the sum of Rs. 21, sent by Capt. W. J. B. Knyvett, of the same regt., to Lieut. J. J. Hockley, of the 66th N.I., with a note addressed to that officer, which money and note had been taken by mistake to him, Ens. Hankey; he being well aware at the time ! , that he had no such money to receive from Capt. Knyvett;

Digitized by Google

and, secondly, in having, a few days subsequently, addressed to Capt. Knyvett a receipt for the money, which he fraudulently signed "Hockley," without initials, and with some of the letters of the name written over to make it bear some resemblance to his own name, but so as to deceive Capt. Knyvett into the belief that the money had duly reached its destination, and with intent so to deceive him.

Finding.—Guilty.
Sentence.—To be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.
(Signed) C T N C. J. NAPIER, Gen. C .- in-C.

Recommendation.—The Court, having performed a painful duty in awarding the only sentence in their estimation commensurate with the offence committed, beg to recommend the pri-soner to the merciful consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, as they think, from his extreme youth and inexperience, he may have been unaware of the serious nature of the offence; and in the hope that clemency may have a beneficial effect on his future conduct.

Remarks. - On the 21st ultimo, I wrote some remarks on the recommendation to mercy made by a general court-martial which tried Diaram Opediah, a jemadar in the 2nd grenadiers. To those remarks I now refer the officers who have recommended Ens. Hankey to mercy: a proceeding which does so little credit to the court, that I cannot believe it to have been unanimously voted. What! pardon and turn back among the officers of the Indian army, a man convicted of felony! On what grounds does the majority of this court cast upon the C.-in-C. the pain of refusing pardon? On the grounds of youth! Has he not been nearly a year and a half in the army? Has he not a commission? Is he not, by the rules of the service, deemed old enough to sit, and has he not sat as an officer in judgment, and as a magistrate to try and punish others? Is he not old enough to be intrusted, and has he not been intrusted, with the command of men? with a subaltern's command in peace and in war? and when men's lives and safety depend upon the conduct of a subaltern? Has not that glorious uniform, which he has disgraced by two infamous actions, sufficed, by its recognized honour, to introduce him to the best society, even into the presence of the sovereign? And would the majority of the court wish me to leave it on the back of such a man as the prisoner? Has he been tempted by misfortune and distress? No! He avows his wealth; he has had the education of a gentleman; his misconduct seems to be the result of innate moral turpitude. Had the prisoner been horror-struck at the enormity of his guilt, avowed his crime, and cast himself, repentant and con-science-smitten, upon the mercy of the court, I could have understood the feelings of those who recommended him to mercy. But such is not the case. On the contrary, while conscious of his guilt, he deliberately adds to his crime by the effrontery, the sophistry, and the falsehood of his defence! To pardon such an offender would be an insult to the army, and I will not do it.

(Signed) C. J. Napire, General,

Commander-in-Chief.

The name of Ens. W. H. Hankey will cease to be borne on the returns of the 38th L. I., from the date on which this order may be published at Lucknow, of which a report is to be made to the adj.-gen. of the army, and to the asst.-adj.-gen. at the presidency.

MADRAS.

MADRAS RAILWAY.

The survey of the intended line of railway from Madras has been completed for a distance of thirteen miles, and the results are eminently favourable, so far as the engineer-The road is almost a dead ing details are in question. level, presenting a rise only of four-and-a-half feet per mile, something under fifty-six feet through the entire distance. For the first two miles out of Madras the soil is but indifferent, and will require to be strengthened. The next two miles is composed of very loose material, consisting of two parts of sand, and one of clay; for a mile-and a-half further on, the ground is half sand and half clay, after which, the line runs through a soil well calculated to sustain the weight of the iron road.

will be hardly any cuttings, but towards Madras a great deal of filling up will be necessary, an idea of the extent of which may be gathered from the fact, that the road at Barrie and Co.'s dispensary, is six feet below the level of the bul-warks at the beach; the general level of Blacktown, in its most populous part has been found to be about two and a half feet above the surf-line, and as a matter of course the drains of this densely inhabited district, however skilfully made, must needs be beneath the surface of the Bay of Bengal. This little fact says much either for the credit of certain bygone engineers, or for the unhappy necessities of our local position. When we have done narrating these small preliminary matters anent the railway, will anybody be kind enough to tell us what has become of the committee and the project? No reports of proceedings are published. No advertisement inform the good folks of Madras what is doing, and what is going to be done in due season. Is the scheme to share the fate of the pier company and exist in torpor, like a toad in a stone, alive, yet invisible? The enterprising folk who have undertaken to manage it, will be entitled to the praise of having acted cautiously; but they must not forget that, if slowness is not accom-panied by sureness, the half even of their present small merits will be shorn away .- Athenœum, July 31.

We have heard much in our time of magnificent charges made by railway employés in England, and a little of still more costly claims put forward for work and labour done by gentlemen engaged in similar tasks in India. But we think that whatever the mistakes the committee of the proposed Madras Railway may happen to fall into by and bye, no one will be inclined to accuse them of leaving up to the present moment made a lavish ex-penditure of their funds. The thirteen miles of ground which had been gone over from this place to Poonamallee, have been surveyed and accurately levelled for something like Rs. 700, or Rs. 53 per mile, plans and drawings included. This fact might seem to imply either that English surveyors were too plentiful, or that the work was very badly done, or again that the committee knew the precise value of Company's rupees. So far as the first hypothesis is concerned, it is disposed of when we say that there is but one European that we know of in Madras unconnected with the services, who is able to survey and take levels with the requisite accuracy and skill. With reference to the second supposition, we have had an opportunity of testing the quality of the labour performed, and conclude that Mr. Swan has executed his task to the perfect satisfaction of his employers. The remaining possible opinion is very easily put to the proof. The surveyor was paid at the rate of something less than Rs. 150 a month, and hired too by the job, instead of receiving a permanent engagement. If the committee can get all the work done at the same rate of remuneration, it will be a lucky thing for the shareholders; but in that case we would rather decline giving any opinion as to how it would fare with their servants.Ibid. Aug. 2.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MAJOR-GENERAL CULLEN.—We have heard, upon pretty good authority, that Major-general Cullen, the resident of Travancore, has applied officially to Government to be relieved from his high post with the view of returning to England. General Cullen is a major-general of 1841, and has been in the service of the Hon. Company forty-five years, having entered the Madras artillery in 1804.—Athenæum, Aug. 11.

SMAIL CAUSE COURT.—The Hindoos of the Madras Presidency have convened a public meeting of the members of their community to petition the Government for an extension of some of the provisions of the proposed Small Cause Court Act;—those of Bombay, on the other hand, we learn from the Gentleman's Gazette, "comprehending the imposition attempted to be palmed off on them under pretence of giving them cheap law, in the proposed Courts of Requests, have got up a petition against the Draft Act."—Ibid.

COURTS MARTIAL.—We understand that two officers of H.M.'s 25th regiment are about to be brought to trial, on charges of misconduct, while at an entertainment, given by the mess of a native corps at Vepery.—Ibid. July 21.

ABSENCE OF OFFICERS FROM THEIR CORFS.—As an instance of the extent to which the corps in the Hon. Company's service are denuded of officers, a correspondent of the Athenæum, at Trichinopoly, gives the following list of officers present with the head-quarters of the corps of N.C. at that station; the greater part are absent on detachment duty:—I lieut.-col. commanding; majors, none; captains, none; lieutenants (except the reg. staff), none; cornets, one; veterinary surgeon, none

MR. MACLEAN.—We understand that Mr. Alexander Maclean, the late third member of the Board of Revenue, has been permitted to retire to England upon the full annuity of 1,000% per annum. Some doubts were felt at the Presidency, as to whether the Court would not feel inclined to make an exception in this instance to the usual rule, in consequence of the scarcely questionable transactions in which Mr. Maclean had allowed himself to become involved. But no objection whatever was, we believe, offered by the Honourable Company. The betrayer of Mr. Maclean, the well-named Mahomed Chouse, is said to be very anxious to ingratiate himself again with the Madras Government. The final removal of one of his victims from the neighbourhood of Chepauk may tend perhaps in some degree to further the hopes of his respectable highness.—Ibid. Ann. 7.

Sugar Cultivation.—We have received a very long and interesting communication from Mr. Turner, a sugar planter at Kotagherry, upon the subject of cane cultivation upon an improved plan, as compared with the native method. The argument of Mr. Turner affirms the profitable employment of capital in this species of enterprise.—Ibid. July 17.

Augmentation of the Engineers.—The Speciator expresses AUGMENTATION OF THE ENGINEERS.—The Spectator expresses the general conviction that the augmentation of the corps of engineers, a measure which was strongly urged by Lord Tweeddale, is likely ere long to be carried out.

Annexation of the Punjab.—When the annexation of the Punjab was still an open question, we were among the very few members of the Indian press who deprecated that measure, on the grounds of morality and expedience. After the accomplishment of it, however, we ceased to discuss the matter, because it was useless to ring the changes on a subject which had become a matter of history instead of speculation. Nothing since urged in Lord Dalhousie's proclamation or correspondence has at all shaken our conviction of the ethical impropriety of the seizure. We believe it to have been a direct violation of solemn obligations, voluntarily contracted by his predecessor, and as for the expedience of the step, it turns out to be more equivocal, in a financial point of the view, than even we were prepared to expect. So far from augmenting the revenue, it is now ascertained, and this on the best authority, that the new acquisition will not defray its own calculated charges, "on the most economical estimate" of the civil and military administration of the country, by the full sum of a half a million sterling!" Nor does this gloomy prospect relate only to its present financial production, for the same authority expressly states that "the revenue of the entire kingdom of the Punjab, derived from land [which is now Rs. 1,14,40,000, out of a gross amount of Rs. 1,55,00,000], cannot be estimated, even for future years, at a higher sum than one million and a half sterling." Such is the conclusion arrived at by the Governor-General, after a patient and searching examination of the whole question, and we commend his lordship's opinion to the notice of these, who had their mouths so full of annexation a little while ago, that they shouted themselves hoarse in praise of the measure. They will moderate their transports somewhat, when they perceive what John Company is to pay for their whistle.—Spectator, July 20.

THE NEW CHIEF JUSTICE OF MADRAS.—We extract the following remarks upon the qualification required of a Madras judge from the Athenœum, July 12:-" In a little while we may expect to hear that the Ministry at home have provided a successor to Sir Edward Gambier, our present Chief Justice. One can hardly hope that, in this instance, the ordinary rule will be vio-lated, and that the voice either of the legal profession or of the public, will be allowed to influence the selection. Some helpless, but not hopeless, protégé of the Board of Control, will no doubt have an opportunity of exchanging the seclusion of chambers, where the attorney's foot-fall is rarely or never heard, for the bustle and dignity of the Madras bench, the grandeur of knighthood, and the solid enjoyment of 5,000l. per annum. It may happen, that, in supposed deference to the wishes of this community, Sir William Burton will be invited to move up a step; but if we do not expect to gain anything from the character of the appointment made in Cannon-row, so, on the other hand, we are content to forego any possible advantages which might follow the promotion of the puisne judge. We would rather not see that learned person in the possession of a casting vote. Most willingly do we admit that it would never be exerted but for conscientious reasons, but on the judgment-seat it is not sufficient that a man is able to exhibit at all times the virtues of candour and honesty. judge who lacks these qualities disgraces the bench, but he may have them even in excess and yet not be its ornament. It must be recollected, that in this country, where the occupants of the Bench perform also the office of a jury, and where the opportunity of showing cause for a new trial affords but little advantage to the previous loser, the necessity of having men on the judgment-seat filled with the knowledge of the past, and acquainted with the human nature that surrounds them, is most imperative. The law of appeal exists, but is practically inoperative, since the poor man is prohibited from resorting to it, and the rich man entertains a well-founded horror of intrusting his cause, and the control perhaps of his entire worldly wealth, to the guardianship of a strange tribunal, which acts according to European forms, fifteen thousand miles off: There must be imperfections in the best mode of administering the best laws, but there are peculiar difficulties in the way of a right performance of judicial duty in this country, which require unusual care to obviate. One of the best modes, as it seems to us, which our rulers could adopt for this purpose would be, to make the office of advocate-general in each presidency a sure stepping-stone to an eventual judgeship—a certain term of servitude being in all cases believe that no amount of mental ability and earnest striving can make up for the want of that knowledge of the native character, which can only be acquired by a long residence in the East. Crimes are committed here, the motives for which are utterly incomprehensible to the untrained European intellect; notions of morals prevail, which have no parallel in the remaining ethical systems of the world; the scales in which testimony must be weighed; the standard by which actions are to be judged; nay, in many cases, the very mode in which justice is to be measured out, are all foreign to western notions of rule and habit; and we dare venture to say that no honest man has ever laid his head upon his pillow during the days of his probation as an Indian Judge, without having entertained the painful thought, that he may have been, since his uprising, the unconscious instrument of wrong-doing. The reform which we recommend is one which may be said to concern the public only, for, unless an Advocate-General at either Presidency is found to be a person of very inferior intellect, and sadly deficient in knowledge, it is very clear that his official income, combined with the profits of his private practice, must render the appointment to the higher post a matter of complete indifference to him, so far as pecuniary results are in question. A title we readily allow is worth something, and an improved position in the Indian court calendar a blessing not to be despised; but take it altogether, the utmost benefit which could accrue to any of the legal persons concerned, would be as nothing when compared to the solid advantages which must arise to the community from the fact of their elevation; for own part we are ready at Madras to be the first to try the experiment, than which avowal, no greater proof of sincerity can be required.

CULTIVATION OF SUGAR BY EUROPEANS IN INDIA.—The Madras papers inform us that Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., the largest and most public-spirited house of business at that presidency, after having expended large sums in endeavouring to introduce the cultivation of superior cane under the superintendence of Europeans, have been at length constrained to relinquish it. It would thence appear, after the experience of nearly sixty years in various parts of India, that the cultivation of the sugarcane by Europeans is altogether a hopeless undertaking.

Ricz.—The Madras Athenœum affirms that the produce of rice in Tanjore has so greatly exceeded the demand, that a large crop is a positive disadvantage, and the rich landholders of Tan-jore are unable to pay their rent to Government.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

July 24 - The following movements of corps are ordered:-H.M.'s 81th regt. from Secunderabad to Trichinopoly. 2nd European L.I. from Trichinopoly to Secunderabad.

Head-Quarters, Ootacamund, June 28, 1849.

His Exc. the C.-in-C. is pleased to establish the following rules for the instruction of officers of infantry appointed to do duty with the corps of sappers and miners.

1. No officer shall be eligible for appointment to do duty with the sappers and miners, who is not in every respect qualified to command a company in his own regiment; -nor should any offer himself as a candidate unless he has both talent and taste for engineer duties, a determination to study, and a fair knowledge of mathematics and military drawing.

2. Six months after an officer has joined the head-quarters of the corps, he will be required by the commandant to execute with sufficient accuracy a reconnoitring and trigonometrical survey-and to make a section of any piece of ground that may be pointed out, as well as to pass a satisfactory examination in vulgar and decimal fractions, the use of logarithms, practical geometry, mensuration, and plane trigonometry, so as to enable him to make the ordinary calculations connected with the measurement of land, heights, distances, &c.

3. At the end of twelve months after joining, an officer is expected to be able to plan, trace, and superintend the construction of batteries and field-works such as are generally executed by sappers and miners on service.

4. An officer unable to pass satisfactory examinations at either of the appointed periods, will be remanded to his own regiment.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of June 25 reached Bombay Aug. 4; and the Mail of July 7 arrived on the following day.

COLONEL OUTRAM. -- We regret to observe that Col. Outram has been obliged to obtain an extension for six months of his leave of absence, his health not being sufficiently recovered to admit of his speedy return to his duties. - Bombay Times, July 28.

STATIONS. - We mentioned on Saturday last that the station of Mhow was hereafter to be garrisoned by Bombay troops, and to form part of this presidency: we now learn that Belgaum is to be once more given up to the Madrassees. The head-quarters of the Highlanders go to Aden, the left wing comes to Bombay, as formerly stated. — Ibid.

MEDICAL.—We learn that Surg. A. Durham, M.D., in medical charge of the Goozerat provincial battalion, has been appointed to the 13th N.I.; and that Assist.-surg. F. J. M. Musgrove, lately in charge of the lunatic asylum, succeeds to the appointment just vacated by him. Dr. Doig, late field-surgeon with the Bombay force at Peshawur, reached Surat about the middle of July, and left by dawk on the 17th. His arrival may now be daily looked for.—Bombay Times, August 1.

Malwa.-By letters from Mhow of the 23rd July, we learn that Capt. Timins and Lieut. Edwards, of the Mehidpoor contingent, were at Indore very sick. The weather was delightful, and the fall of rain for the season had been twelve and a half inches. Capt. Fenwick, who held an appointment under the Holkar Government at Tandler, was about to resign, he having obtained another on the Godavery river. He is said to be a shrewd hard-working man, and his loss to the state would be a heavy one. Mhow was very dull—nothing astir. A few horses were in training for the races.

THE LATE BREVET. - The officers who have so severely suffered from the recent brevet by having their juniors put over their heads, are about, we observe, to memorialize the Court of Directors on the extreme hardship of rewarding one set of their servants, however deserving, at the expense of another whose sole demerits have been that they were not so fortunate as to be permitted to take the field. The great distinctive of the service of the East-India Company lies in its being one of seniority; every officer believing on receiving his cadetship, that his eligibility for high appointments will depend strictly on his standing, if seniority be combined with fitness for employment. This principle is completely upset by the operations of the brevet; and in the Bombay army there are no fewer than six regimental captains who have been promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonels, and who in all brigade and other general commands will take precedence of the oldest majors in the service: how many of the same class there may be on the Bengal side we have not as yet ascertained. The prospects of senior officers are thus in this direction blighted utterly, and a succession of brevets would upset, as this most injuriously suspends, the operation of the seniority principle altogether. Far from grudging the Punjaub warriors their rewards, we should most heartly rejoice to hear that the public purse was in a position to give them the solid pudding of full batta in addition to the empty éclat of rank and duties,—though rank under the circumstances referred to is to them far from empty. it would just be as equitable and fair to put the officers who had not been so fortunate as to be permitted to join, on stoppages, that out of retrenchments from their pay and allowances those who had might be rewarded, as to entitle brevet rank to supersede seniority. It is government, and not their brethren in arms, that has gained by their gallant deeds: let those who have gained by them requite them. If the state cannot afford to award its servants as they deserve, let them have the rank and decorations, and nothing more: to recompense one set of servants who have deserved well, at the expense of another who have, at all events, no demerits requiring discountenance or punishment, is not only unjust, but in the last degree unadvisable,—as will be most fully and frankly admitted by those who are the unsoliciting gainers by the injustice.

MOOLTAN RANSOM AND PRIZE-MONEY.—A correspondent of the Bombay Telegraph states that no part of the ransom expected from Mooltan has yet been obtained, and that there appears little probability of its final realization; and the Mofussilite gives the mortifying intelligence that the prize money obtained from Mooltan will not amount to more than sixteen lakhs in all.

A Horse Dawk is about to be established from Bombay to Indore.

RAIN. -The pluviometrical register indicates a fall of rain, up to six o'clock yesterday morning, amounting to 69 inches and 27 cents. We have now, of course, upwards of 70 inches; and this gives us only about five to complete the annual average. In fourteen days, 42 inches 12 cents. have fallen,—an occurrence, we believe, unparalleled in our local meteorological annals. It must be remembered that, though the registered quantity is as we have stated, the actual fall has in all probability been still greater, since strong winds have prevailed during a considerable part of the fortnight, and these have necessarily prevented a very exact measurement. In addition to houses, several walls have fallen down; and the gales, we have heard, have prostrated many a stately cocoa-nut tree. We need hardly say that the tanks, wells, and ditches, are all well filled. The rain has been so protracted and continuous, that people will be delighted when it ceases, and they have the opportunity of seeing the sun's face again.—Telegraph, July 31.

Sir C. Forezs.—The Borrboy Times states that Sir Jama-setjee Jejeebhoy has, out of some funds placed at his disposal for charitable purposes by Sir C. Forbes, paid Rs. 30,000 into the Government treasury in the name of Sir Charles as his contribution to the District Benevolent Society of Bombsy, the interest of which sum will be paid from time to time by Government to the treasurers of that society.

MALABAR AND CANARA .- A correspondent of the Telegraph alludes to a report that the provinces of Malabar and Canara are shortly to be annexed to the Bombay Presidency.

RESERVE FORCE. - The Mofussitite has heard that Government intend keeping up a strong force either at Umballah or Meerut, and that H. M.'s 29th and H. M.'s 53rd regiments will accordingly come to Meerut in the cold weather.

DR. McEGAN. - The Bombay Times has received intelligence from the Nizam's dominions of an act of intrepidity by Dr. McEgan, who before distinguished himself in the action at Gource on the 6th May last. He was on his way from Hingolee to Mominabad, accompanied by two troopers, when three armed Rohillahs suddenly presented themselves. Dr. McEgan and his men succeeded in taking them prisoners, and delivering them over to Brigadier Beatson.

CHINA.

The weather has continued sultry during the month, and while the northern districts of China are flooded, and much of the young crop destroyed, the south has been unusually dry, and the rice crop injured for the lack of moisture. Notwithstanding the heat, the colony is tolerably healthy; the troops in particular are in excellent health. Last year H. M.'s 95th regiment lost thirty-one men between the 1st of June and the 20th of July; on the latter date ninety-one were in hospital, and about one hundred convalescents unfit for duty. This summer, so far, the deaths are few, and the patients in hospital under the usual average.

One good will result from Mr. Summers's case. tion as to the jurisdiction of the Hong-Kong court will be settled definitively. As the ordinance now stands, the jurisdiction extends to Macao; but from the correspondence between the Portuguese minister and Lord Aberdeen, it is clear that Her Majesty's Government disallowed that part of the local ordinance which declares Macao within the jurisdiction of the Hong-Kong courts of justice. The statute, however, continues unaltered, from which it may be inferred that the secretary for foreign affairs forgot to request the Hong-Kong governor to amend the act, or that his Exc. did not choose to attend to his request. The ordinance itself was the first passed by Sir Henry Pottinger; and as the correspondence between the Portuguese minister and Lord Aberdeen was during Sir John Davis's government, it is not likely that Sir John would feel any reluctance in amending his predecessor's laws, having to amend and repeal so many of his own. In this view of the case, the blame rests with Lord Aberdeen. Chief Justice Hulme recently declared that Macao is within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and we presume it will nominally remain in that peculiar position until the ordinance is amended. We apprehend, however, that no attempt will be made to enforce the ordinance, and that it will be altered ere long. Certainly it would be abourd, under ordinary circumstances, to endeavour to control the police of Macao, and had Mr. Summers been tried before a magistrate the morning after his capture and fined a few rupees for showing disrespect to the religious institutions of the country, Captain Keppel would have given himself no trouble in the matter. In taking prompt steps for the immediate liberation of Mr. Summers, Captain Keppel was no doubt controlled by a recollection of the past,-a recollection of men having been kept for years in jail for offences much less heinous in the eyes of Roman Catholics than disrespect to the ceremonies of their church. But whatever influence the local ordinance may have on the final settlement of the affair, we adhere to our first opinion that Captain Keppel was not controlled by it. He was on the point of sailing for Borneo-he considered there was danger in leaving a British subject in a Macao jail charged with having insulted the religious feelings of the people and wounded the self-respect of the governor by refusing to uncover before the Corpus Christi when ordered-he had before him precedents of long imprisonment, without the form of trial, and as a British naval officer bound to protect his countrymen whenever they are oppressed, he adopted the bold measure of liberating Mr. Summers by force of arms, the governor having previously refused to release him except as a personal favour, which favour Captain Keppel, with a proper feeling of dignity and propriety, refused to accept.—Friend of China, July 25.

COMMERCIAL. Canion, July 24, 1849. MARKETS.

The business of the month has been larger than of late in imports, that no improvement in prices,—indeed many articles have declined materially, and the only three articles in current demand at the departure of last mail, are now neglected, and the prices have materially declined. These are Iron, White Long Cloth, and Tin Plates. Iron.—Nail Rod has been affected by some arrivals, and the dealers are getting alarmed at their increasing stocks and slack demand; a decline of fully thirty cents may be quoted. Hoop, being scarce, maintains its value; as also does small round and wire. Flat and square Bar and Bolt Iron keep very low.

NETHERLANDS INDIA.

The Singapore papers announce that the Dutch expedition against the Balinese has failed a second time. The general inchief, General Michaelis, was mortally wounded. He was supposed to be in possession of secret orders from the Government of Netherlands India, relative to the course to be pursued in the expedition, and all further operations have been suspended till a reference can be made to Batavia. Meanwhile, 1,500 men, comprising one-fourth of the expedition, were attacked by disease, and it was not expected that the war would be renewed in the present year. The expense of these successive maritime expeditions must tell very severely upon the Dutch treasury in Java.

The Singapore Free Press informs us that the Dutch have again taken possession of New Guinea, apparently dreading the advent of the all-encroaching English. They hope thus to establish their own prior claim to this cluster of islands.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Cape papers to the 10th July represent that colony to be in a ferment upon the convict, or penal settlement, question. The Government decree was printed in some of the journals surrounded by a black border, and at a public meeting held at Cape Town on the 4th July, a series of very strong resolutions was adopted. They declare "that the introduction of criminals under sentence of transportation, exile, or banishment from the United Kingdom, or any other quarter, is injurious and degrading to this colony, and ought to be resisted; that the British Government has no right to degrade into a penal settlement the Cape of Good Hope, which became a portion of the British empire by capitulation and cession of a friendly power, and not by planting or conquest, with its rights and privileges as a free and not a penal settlement solemnly guaranteed; and that all attempts so to injure and degrade it are unjust and tyrannical, and may be constitutionally resisted by the inhabitants as British subjects;" that the conduct of Earl Grey in relation to the matter proved him to be " unworthy to retain any place in the government of a free people." The meeting agreed to the following pledge: "That we will not employ or knowingly admit into our establishments or houses, work with or for, or associate with, any convicted felon or felons sent to this colony under sentence of transportation, and that we will discountenance and drop connection with any persons who may assist in landing, supporting, or employing such con-

A deputation of the Anti-Convict Association waited upon the Governor, Sir Harry Smith, and presented an address from that body, which described the opposition to the measure as universal, and expressed their conviction that any attempt to carry out this injurious and degrading measure by force will involve this unoffending community in the direct calamities; adding: "Your Excellency is therefore respectfully reminded, that the moral wellbeing, prosperity, and happiness of the people whom you governs should be the paramount consideration with you, their governor, and that it is therefore your duty, as representing the Queen, to overlook all minor considerations, and to protect, at all hazards, that moral well-being, prosperity, and happiness against injury and degradation, by suspending the publication and operation of any Order in Council, or of any other order, authorizing you to receive convicted felons into this colony."

The reply of Sir Harry was as follows: "Gentlemen,-My duty indicates the line of conduct I am bound to pursue, which is recorded in my minute of the 15th inst., which I laid at that date on the table of the Legislative Council; and from which, as I there state, nothing can, or shall, induce me to swerve. My despatch to Earl Grey of the 24th May, accompanied by the numerous petitions, addresses, memorials, &c., signed by so many thousands of the community, will prevent this colony from becoming a penal settlement, or I am deeply mistaken. This address shall accompany my first despatch to Earl Grey on the subject. While I thus tell you that my duty requires me to receive in this colony the persons in question, I do not mean to turn them loose upon the colony, a course which would be inevitably productive of ill consequences. They cannot be released from control or deprived of protection, unless employment and protection shall be found for them. In what place of separation and security they will be received, pending ultimate arrangements, I shall determine hereafter, and announce for the information of such of the colonists as may be willing to give the persons in question the means of an honest livelihood.

In the course of the interview, the Hon. Mr. Ebden, who presented the address (on the 18th June), made a strong personal appeal to the Governor, who replied: "This is the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo; for forty-four years have I served her Majesty—I say it with pride—and I would rather that God Almighty strike me dead than disobey the orders of Her Majesty's Government, and thereby commit an act of open rebellion."

The South African Commercial Advertiser states that besides the pledge not to employ convicts, and to drop connection with those who do so, banks, insurance-offices, capitalists, and others, the most respected and influential members of this community, are pursuing a course that will in the end render the enforcement and demand of the measure altogether impracticable. The felons will be thrown for support on the Governor at once, and so long as they remain in the colony. It is said, that for greater security, the people in the country districts have resolved to employ no European labourer whatsoever, until the power of smuggling thieves and murderers amongst them as free emigrants shall be taken out of the hands of their rulers by Act of Parliament. From all parts of the colony accounts continued to pour in respecting the exasperation of the people. On the 6th July, the bankers of Cape Town unanimously refused to teader for sapplies of biscuit to the commissariat, lest it should be used for the support of the convicts on their arrival.

The latest intelligence from the colony is to the 1st August, at which period the Governor, in a proclamation issued on the 17th July, had announced his intention to withhold tickets of leave from the convicts expected by the Neptune; that unless he should receive instructions or authority from the Secretary of State to despatch the convicts to some other settlement, to keep them on board ship in Simon's Bay until he shall have learned Her Majesty's pleasure relative to their ultimate destination; and that, pending the announcement of Her Majesty's pleasure, no communication between the convicts and the land will be allowed, save for the purpose of supplying food, and religious and moral teaching, except in case of sickness.

The excitement of the colonists had been increased upon finding, from the publication of a despatch of Earl Grey, that the colony was destined to be the receptacle not only of civil convicts from Bermuda, but that military convicts from Mauritius, Ceylon, the East-Indies, and Hong-kong were to be transported thither, making the country, as the Zuid Afrikaan expresses it, "the cess-pool of moral corruption." The Governor was addressed to refuse to take the convicts daily expected by the Neptune, and send them elsewhere; but this proposal his Excellency declined to comply with.

In his reply to the despatch of Lord Grey, advertising him that, under the powers vested in Her Mujesty, "directions have been given that white soldiers sentenced by courts-martial in the Mauritius and Ceylon, and also Her Majesty's white soldiers sentenced in the East-Indies, shall be removed, until further orders, to the Cape of Good Hope; and those sentenced in Hong-kong, either to the Cape or Van Diemen's Land," Sir Harry Smith, in very explicit terms, condemus the measure, and recommends that "an order so obnoxious to the people of this colony" should be rescinded. "More loyal men do not exist among Her Majesty's subjects," he observes, "but on this point they are united in the bond of freeborn Englishmen."

The South African Commercial Advertiser, August 1, says:
"As the time draws near when the Neptune convict-ship will be fully due from Bermuda, the determination of the people assumes more and more of a decisive form. They have discovered that Lord Grey's scheme embraces convicts of every description, in every stage of punishment, from every part of the British dominions, as well as from the high seas. The people of the Cape of Good Hope have, therefore, arrived at the conclusion, long fore-seen, that their defence has devolved wholly on themselves; and the inhabitants of Cape Town, standing at the threshold of the colony, have resolved that the enemy shall not take them unprepared."

A long list is published of resignations of public officers in consequence of the Cape being made a penal settlement.

The elevation of the celebrated Jung Bahadur, vizier of Nepal, appears to have been attained by an ingenious combination of talent, treachery, and murder. The old king, in a fit of rage at his former minister, declared "Would that some man would destroy that minister for me!" Jung Bahadur, an officer in attendance, but by no means of sufficient rank to hope for the vizierat, went boldly to the king and inquired what his reward would be for doing it. "The vizierat," said the king, and the same night the old minister disappeared. Small and active, he appears to be everywhere at once, and clad in a complete English field-marshal's uniform, which does not fit him, being nearly three sizes too large, he has contrived to inspire the most unmitigated dread in the minds of his countrymen.—Friend of India.

Mr. Piddington, of Calcutta, has adduced another instance of spontaneous combustion of coal, on board ship, that had been wetted with salt water.

GCHINFAL IN THE PUNIAR.—At a recent meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, in Calcutta, a quantity of the cochineal insect, in a dried state, from Deenanuggur, in the Jullundur Doah, and a specimen of yarn dyed with it, were presented by Capt. F. C. Burnett, who stated that the insect is indigenous to that part of India, and is picked from the common cactus, of which there are immense hedges.

A favourite maxim of the Emperor Akbar, and which he had engraved upon one of his seals, was "I never knew a man lost upon a straight road."

The Cities of the Plain.—Lieut. Lynch, commander of the United States expedition to the Dead Sea, states that the inference, that this entire chasm was a plain sunk and "overwhelmed" seems to be sustained by the extraordinary character of the soundings. "The bottom of this sea consists of two submerged plains, an elevated and a depressed one; the one averaging 13 the other 1,300 feet below the surface. Through the northern, and largest and deepest, in a line corresponding with the bed of the Jordan, is a ravine, which again seems to correspond with the Wady el-Jeib, or ravine within a ravine, at the south end of the sea. Between the Jabok and this sea we unexpectedly found a sudden break-down in the bed of the Jordan. If there be a similar break in the water-courses to the south of the sea, accompanied with like volcanic characters, there can scarcely be a doubt that the whole Ghor has sunk from some extraordinary convulsion, preceded, most probably, by an eruption of fire, and a general conflagration of the bitumen which abounded in the plain."

Capt. Powell, of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's service, informed Mr. Piddington that, in a steamer in which coals were found to be on fire, but were extinguished, the whole of the heated mass (of English coal) was more or less softened, so that they were obliged to cut it like soft clay.

Mr. J. Butler, writing to Major Jenkins, agent to the Governor-general in Assam, on the carthquakes so frequent there, says: "On many occasions, I have observed this remarkable circumstance: a dead calm, a stagnation of the atmosphere, and a perfect stillness is sure to prevail before the occurrence of an earthquake, if not at the time."

CHANT OF THE MUEZZINS.—At the dawn of day, the musical chant of the muezzins, from the thousand minarets of Cairo, sounds most impressively through the clear and silent air. The voices of the criers thus raised above the city always struck me as having a holy and beautiful effect. First, one or two are heard faintly in the distance; then one close to you, then the cry is taken up from the minarets of other mosques, and at last, from one end of the town to the other, the measured chant falls pleasingly on the ear, inviting the faithful to prayer. For a time it seems as if there was a chorus of voices in the air, like spirits calling upon each other to worship the Creator of all things. This cry of man, to call his brother man to prayer, seems to me more appropriate and more accordant to religious feeling than the clang and jingle of our European bells.—Curzon.

Female Emigration to New South Wales.—Out of the fifty orphan girls who were sent to Moreton Bay from the latest emigrant ship, forty-nine are already married. The fiftieth, upon being asked "why she remained single?" said that, "although she had received an excellent offer, she could not get married because there was not a bridemaid left for her; but she was anxiously waiting for the next draft of immigrants, when that little difficulty would be got over." This is a fact.—Australian Sportsman, March, 1849.

An intercepted letter from the Maharani Chunda, to Chuttur Sing, contains the following advice, showing the tender mercy of this Mother of the Sikhs: "Give the British whom you have taken prisoners one hundred blows each a day, blacken their faces, and, placing them on donkeys, parade them through your camp; cut off their noses also; by these means, in a short time, not one of the British will be left in the land." At the same time she was writing to Major Macgregor: "I entertain friendly feelings towards the British—the British have done me good," &c.

An agriculturist association has been formed at Adelaide, and a report published by that body shows that, last year, there were 29,747 acres under wheat cultivation in the colony, which produced at an average 21 bushels per acre, making the total produce of wheat 624,687 bushels. Allowing for the consumption of the resident population, and for seed, there would be a residue of 206,687 bushels, which the association recommend to be shipped to England, where the cost would be about 25s. per quarter.

RAILWAY IMPROVIDENCE. — Official returns have established the deplorable truth, that, in the years 1845, 1846, and 1847, upwards of 10,000,000l. of the money of impoverished shareholders was squandered in Parliamentary contests, a sum which, as observed by the author of Stokers and Pokers, would have constructed a national railway 500 miles in length.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

In a paper "On the Dynasty of the Sáh Kings of Suráshtra," published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, just issued, Mr. E. Thomas, of the Bengal civil service, has condensed and concentrated a mass of historical evidence, the fruit of recent researches by various investigators, which will go far to redeem India from the reproach of having no historical records.

The basis of the history of this dynasty of Indian princes is afforded by their coins, the number of which has been augmented by the discovery, about three years since, of about 400, at Junir. To these irrefragable documents are added inscriptions and the incidental contributions of Eastern and Western authors.

The following are the divisions or heads of the inquiry: 1. The Valabli era; 2. the local supersession of the Guptas by the Valabli family; 3. the identity of the Guzerat Guptas and the Guptas of the Allahabad Pillar Inscription; 4. the verification of these Guptas as the immediate successors of the Indo-Scythians; 5. the interval between the rule of the Guptas and that of the Sáh kings, and the traces of the intermediate possessors of the peninsula of Guzerat; 6. the inherent title of the Sáh kings to date in and before the century before Christ.

1. The Valabhi era he considers to be fixed by undoubted evidence to have commenced A.D. 319.

2. That the Gupta rule preceded it, the direct and independent evidence is somewhat incomplete; but direct authority is now furnished for placing a family of Guptas, evidently extensively paramount as sovereigns of India, at an era closely antecedent to the rise of the Valabhi monarchs. As yet, however, no medals of this dynasty have been definitively identified.

3. The demonstration of the identity between the heretofore denominated Kanouj Guptas and the monarchs of the same name who were supreme in Guzerat is made out by a chain of evidence, supplied by the Allahabad, Girnar, and Bhitari inscriptions, and by coins, furnishing some curious coincidences with the inscriptions; e.gr. Skanda Gupta's alteration of the reverse symbol of his own Surashtran coins from the device originally adopted from his immediate predecessor, Kumara Gupta, to the effigy of the Bull of Siva, Nandi, and the prominent fact, explicitly dwelt upon in the Bhitari Lát inscription, that Skanda Gupta was a firm adherent of the worship of Siva, as contradistinguished from the Vashnavi leaning of those he succeeded.

4. The identification of the Guptas, as the immediate successors of the Indo-Scythians, has, in so far as the numismatic coincidences extend, been fully and satisfactorily proved. "The result deducible from the combined evidence of coins and monumental inscriptions," Mr. Thomas observes, "regarding the progress of the power of the Gupta dynasty, may be summed up in a few words. In the time of the full supremacy of the family, their empire clearly extended from the foot of the hills of Nipal on the north-east, to the extremity of the peninsula of Guzerat on the south-west; its southern boundary is not so well defined, but to the north-westward, suzerainty was claimed over the Punjab to the banks of the Indus." This paramount Hindu race is seen in two instances to have used the title of Vikramáditya. These conclusions are corroborated by the written testimony of the Hindus, in the Vishnu Purána and the Raja Taranqini.

5. In following out the inquiry, as to the interval between the sway of the Guptas and that of the Sáh kings, and whether the succession of the Guptas was immediate or deferred, the principal point to be determined is, whether the Indo Scythians,—the predecessors of the Guptas, in other parts,—also possessed Suráshtra, a conclusion apparently affirmed by the appearance of their dynastic title on the local silver coinage issued by these Guptas. This point is investigated by Mr. Thomas at considerable length, from the effigies and inscriptions on the coins, and detached notices of classical and Chinese writers, the result of these various data being that the Sáh kings preceded the Indo-Scythians, and that the epoch of their domination should be dated anterior to B. C. 26.

6. The last head of inquiry is prefaced by an examination of the Sáh kings' account of themselves, as preserved in their inscription on the Girnar rock; and is followed up by a curious disquisition upon the dates inserted in the coins of the Sáh kings, which involves an elaborate examination of the different characters employed as numerals, and of the eras they represent.

In conclusion, Mr. Thomas gives a tabular summary of the principal dynastic dates, beginning with Chandra Gupta Maurya, B.C. 315; a list of kings; a very copious and learned "Detail of the Coins," and engraved plates representing their obverses and reverses.

We congratulate Indian antiquaries upon the light which this valuable paper,—so creditable to the learning and industry of the author,—casts upon the obscure subject of Hindu history.

The Asiatic Society of Calcutta have resolved, at the suggestion of the Oriental Section of the Society, to collect MSS. of the text of the Taittareya, or Black Yajur Veda, and of Sáyana Acharya's Commentary to the same, with a view to its early publication. The Sanhitá and Brámhana of the Black Yajur, accompanied with the Commentary, being very extensive, the Society have resolved to entrust the work to two editors; Babu Rájendra has offered to undertake the Brámhana, and Dr. Roer (the secretary) the Sanhitá. The edition of the Brihad Aranyaha Upanishad is nearly finished; the Kadamvari is prepared for the press, and the Kámanduki Niti Sástra is in course of publication. The Society propose to undertake the printing of the following works: the Chandogya Upanishad, with the Commentary of Mádhava Acharya; the Tika of Ananda Giri, and the Shiksha, one of the Vedángas, with the Commentary of Mádhava Acharya.

At the monthly meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Asiatic Society, 21st June, a communication from Government, consisting of "Observations on inscriptions on copper-plates dug up at Neroor, in the Koodal division of the Sawunt Warree State, in April, 1848," by Major Le Grand Jacob, was read. These inscriptions are (according to Major Jacob) in what has been termed the Cave character, or the old Sanskrit, and are of the sixth and seventh centuries, but they do not differ much from the Girnar inscriptions of the third century B. C.

At a recent meeting of the Asiatic Society of Paris, a letter was read from Hajji Abd-el-Hamid Bey, stating that he was about to travel across the entire continent of Africa, and requesting the instructions of the Society.

The casting of bells in Burmah is an important religious cere-The Maulmein Chronicle gives the following account, written by an eye-witness, of the casting of a large bell, 7 feet high and 41 in circumference, to be placed on the pagoda hill, in the district of Thayagon. The bell-mould was placed in a circular cavity in the ground, in a thick frame of wood, and filled up with a coating of earth and bricks, to retain the heat. About 30 feet from it was a shed, 100 feet long, in which were 30 furnaces, all containing crucibles holding about 20 lbs. of metal each. These furnaces were supplied with fuel from a large heap of charcoal, continually supplied. The fires were kept up by a row of bellows, of all shapes, which were worked with eagerness by the dense crowd of spectators. Delicate females in gaudy dresses, decorated with jewels; old women begrimed with charcoal; young men and boys in holiday attire, all joined in the operation, shouting and singing as they plied the bellows in honour of Gaudama. A train of men, women, and children, each with an offering of gold, silver, copper, or precious stones, continually fed the crucibles by casting in their gifts, which they watched until they merged in the liquid mass. The amount of costly articles thus disposed of was immense. The writer saw, during the time he was present, about 70 diamonds, rubies, sap-phires, and emeralds, thrown into the crucibles, besides large quantities of gold and silver ornaments and coins. The materials for the bell being supplied by voluntary donations, and most of them whilst casting, little attention could be paid to the kind and proportion of the metals used in its composition. crucible was ready, it was lifted from the furnace by bamboos, and carried to the mould, where it was received by the master of the operation and his men stationed on the top, who, before pouring in the metal, thrust some rags, supplied by the surrounding Burmans (who threw their turbans for the purpose), into the mouth of the mould and in the crucible, which burned with a bright flame, through which the metal was poured into the mould. The melting operations occupied about fourteen hours. When the last crucible that filled the mould was poured in, shouts of joy from the assembled crowd rent the air, and the scene closed with a dance and song of triumph.

A remarkable coincidence betwixt barometric and trigonometric measurements is mentioned in measuring altitudes, in the case of the mountain of Tangola, near Darjeeling, which has been ascertained by Dr. Hooker to be 10,078'3 feet by barometer; and by Col. Waugh, by the theodolite, to be 10,079'4: a difference of no more than one foot and one tenth; and this, too, beyond the tropics, where the movements of the mercury are irregular, and hundreds of miles from the base line near the sea.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, September 27, 1849.

The very difficult and embarrassing question of convict discipline and secondary punishments becomes continually more and more embroiled. The Government scheme, of filtering and purifying the foul stream of crime which pours through our gaols, of separating the particles, and diffusing the least noxious over our colonies, has encountered a formidable opposition at the Cape of Good Hope, where the colonists, upon moral considerations alone, refuse to allow their soil to be polluted by the presence of transported felons, and their labourers to be contaminated by association with thieves and murderers. The indignation of all classes in the community appears to have attained such a pitch, and to have assumed so menacing an aspect, that the Governor, Sir Harry Smith, albeit no flincher, has found it indispensable to bend to the tempest.

The opposition of the Cape colonists to this measure has been condemned by an influential journal at home. What is the good of a colony, it is asked, unless we can send there some of our superabundant criminals; and why should the Cape colonists object to receive 200 of the primest of our delinquents after we have spent two millions of our money upon the Caffre war? We do not think this a fair or even correct way of putting the question. Colonies, generally speaking, are not planted in order to receive the outpourings of our gaols. The measure of making the Cape a penal colony is part of a new scheme, and could be neither justly nor advantageously carried into execution without the concurrence of the colony, which has made too forward advances in population, territory, and wealth, to be treated as a corpus vile, fit only for the trial of experiments. It argues a great want of consideration, or an extraordinary stretch of authority, on the part of the colonial secretary, to send a cargo of convicts to the Cape, a colony, be it remembered, conquered and ceded, not only without having previously secured the consent and co-operation of its legislature and community, but in direct opposition to the petitions, remonstrances, and protests of the colonists, who consider that the conduct of Earl Grey, "in first directing the Governor to ascertain the opinions and wishes of the people on this vital question, and then acting in defiance of their unanimous decision, is an exaggeration of insult added to injury towards an unoffending community."

The other argument seems hardly to deserve a serious answer. If the intrusion of convicts into their country is rightly regarded by the Cape colonists as an evil (in which event alone they could require an indemnification), several questions would arise:—whether the two millions would be a sufficient compensation for tainting their moral atmosphere; whether the bargain should not have been discussed before the obligation was incurred; and whether it befits the honour of the mother-country to make such a compact as this, which, between individuals, might be set aside as contra bonos mores.

Still the object of affording our criminals an opportunity to regain the paths of honesty and industry, and at the same time of supplying British settlements with the labour they need, is so important, and forms so essential a feature in the new scheme of convict treatment, that we should regret if other colonies participated in the horror which the South Africans entertain towards this class of immigrants.

The enormous number of our criminals is, financially as well as morally, one of the great social evils with which this country has to contend. The two main sources of crime are want of education and want of employment. The remedy of the first must be slow; the last, looking at the ratio of increase of the population, and at the progressive improvements in machinery, appears to be irremediable in the mothercountry, where the means of employment diminish as the people multiply. All the energies of mankind seem now to be applied, by what appears, to our circumscribed views, a perverse ingenuity, to the displacement of manual labour by mechanical expedients, which are cheaper, more certain, and more controllable. Machinery has rendered idle and useless thousands upon thousands of our artisans, and we are now threatened with the entire annihilation of our agricultural peasantry. At a meeting of the East Cumberland Agricultural Society, on the 15th instant, Lord Brougham is reported to have expressed himself thus: "What I desire is to see steam-engines, not too large but on a convenient and inexpensive scale - somewhat between the larger sort and the small teakettle shape, in which such engines have been found practicable in Glasgow for various operations,-applied not merely to thrashing, sifting, and chopping machines under cover, but I expect to see them applied in the field itself." Has Lord Brougham familiarized his mind with all the consequences of such a revolution? The agrarian classes which this mode of cheapening production would thrust out of employment,—at a time, probably, when they could not be "absorbed" into other departments of industry,—if they cannot emigrate, must become either paupers or thieves.

THE character of our country, and the credit of the British name, upon which our power depends in India, are so deeply involved in the case of the ex-Dewan of Mooltan, that we offer no other apology for recurring to it, and discussing its merits, now that an ample Blue Book of official documents, and the evidence taken upon his trial, supply us with the necessary materials.

In order to simplify the question, we waive all inquiry into the right of the British Government to try Moolraj, or into the constitution of the tribunal which sentenced him to death: we assume, for the purpose of argument, that his unconditional surrender placed him at the discretion of his conquerors;—though we cannot help remarking, by the way, that, when the news of the attack upon the two British officers reached Lahore, our resident, Sir F. Currie, writing to the Governor-General (Papers, p. 133), observed, "Dewan Moolraj is an officer of the Sikh Government; he is in rebellion to the Sikh durbar and the orders of that Government, from which coercion must come."

Moolraj was nazim of the province of Mooltan, invested with general powers over the civil, military, and revenue administration. In 1846, he obtained a lease of it for three years, paying to the government of Lahore twenty lacs per annum, reserving the excess to himself or suffering the loss. This large power, and the disorganization of authority in the Punjab, made him, during the term of his nazimut, the virtual sovereign of the province; but his administration, according to Sir H. Lawrence (Papers, p. 5), though its principles were "primitive and arbitrary," was "favourably contrasted with that of the other Punjab rulers." He kept his officers and kardars in good order, not permitting them, as elsewhere, to plunder at will, though the traders and agriculturists complained of his exactions. Upon the death of his father, Sawun Mull, in 1844, he had purchased the succession to his post by a nuzzerana of thirty lacs, which, it appears, he was never able or willing to discharge, and he fell into arrears and obligations with the Lahore government, which Mr. J. Lawrence was employed to adjust. This object he effected by exacting from Moolraj an agreement to pay eighteen lacs for arrears of nuzzerana, to surrender one-third of the province, and to pay for the remainder as much as he had contracted to pay for the whole. Further; a new arrangement of the customs was urged upon him, and a fixed assessment of the land-tax. This addition to the amount he had to pay, with a curtailment of the ordinary means of supply,-for he was told that he would be responsible for his acts, - appears to have disturbed and alarmed the nazim. "Unless he remodelled his customs," observes Mr. J. Lawrence (Papers, p. 89), "his revenue from that source would have fallen off; unless he gave up some of the most unpopular of the old cesses on the cultivators, many would have abandoned their lands, and migrated into the adjoining districts. He had no faith in the elasticity of trade untrammelled," as if the doctrines of free-trade were more familiar to an Eastern zemindar than to an English landholder, "or the benefits of a light tax. I proposed that he should introduce the same changes which were working so well in the rest of the Punjab, and compensate himself by the introduction of the additional sources of revenue which we have found productive, and that, if this was not sufficient, he should reduce his military expenditure." These propositions were quite repugnant to the notions of a ruler in the circumstances of Moolraj, and upon his visit to Lahore, in December, 1847, he placed in the hands of the acting resident his resignation in writing. In this document he assigns as the reasons for resigning his post, ill-health, dissensions in his family, and want of confidence in his sirdars; but Mr. Lawrence, in his letter to the Government of India communicating this fact, and in his evidence, clearly traces the resignation to the causes before enumerated, and especially to the Dewan's repugnance to having complaints against him investigated, which, he said, "involved his izzut, or honour."

That Moolraj was sincere in his desire to be relieved from the office, there appears not the slightest reason to doubt. Mr. Lawrence did not doubt it at the time, and upon his examination at the trial, he repeated his conviction. Both he and Sir F. Currie were desirous that Moolraj should retain the office, and, after his resignation, Sir Frederic gave him the option of remaining; but the answer still was, "he wished to resign."

Accordingly, a successor was appointed in the person of Sirdar Khan Singh, who proceeded, with Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, as commissioners, to receive the transfer of the government, and make arrangements for its future administration. Nothing had happened, within Mr. Lawrence's knowledge, to change the feelings of Moolraj up to the time of the arrival of those persons at Mooltan.

These facts are important. They show an absence of motive on the part of Moolraj to resist the mission of the two British officers, much less to murder them, and the surmise, once prevalent, that the outbreak at Mooltan was originally connected with the insurrection in the Punjab, is completely dissipated by the Memorandum of Sir F. Currie, in December, 1848 (Papers, p. 492), who proves that the two occurrences were entirely independent of each other.

The prospect of a change of rulers might, however, operate very powerfully upon the officers, dependants, ryots, and especially the army of Moolraj. One of the proposals urged upon him was the reduction of his military expenditure; and Lieut. Edwardes, addressing the Resident at Lahore (Papers, p. 151), says distinctly, "I think that the origin of the rebellion was the natural dislike of the Pathans, Beloochees, and Mooltanees, men of high family, courage, and false pride, to be turned adrift, after a life spent in military service well rewarded." The acting Resident at Lahore, writing to the Indian Government, in March, 1848 (Papers, p. 111), expresses impatience for the removal of Moolraj in order that the fiscal reforms might be introduced into the province.

Upon the arrival of the new nazim and the two British officers at Mooltan, they appear to have been received with the customary civilities, and the government was formally transferred by Moolraj to his successor. Upon leaving the fortress, the two British officers were attacked and wounded.

All the witnesses describe this attack in a manner which precludes the supposition that it was preconcerted on the part of Moolraj. The assassin of Mr. Vans Agnew was a half-witted or half-drunken Hindu, who wounded him with a spear. The occurrence took place in a crowd, whilst passing the gate, near the drawbridge. It is stated by all the witnesses that, when the occurrence took place, Moolraj galloped away,—conduct more consistent with innocence (fear) than guilt (complicity), and he declared to Sadik Mahomed that the troops would have attacked him. Sir F. Currie justly asks (Papers, p. 132), "if the attack was preconcerted and ordered, why was it not more effectual?"

One of the witnesses, Wuzeer Allee Khan, says, when the assassin struck Mr. Vans Agnew, "I saw Moolraj turn towards this man, make a signal to him, and gallop away." Great stress is laid upon this incident, as denoting concert. What the signal was, is not mentioned; it might be an indication of disapproval, or even of horror. But the credit of this witness is impeached by two of his co-witnesses. According to Boodoo Mull, a mahajun, Wuzeer Allee declared "he would be revenged upon Moolraj for what he had done to him;" and Moolvee Seyud Ayaz Hossein deposed that, in a conversation relating to the trial, Wuzeer Allee (a Mahomedan) said, "Moolraj is a kafir; it will be good to put an end to him." The "signal" looks very like a circumstance maliciously thrown in.

The conduct of Moolraj after the first attack was quite congruous with that of a man anxious to save the two officers, yet impotent to do so, and apprehensive of his own safety in the midst of an exasperated and unbridled soldiery. His declarations to various witnesses were, that "what had taken place was against his wishes and orders, and was the work of bad men;" that the chief men of the city and the army opposed his relinquishment of the government; that "the army and people of Mooltan had got the upper hand, and he was deprived of power;" that "it is not in my power to do as I wish; my men will not obey me."

Two of the most respectable witnesses are Ram Rung, a relation of the Dewan, and Toolsee Ram, his mohurrir, and their testimony goes far not merely to exculpate Moolraj, but to prove that he incurred personal risk to save the two efficers. Toolsee Ram states that Moolraj assured him he was blameless, and when advised by him and Ram Rung to go to the Sahebs, he immediately complied, but they were compelled to return by the soldiers and ryots, who threatened them, and actually wounded Ram Rung. This statement is confirmed by Ram Rung himself, who says he prepared to gallop by a circuitous route to the Eedgah, and was in the act of mounting, when he was wounded by the soldiers, and Moolraj was thrown from his horse.

The murderers of the two officers were chuckrwallahs, under no leader; the actual assassin of Mr. Vans Agnew was a Mughrubi Sikh, named Goojur Singh (since executed for the deed), who, if we are to give implict credit to Bunsee Dhur, Mr. Agnew's Bramin servant, was next day rewarded by Moolraj with Rs. 350 and Mr. Agnew's horse; but this statement is not reconcilable with other acts of the Dewan, who interred the bodies of the two officers, enveloping them respectfully in Mooltani silks.

That the outbreak and massacre of the two British officers were the result of a sudden, unpremeditated explosion, in which the Dewan had no participation, appears to our mind clear from the facts and the evidence. This was the opinion of Lord Dalhousie up to the 21st February, 1849 (Papers, p. 584), when he told the Secret Committee that "Moolraj was the moving spring of the insurrection after it had once broke out; but the first outbreak was unpremeditated, and, in a manner, accidental." The declaration of Moolraj himself, in his letter to General Whish, when he surrendered, "the whole of this disturbance was set on foot by my soldiers, and all my endeavours failed to quell it," must not be excluded from consideration, nor the still more important evidence supplied by the address of the Sikhs who accompanied the two British officers from Lahore, and deserted, to the troops under Lieut. Edwardes, whom they endeavoured to seduce (Papers, p. 150), dated shortly after the murder, the statements in which correspond with and confirm the evidence of Toolsee Ram and Ram Rung :-

"The Dewan left the fort with the Feringees. The following scene took place: a sepoy out of service thrust a spear at one of the Feringees, who fell from his horse. The sepoy then wounded the other Feringee with his sword. We afterwards went off, taking with us to our camp the Feringees and Sirdar Khan Singh, while Moolraj returned to his abode. Rungram remarked to the Dewan, that they ought to go and see the Feringees. Moolraj then returned, unattended by any of his own sepoys, when a strange occurrence took place by the Gooroo's will. The whole of the Mooltan Sikha, with the Musulman soldiers, went in a body to the Dewan, and said, 'We won't let you go;' to which he replied, that he must go. A sepoy then drew his sword, and wounded Rungram three times. In the confusion which ensued, Moolraj's horse seared and threw him. The soldiers then carried him and Rungram off to their quarters, where they told him that it was the Gooroo's order to expel the Feringees by force. The Dewan would not consent that day. On the following morning, by God's will, the guns were fired, and the Gooroo ordered us to advance: for so it has been written in the Gooroo's writings. Upon this we obeyed his injunctions, and, joining the Mooltanees, killed the Feringees."

· Finding himself thus involved in rebellion against his will, deprived, probably, of free-agency, expecting to be made responsible for crimes to which he was no party, Moolraj appears to have at last consented to lead a movement he could not prevent, and the insurrection in the Punjab inspired him with hopes of liberating his nation whilst he re-established his own authority. In short, he was, in the language of the Court that tried him, "the victim of circumstances." He may be a rebel, but he is not a murderer.

The Calcutta and Madras papers received by the last Bombay mail announced that the attempts to introduce the cultivation of a superior quality of cotton in British India, under European superintendence, was to be abandoned, and that the vast expenditure incurred by the Government for that object had been thrown away. This statement turns out, as we anticipated, erroneous. will be seen, from an official letter addressed by the Secretary of the Court of Directors to the Commercial Association at Manchester, printed in another column, that the measures for improving the cultivation of cotton at Broach are proceeding "with a greater prospect of a successful issue than at any former period," and have not been in any way interfered with; and that, although at Coimbatore, under a misapprehension of the Court's orders, certain measures had been adopted which might have had a tendency to retard the progress made in developing the capabilities of the Madras presidency for supplying cotton. suited to the English market, this misapprehension had been removed, and the cotton experiments there had been placed on a satisfactory footing.

The result of the efforts of the Indian Government in this direction has been most successful. The excellent quality of the cotton sent to Manchester from the districts of Dharwar and Coimbatore, on account of the East-India Company, has, Mr. Melvill observes, been admitted by the Commercial Association.

Having thus proved the capability of the soil of India to produce superior cotton, the functions of the Government in this matter properly end; and, accordingly, the Court of Directors propose to limit their operations to the purchase of a moderate quantity of cotton annually, for consignment to this country; to the distribution of seed; to the improvement of cleaning and packing, &c.; but it is for capitalists now to come forward and prosecute an undertaking so well begun,—and the Court are ready to make over, to any association that will undertake the cultivation, the lands constituting the Government farms, with the implements and machines attached thereto.

The scientific works of Count Rumford abound in examples of the ludierous extent to which sensible men will sometimes. carry their exposition of matters known to everybody. In one of his economic treatises (Essays, vol. i. p. 267) he gives a receipt for a pudding, and then a page of description how to eat it. The conclusion is: "The pudding is to be eaten with a knife; and fork, beginning at the circumference of the slice, and approaching regularly towards the centre, each piece of pudding being taken up with the fork, and dipped into the butter, or dipped into it in part only, as is commonly the case, before it is, carried to the mouth."—Quarterly Review.

CORRESPONDENCE. THE INDIAN BANKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,-I have heard lately some very unfair comments passed on the different Indian Banks, and I conceive that it may do a service to many of your readers if I put a correct statement of the facts honestly and impartially before them. I should premise, that I am interested, directly or indirectly, in both the Bank of Bengal and that of Agra, and therefore have some object in the truth being generally understood.

The comments I object to are these:—It is alleged that the Joint-Stock Banks are giving a dividend of, say, 10 per cent.; while the Government Bank, the Bank of Bengal, - a chartered, wall-supported, and highly-beneficed public institution,—can at present divide only 6 per cent. And the inference always drawn, or insinuated pretty plainly, is, that the Joint-Stock Banks must be giving undue dividends, probably from capital; or that, on the other hand, they are, as was graciously observed the other day, most assuredly "Jewing their customers."

But what is the true state of the case, and the simple explanation of these dividends, in regard to both descriptions of Banks? In 1847, the Bank of Bengal divided 14 per cent. No shareholder objected. All was received as right and very proper. And how was this amount obtained? In the monetary pressure at Calcutta, in the middle of 1847, the sole object of the Bank of Bengal, as if guided by the principles of an attorney's office, was to be legally safe and secure, swayed a little at the same time, it must be admitted, by a very laudable desire to wring out of the unfortunates of that era any possible advantage and sacrifice which their difficulties obliged them to offer or submit to. All accommodation, hitherto freely accorded, was suddenly and rigorously put a stop to; discounts, which were before granted up to that moment (and heretofore safely) to a liberal extent to certain large houses, were abruptly reduced to a fourth of the amount. The Bank did safe business, most certainly; but its coffers, enclosing nearly a million sterling, were locked up and sealed, with the exception of a certain moderate sum; while that moderate sum was turned over and over again, in taking advantage of the difficulties of the day, and by seizure of the golden opportunity, which the ruin of the Union Bank, at the close of the year, so gloriously presented, of getting hold of all the fat securities and profitable business which that wretched institution or its falling customers could offer in their calamities to the kindly mercies of the Bank of Bengal. and thus only, arose the surplus profits of the Bank of Bengal in the year 1847.

Had Mr. Bracken, with his financial skill, remained at the head of the establishment,—although as strict and business like a secretary as need be,-it is my assured conviction he would have submitted other advice to his committee of directors; and, notwithstanding the ignorance of certain of his official ones, he would have carried them with him to a more liberal and less legal view of things. He might have saved not a few of the commercial establishments, instead of shortsightedly profiting by the difficulties of the moment. The really enormous property and assets at the time in the market (since utterly depreciated and valueless) would have rendered the rescue of many respected members of the community a perfectly sa'e and honourable operation of the Bank. At all events, he would have supported, without danger, and in conformity to the charter, the commercial public at large, and most indubitably would not have performed the feat which the Bank of Bengal effected, viz.

That the goose was killed, and that the Bank obtains no golden eggs now, its dividends of six or seven per cent. lamentably testify; while its shares at a premium of 1,500, instead of 2,600, are also no mean collateral attestation of the murder. Whether a better and more fostering policy for the future will revive the animal, and bring about a resurrection of commercial prosperity in Calcutta, with higher dividends for shareholders, and a better premium for shares, remains yet to be seen, and most devoutly to be prayed for.

So much for the Bank of Bengal; and now for the Agra Bank, and the explanation why it still continues to give ten per cent., and a higher rate than its chartered competitor. solution is brief and simple. It loans out its money to the services at ten per cent. interest (far less than the Bank of Bengal demanded, with deposit of Covernment Securities, in the days of Calcutta distress), with security of life assurance and two sure-Its business and its charges have been the same through-It receives ten per cent., it has had few losses to speak of, it has a good reserve fund, and a yearly increasing business as a bank, and an excellent and safe profit from its agencies. In a word, it has comfortably divided ten per cent. for the pastwhatever it may do for the future. SHAREHOLDER.

CULTIVATION OF COTTON IN INDIA.

The Commercial Association of Manchester, having addressed letter to the Court of Directors, requesting to be informed whether there was any foundation for the statement, which had appeared in the Madras papers, that the East-India Company had resolved to abandon the experiments in cotton culture at Broach and Coimbatore, the following letter to the Chairman was received in reply, from which it will be seen that the experiments at Broach have not been interfered with, but those at Coimbatore are to terminate at the end of the present season :-

"East-India House, Sept. 17, 1849. "Sir,-I have laid before the Court of Directors of the East-India Company your letter dated the 29th ult., in which you bring to and a Company your letter dated the 28th ult., in which you bring to their notice certain statements which have recently obtained currency through the public press, to the effect that 'the experiments which have been for some years carried on by order of the Hon. East-India Company, with a view to the improvement and extension of cotton cultivation in India, are now about to be totally abandoned, both at Broach and Coimbatore,' and soliciting that the Commercial Association may be informed whether there is any, and what foundation for the extension of the foundation for the extension of the companion of the com Commercial Association may be informed whether there is any, and what, foundation for the statements referred to.

"In reply, I am directed to acquaint you that the Court have received no information which leads them to apprehend that the measures in progress for improving the cultivation of cotton in the Broach district have been in any way interfered with; on the contrary, they have reason to believe that they are now proceeding, and the measure apprehendant Mr. Landon with a greater progression. under the present superintendent, Mr. Landon, with a greater prospect of a successful issue than at any former period. With regard to Coimbatore, the Court have learnt that, under a misapprehension of their orders, certain measures have been adopted which might have had a tendency to retard the progress made under the superintendence of Dr. Wight, in developing the capabilities of the presidency of Madras for supplying cotton suited to the English market.

The Court have, however, lost no time in issuing the necessary instructions for placing the cotton experiments on a satisfactory

"I am directed to assure you that the Court have never ceased to take the most lively interest in promoting the important object of obtaining from India an ample supply of cotton fitted for the requirements of the English manufacturers; but they must, at the quirements of the English manufacturers; but they must, at the same time, express their conviction that the efforts of the Indian Governments will fall of producing any extensive and permanent effect, unless they are aided by the cordial co-operation of the manufacturers of this country. The excellent quality of much of the cotton which has been consigned to Manchester, from the districts of Dharwar and Coimbatore, on account of the East-India Company, has been admitted by the Commercial Association. It was never has been admitted by the Commercial Association. It was never intended that the experiments commenced under the orders of the Court of Directors should be indefinitely prolonged, nor would any Government be justified, in point of principle, in such a proceeding. The Court consider that they have done all which can be expected of them, when they have demonstrated that cotton, of a quality suited to the wants of the manufacturers, may not only be produced in India, but, as they believe, at a cost which would be at once remunerative to the producer and profitable to the consumer. They are convinced that nothing would tend more surely to the extension of the cultivation of cotton from American seed, and to the tension of the cultivation of cotton from American seed, and to the improvement of the native cotton, than the location in the cotton-producing districts of competent agents on the part of the manufacturers, empowered to purchase all cotton of a superior quality which might be offered to them, and to reject all such as might be of an inferior description. The Court propose, for the present, to limit their operations to the purchase of a moderate quantity of cottom annually, for consignment to this country, to the distribution to the ryots of seed of the superior descriptions, to the introduction of improved methods of cleaning and packing, and to the collection and dissemination of information in regard to the best modes and times of culture. The purpose for which the experimental farm at Coimbatore was instituted has now been accomplished, and in directing the discontinuance of the cultivation of cotton on account of Government, after the present season, the Court have instructed the Government of Madras, in the event of any association being formed for the purpose of further prosecuting the experiment in that direction, to make over to them the lands constituting the Government farms, with the implements and machines attached to them, at a fair valuation.

"In conclusion, I am directed to convey, through you, to the Commercial Association, the Court's acknowledgments for the report on the quality of the Coimbatore and Tinnivelly cotton recently consigned to the Association for sale in Manchester, which was forwarded in Mr. Fleming's letter of the 28th ult.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held at their House in Leadenhall Street, yesterday, the 26th instant. Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, K.C.B., in the chair.

The Chairman laid before the Court a letter from the Marquis of Dalhousie, Governor-General of India, dated Simlah, 14th June, 1849, acknowledging the vote of thanks passed by the Court of Directors and the General Court of Proprietors for military services rendered by the Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, and the British and native troops, in the Punjab.

THE 6TH MADRAS NATIVE CAVALRY.

Mr. Lewin said it was not his intention to bring forward more than one of the motions of which he had given notice, namely, the the first, which ran thus:—

"That the Court of Directors be requested to take such measures as may be necessary to instruct the local Governments of India to insert in the articles of war for the native army a clause conveying the same privilege to the native army of demanding copies of the record, as is now enjoyed by the European soldiery under the articles of war framed by the British Legislature, 4th October, 1848."

His reason for postponing the other subjects, to which he was desirous of calling the attention of the proprietors was, that he was in expectation of receiving further information from India respecting them. That information he had sought in vain to obtain from the hands of the Court of Directors. Frequent applications had been made for a copy of the proceedings of the general court-martial held at Arcot for the trial of seventeen troopers of the 6th Madras Light Cavalry, on a charge preferred on the 5th September, 1844, with reference to occurrences at Jubbulpoor, dating nearly a year with reference to occurrences at Subvalpor, dating actify a year previous; but the production of the record of those proceedings had been uniformly refused. To those acquainted with the facts of the case this could be matter of no surprise, because it must be obvious to them that all the parties implicated in those proceedings were afraid and ashamed to produce that record. To hold the trial at all had been pronounced illegal; the course pursued by the authorities excluded all rational confidence in the testimony on which the prisoners were convicted; while the Court was itself an incompetent court, and quite unsuited to the gravity of the occasion,—particularly as regarded the youth and inexperience of several of its members. It could not be denied that a great offence had been committed by the military authorities of Madras, under the form of a judicial proceeding,—an offence which called for the condign punishment of its guilty authors.

Mr. Marriott hoped the hon. proprietor was not about to enter into the whole of the proceedings of the court-martial.
Mr. Lewin begged not to be interrupted. The facts were

Mr. Lewin begged not to be interrupted. The facts were briefly these. Seventeen soldiers of the 6th regiment Madras Light Cavalry were placed on their trial, charged with mutiny, of whom two were shot, one acquitted, thirteen banished for life, and one pardoned. These men never knew who were their accusers, but it was a fact that one of the witnesses against them had subsequently been convicted of perjury. The mutiny, as it was called, originated in an order of the Government to withhold from the sepoys their accustomed stipend. When the complaints of the men were listened to and their pay restored, they returned (as the Commander-in-Chief himself expressly stated) to their duty. All these proceedings had been supported by the Court of Directors—not unanimously, because he knew there were some honourable exceptions. The late Chairman, Sir J. Lushington, had on a former occasion stated, that there was nothing to conceal in this matter; why, then, were not the papers laid on the table? He should, at the next Court, move for their production; and in the interval he wished to try the effect of a little more agitation in India. ("Oh!" and "hear.") Yes! such was his wish, because he perfectly well knew that justice would not be voluntarily rendered by the Court of Directors to these injured parties. The hon. proprietor concluded by making his motion in the terms above given.

Mr. Gordon said, that though ignorant of the facts of the case, he should, nevertheless, readily second the motion. (Laughter.)

Mr. Sullivan did not think the course taken by his hon. friend, of postpouing his motion from time to time, was altogether fair towards the individual more immediately affected by it.

Mr. Lewin.—I pledge myself to bring it forward next court-day.

Mr. Sullivan said, that within the last forty-eight hours a paper had been put into his hands, a perusal of which convinced him that, if the narrative of facts it contained was true, great injustice had been inflicted by the Government of Madras on the complaining parties. The paper purported to be a memorial presented to the Court of Directors, in April, 1848, by the widows of the unfortunate sufferers under the court-martial to which Mr. Lewin had referred. He did not pretend to say that all the allegations were true, but a great majority of them were actually supported by official documents; and the parties said, that if they had not been able to prove all these statements by official documents, it was because applications for those documents had been systematically denied. The men who suffered death in pursuance of the sentence of the court-martial were not punished in the irritation of the moment, or when an awful example was required to prevent the spread of mutiny, for the penalty was in-flicted nine months after the alleged offence was committed, and after they had been treated by the authorities in a way which led to a conviction that the little irregularity of which they had been guilty had been forgiven. Some of them had been actually receiving good-conduct money during those nine months, and some had been since tried for minor offences subsequently committed. The Court, too, strongly recommended the prisoners to the merciful consideration of the Commander-in-Chief. Why was that recommendation not attended to? The memorialists contended that the court-martial was incompetent to take cognizance of the case, being principally composed of young subalterns taken from European regiments, ignorant of the language in which the proceedings were conducted.

Mr. Shepherd (the Deputy-Chairman) rose to order. He would appeal to the hon. proprietor whether it was fair to comment upon the proceedings of that court-martial, and to refer almost by name to the parties by which the court was composed? Last year this very question was discussed, and the proprietors were almost unanimously of opinion that it ought not to be entertained; yet the hon. proprietor was now indirectly going over the same ground, and casting imputations on parties who were not present to defend themselves.

Mr. Sullivan considered the course he was pursuing to be perfectly in order, and denied that he had cast the least imputation upon any one. He was referring to the allegations contained in the memorial, and was contending that, if those allegations were true, it behoved that Court to take some notice of them. In support of his argument as to the incompetency of the court-martial, the hon. proprietor quoted the 9th section of the 7th article of the code promulgated in 1827 by the Madras Government, which declared that no sentence of death should be given against any offender by any general court-martial consisting of less than thirteen members. Now, the court which was hild a Arcot, and by which these native troopers were condemned, was composed only of nine members. (Hear, hear.) Why was a different course pursued in this case to that which was followed by Sir Peregrine Muitland, when a serious mutiny broke out among the Madras Native Cavalry, or when an equally serious emeule took place among their own European officers there? Not a single hair of any one man's head was touched on either of those occasions. What was the conclusion to which an impartial observer must come, but that the Court of Directors had two measures of justice—one for the strong and another for the week—one for the man with a white face and another for the man with a swarthy face. (Hear, hear.)

The Chairman observed that it was exactly twelve months since this case came under the notice of the Court, and instead of listening to it, as they now had done, they unanimously deprecated it as a question which ought not to be heard, because it was then the general feeling of the Court that it would be highly inexpedient for it to interfere with the discipline of the Indian army. He could not imagine anything more prejudicial to the interests of the public service than the speeches which he had been obliged to hear. did hope that the Court would, by their decision, declare that it was their determination not to be made the tools of any individuals, for the purpose of disseminating what must necessarily be highly prejudicial to the public service, with reference to the native army of India. It was not his intention to go into the particulars of the case, otherwise it might be easily shown that every act performed by the Marquis of Tweedale, on the occasion referred to, was the act of a considerate and humane person, by which he endeavoured to save a regiment, which had behaved admirably on all other occasions, from the disgrace of being disbanded for mutiny. It was argued that a condonation had been granted by the Marquis of Tweeddale, on making the declaration that he was satisfied that the regiment had returned to its duty. But what was the meaning of that declaration? The Marquis of Tweeddale had been recommended by a superior authority to disband the regiment: he said,-" No; this is a regiment which has discharged its duty well, and I cannot disband it; yet it is necessary that I should not pass over these acts of mutiny. I will therefore order it from the frontier, and will then institute an investigation, by which I shall be able to discover the ringleaders, and condemn them to condign punishment." The corps was accordingly ordered to Arcot, for the purpose of ascertaining who were the culprits. Several were found essentially criminal; seventeen were brought to trial; two were sentenced to be shot, they having been proved to have administered oaths to their fellow soldiers for the purpose of preventing them from discharging their This conduct on the part of the Marquis of Tweeddale showed great consideration for the good soldier. Instead of disbanding the regiment, and by that means punishing the innocent with the guilty, he availed himself of the right which he possessed of bringing the guilty to trial. Every soldier was amenable to a court-martial for any crime which had been committed by him within the period of three years. It was said that nine months had elapsed before these men were tried; but it took nine months to bring them from Jubbulpoor to Arcot. They performed no duty whatever in the meantime, except that of marching from one place to the other. This was not within the meaning of the Articles of War as discharging military duty. The duty contemplated by those articles was that which might be performed before an enemy. Were it otherwise, then, if a mutiny were to take place on a foreign station, or on board ship, it might be argued that, because the men were marched home, or were employed in working home the ship, therefore they should be exculpated from all crime. It was impossible to put such a construction upon the mere duty of marching which was performed by these men. But without going further into the question, he would implore the Court, for its own sake, and for the sake of the discipline of the Indian army, not to make themselves parties to propagating statements of this kind, which, by being afterward reported in the public papers, would be calculated to disturb that good feeling which was now happily prevailing universally throughout the Indian army.

Mr. Fielder deprecated the idea of exciting agitation on this question in India, and hoped the hon. proprietors were not in earnest when they used the strong language which had fallen from them on that point.

General Briggs supported the motion.

Mr. Serjeant Stocks considered this to be simply a question of justice, and the foundation of justice was law. Had the law in the case of these soldiers been violated? (Hear, hear.) Was the tribunal before which they were arraigned legally constituted? That was the only question he was prepared to agitate. At present he was in total ignorance on the subject.

Major Oliphant explained, that, by the original law of India, a native soldier would have been tried, in the ordinary course, by his peers,—that was to say, by thirteen native officers; but in the year 1829 power was given to any native soldier to appeal to a European general court-martial; and by the Articles of War that court was to consist of nine members.

After some further discussion, the motion was put and negatived.

RIGHT OF ADOPTION.

Mr. Sullivan moved for the production of a minute of Sir Charles Metcalfe, dated 28th October, 1837, relative to the right of adoption by the independent native princes of India, with its inclosures, and that they be printed for the use of the proprietors.

The Chairman said the minute referred to had been presented to the Court that day.

Mr. Sulliran.—But not for the use of the proprietors; besides, there were inclosures which he wished to have produced.

The Chairman replied, that it was not usual to add any document not called for by the House of Commons. If further documents were required, they might be moved for in Parliament.

Mr. Sullivan knew nothing of the House of Commons. As a proprietor, he had a right to call for the production of the

The Chairman objected to the expense of furnishing the papers. Any member of the House of Commons might move for their production.

Mr. Sullivan said it was not just that the public should bear the expense, and then proceeded to argue in support of his motion. In doing so, the hon. proprietor entered at considerable length into the question of the annexation of the Sattara State to the British territories in India, more especially as it bore upon the right of adoption by the late Raja of Sattara.

The motion was put and negatived.

Mr. Sullivan then gave notice that he should move for the production of certain papers connected with the proceedings of the court-martial at Arcot, and also for a copy of the opinions of the law officers thereupon.

The Chairman objected to the notice of motion being printed.

Mr. Sullivan contended that, according to the bye-laws, the notice must be printed.

The Chairman replied, that it was competent for that Court to suspend the bye-law for that occasion. It was competent for the hon, member to discuss the question at a future day without his notice being printed.

The question was then put, and it was decided that the notice should not be printed.

The Court then adjourned.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR GRAVES CHAMNEY HAUGHTON .- This eminent Oriental scholar, who died of cholera at St. Cloud, near Paris, on the 26th ult., in the sixty-second year of his age, was the second son of the late Dr. Haughton, a branch of the ancient family of Hoghtons, of Hoghton Tower, in Lancashire. Early in life, he entered the service of the East-India Company, and was for some years on the Bengal military establishment; but ill health, caused by the ardent prosecution of his studies in the College of Fort William, where he gained the highest honours granted by that institution, compelled him to relinquish the service. On his that institution, compelled him to relinquish the service. On the return to England, he was appointed a professor of Oriental languages at the East-India Company's college at Haileybury, and held the professorship until 1827. In 1821 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1832, he became a candidate for the Boden Professorship of Sanscrit, at Oxford, but resigned his pretensions in favour of his principal competitor, Mr. Homes Willey Desirable was appropriate the filled the race Hyman Wilson. During the year preceding, he filled the office of Honorary Secretary to the Royal Asiatic Society. Progressively, he became associated with several learned societies at home and abroad, and in particular received the high distinction of being nominated a member of the National Institute of France. Notwithstanding his feeble health, Sir Graves was engaged throughout life on literary works of great labour and erudition. He edited "The Institutes of Menu," in the original Sanscrit; and, among other works, he composed an excellent grammar of the Bengali language, and a dictionary, Bengalí, Sanscrit, and English, which was highly praised by the most competent judges, here and on the Continent. In his later years he devoted himself to metaphysics and physics, in which he has left evidence of an acute, sagacious, and comprehensive mind. He was knighted in 1833, by William the Fourth, for his great attainments in Oriental literature.

ORIENTAL PENMANSHIP. - Dr. Duncan Forbes, Professor of Oriental Languages in King's College, has published an essay for facilitating the reading and writing of the Ta'lik character, as generally used in the East, in Persian and Hindustani manuscripts and printed works, consisting of various specimens of fine writing, accurately lithographed from original native manuscripts. scripts, accompanied by letter-press descriptions, together with explanatory notes and observations. The specimens and examples are most correct and beautiful, and the work furnishes a guide to young students which they will find invaluable.

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH IN INDIA.—A proposal for carrying out the electric telegraph in British India is now under the consideration of the East-India Company.

THE SEE OF MADRAS, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Spencer, is understood to have been bestowed upon Dr. Dealtry, the successor of Mr. Baptist Noel, at St. John's Chapel .-

THE WOUNDED OF THE PUNJAB. - Chatham, Sept. 11. - This afternoon the wounded soldiers from the battles of the Punjab arrived at the Invalid Depôt, Fort Pitt; and it was a mournful sight to see the number of poor fellows maimed. Twenty have each lost an arm, and eight have each lost a leg; several others are severely wounded, particularly two men of the 10th Foot, Corporal Leggett and private Griffin. The wounded consist of the following detachments, viz.—Sergeant M'Caskie, of the 3rd Light Dragoons, who has lost his left arm, and one sergeant and two privates, both maimed, of the 14th Light Dragoons; two sergeants and twelve privates of the 24th regiment (2nd Warwickshire); one sergeant and ten privates, with one woman, 10th Foot (North Lincoln); one corporal and four privates, with one woman and three children, 22nd regiment (Cheshire); eight privates and one woman, 29th (Worcestershire); five privates, 32nd regiment (Cornwall); and one corporal and six privates, with one woman and three children, 61st (South Glocestershire). The troops are in charge of Capt. A. J. Macpherson, of the 24th, who is wounded in his left arm. This officer entered the battle of Chillianwallah sixth lieutenant, and came out of it a captain. The regiment lost in less than one hour 519 killed and wounded, including 23 officers.

Engagement of Shirs.—The Duke of Wellington has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Bengal, and the Eliza for the like purpose to Bombay. The tender of the ship Nimrod, which was conditionally accepted for the conveyance of stores to Bombay, has been relinquished.

Sir Thomas Browne, in his Religio Medici, says: "Those strange and mystical transmigrations that I have observed in silkworms turned my philosophy into divinity: there is in these works of nature, which seem to puzzle reason, something divine, and hath more in it than the eye of a common spectator doth discover."

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK. Ladies and Gentlemen,-

A LONG residence in India, in the Service of the Hon.

East-India Company, emboldens me to appear before you as a Candidate for a seat in your Direction.

For more than thirty-two years I have been a Member of your Civil Service, having in that period held the highest offices under the Presidency of Bombay, including that of Governor. If honoured by being the object of your selection, I shall not fail to devote myself wholly to the right conduct of your affairs, and to the promotion of the best interests of our Indian fellow-subjects.

HISTORY OF THE PUNJAB, AND OF THE RISE and PROGRESS of the SECT and NATION of the SIKHS;

Including a full Account of the Military Operations on the Banks of the Sutlej in 1846, and the Proclamations and Treaties of the Governor-General of India relating thereto.

By THOMAS THORNTON, Esq. 2 vols. post 8vo, cloth lettered, price 21s.

These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlej, or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—it is valuable for present and permanent reference.... Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical student, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh."—John Bull.

The work gives all the information on the history and to complete the section of the sect

46 It is an authentic work, and its statements are perfectly trustworthy. Indeed, it will be necessary for every one having a library to add this to the historical department, while the miscellaneous reader will find a powerful claim in its novel and stirring information."—Cheltenham Journal.

PINE HEAD of HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced for promoting the growth or reproduction of the human hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a very limited period; whists ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OlL, with a reputation unparalleled, is still on the increase in public estimation. The unprecedented success of this discovery, either in preserving the hair in its original strength and beauty, or restoring it when lost, is universally known and appreciated; and is recorded by testimonials most numerous in themselves, and certified by the highest authorities. It has obtained the exclusive patronage of Royalty, not only as regards our own Court, but those of the whole of Europe. From its exquisite purjuy and delicacy, it is admirably adapted for the hair of children, even of the most ender age, and is constantly employed for this purpose in the nursery of Royalty, and by the families of the nobility and aristocracy. It is alike suited for either sex, and whether employed to embellish the tresses of female beauty, or to add to the attractions of manly grace and aspect, will be found an indispensable auxiliary to the toilet both of ladies and gentlemen.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle, & Each bottle of their genuine article has the words,—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR Oll., engraved in two lines on the wrapper, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 29,028 letters. CURE OF A SEVERE SKIN DISEASE BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—James Jenkins, an agricultural labourer, residing on a farm near Newtown, suffered dreadfully from a most fearful disease of the skin, which broke out in blotches in various parts of his body. The complaint was gradually impairing his constitution,—he had become low-spirited and nervous. He had tried to obtain relief by medicines from two or three medical men, but their remedies proved useless. He then commenced taking Holloway's Pills, and rubbing the Ointment well into the affected parts; and by these means he is now restored to perfect health, and his skin freed from all impurities.

Solid by all druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 4th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits.

*** To the First Part of this Dictionary, the preceding editions of which have met with general approbation, as well in Europe as in India, the author has by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, been enabled to make such artensive additions, that the number of words and phrases, now given and explained, exceeds by many thousands that contained in any other Hindustani and English Dictionary extant. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper character, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which artraced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages; and much attention has been paid to the insertion of the names of Plante, as well as of other natural productions, with the technical terms at present adopted for them in Europe.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is entirely new. It comprises the English words in most general use, as well as numerous phrases, with the corresponding Hindustani annexed; and so much additional matter has been now introduced, that although the work is printed in a smaller type, the present Edition comprises yourness sherts more of letter-press than the last, and it is greatly reduced in price.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE interval of a week has put us in possession of twelve days' further intelligence from Calcutta, and twenty-six days' arrears of news from Bombay. It is gratifying to be able to repeat that (with the exception of some transient insubordination and symptoms of discontent exhibited in two native corps at Rawul Pindee) tranquillity still reigns throughout the vast territories of British India.

The apprehensions of, or wishes for, a Cashmere campaign had entirely subsided. In explanation of the report that Maharajah Golab Sing was receiving into his service the Sikh soldiers, the Delhi Gazette says, "We have good reason to believe that the emigration, if it may be so called, has taken place with the run knowledge .... Governor-General, the Maharajah having represented that his increased territory required a much larger army for its protection; that many Sikhs had applied to him for service, and that his employing them might relieve the British Government of a good number of troublesome subjects." It adds, however, on the authority of a gentleman recently from Cashmere, that "Golab Sing has a larger array of artillery than we had hitherto supposed, and that he has recently been engaged in increasing it." The same authority mentions that nothing can be more hospitable than the treatment of European gentlemen by the Maharajah, and that, personally, he is most ready to acknowledge his obligations to the British Government.

All was quiet at Lahore. On the 31st July, the commission for the trial of Dewan Moolraj re-assembled, under orders from the Governor-General of India, in the Am Khas of the fort of Lahore, and announced to the prisoner, that "the Governor-General had, according to the recommendation of the commissioners, been graciously pleased to remit the sentence of death passed upon him, and to commute it into a sentence of banishment beyond seas, in close confinement, for life." Upon the commuted sentence being explained to him, Moolraj most eloquently protested his innocence, and declared that the punishment to him, as a Hindoo, was worse than death. The Board ordered irons to be put on him next day, though not directed to do so by the Governor-General, and the measure was generally considered as unnecessarily harsh; his confinement was more rigorous than ever, according to detailed instructions from the Board. Singapore has been named as the place of his exile and punishment.

The grounds of the decision of the Court have been published, and we have inserted this important document, which is elaborately drawn up, in our present issue.

At Peshawur, again, quiet prevails. The weather, under the influence of the rain which had fallen on the hills, was cool, the thermometer in the houses rarely exceeding 87° or 88°. A letter, dated from Peshawur, 29th July, states, with reference to the treaty concluded by Major Lawrence with the hill tribes, that, if such a treaty has been entered into, the Khyburries do not seem inclined to abide by its terms. A European soldier had been wounded near the fort; a mahout was literally cut in two, and two others were severely wounded defending their property. An officer of the 70th N.I. had a fine Arab carried off, some of the plunderers standing over his syces with drawn swords, while others were bridling the horse; and a charger belonging to an artillery officer was carried off on the 27th. "The horses so stolen have usually been traced to the Khyber, so that if the inhabitants are not the actual thieves, they must connive at the robberies, which are said to be arranged during the day by people who bring wood for sale into the town and quarters."

The Bombay column was not expected to leave Peshawur until the end of October. The whole of the Bengal force there would, it was supposed, be relieved during the season. The "relief" of the troops throughout the Punjab was anxiously looked for; and as there are no fewer than thirty-two native corps in the province, the number of men that will be set in motion will be considerable. It is said that it will be intimated to the troops about to cross the Sutlej that they are not to receive any of the so-called Scinde

The insubordination or mutiny, as it is called, amongst some of the Bengal sepoys stationed at Rawul Pindee, appears to be connected with that frequent source of dissatisfaction in native corps, misunderstanding respecting their pay. The Delhi Gazette gives the following as the correct version of the affair:—

"The pay for the months of April and May for the troops at Rawul Pindee reached that station on, or may be a day or two before, the 12th of July. It so happened, however, that the drafts for the 22nd regiment N.I. arrived before those for the 13th N.I., and that, after the pay of the artillery and cavalry had been issued, the former corps were called upon to receive theirs. ascertain what sum the recusants demanded, but those who re-ceived what was tendered (two battalion companies, all the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and some men of the other companies) took, we believe, their pay minus the Scinde marching and cantonment allowance, the latter for the month of May only being detained by the paymaster, with directions to the company officers to draw it in their next abstract, in arrears, an a paper, written in Hindee, was found on the parade ground of the a paper, written in rainder, was jound on the parade ground of the 13th N.I., calling upon the men of that corps not to take less than Rs. 12, the full sum hitherto paid to them. On the 17th, Brigade Orders directed the disbursement of pay to the 13th regiment for the 18th. On the morning of that day another paper, similar in its purport to the first, was found on the parade ground. In the evening the several companies were paraded to receive their pay, which they were assured would have been 10 8 for May, but for the deduction of Rs. 2 which would be drawn for them in arrears (no deduction was made for April, for which the Rs. 12 per man were allowed by the paymaster). About the same number and description of men as in the 22nd (viz., all the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, two entire companies, and about a fourth of each of the other companies) took what was tendered them; the rest declined in a resolute, but most 'civil,' manner, saying they would take the 10 8, but they could not understand saying they would take the 10 o, but they could not understand why the Rs. 2, to which they were entitled as part of their pay, had been withheld. The endeavours of the officers to bring them to reason were thrown away, and they appeared determined to stand by their first resolve. Within twenty-four hours, however, of their by their first resoive. Within twenty-four hours, however, of their refusal, they began to repent of their conduct, and hearing, on the morning of the 20th, that they would be paid, if they solicited the issue as a favour, they came forward as one man, and asked to be permitted to take what had been tendered them, which they are said to have done with every appearance of satisfaction. The 22nd had been asked a second time to take their allowance, and a second time refused that when they found on allowance, and a second time refused; but when they found, on the evening of the 20th, that they stood alone in their recusancy, they thought discretion the better part of valour, came forward to ask for payment, and received it. It is clear that punishment ought to be inflicted, but what shape that punishment ought to take after a kind of condonation, the sepoys being all but invited to reconsider their determination, we shall not take upon ourselves to We must confess that the officer commanding the brigade say. We must comess that the officer commanding the original has very considerably compromised the military authorities, and though Sir Colvin Campbell is undoubtedly a good soldier, he ought to have left a matter affecting the discipline of native troops, of which he can know little or nothing, to be settled by higher authority, withholding the pay of the recusants, pending the result of the reference he had made."

This trifling affair was magnified into one of vast importance. It was said that the Bombay troops at Peshawur were ordered to move on Rawul Pindee, to disarm the rebels; that artillery was preparing, &c.

The intention of Sir Charles Napier, the Commander-in-Chief, to return home at the end of the cold season, which is announced by the Bombay Times "upon authority," has excited much surprise and disappointment amongst those who anticipated extensive reforms from him. "What did he come to India for at all," asks the Bombay Telegraph, "if he did not intend to remain, and introduce those improvements which are so eminently required, and which military men looked forward to with so much confidence?" The fact, unexpected as it is, appears to be regarded by all as certain. It is said that in October he will visit Peshawur, drop down the Indus, and either take a steamer at Kurachee, or go to Bombay.

It was reported that, in consequence of orders from home, the new Sills regiments were to be disbanded; a measure which, it was concluded, would necessitate an augmentation of the regular army, and this would seriously interfere with the Governor-General's schemes in the Punjab. The Marquess of Dalhousie, it is said, has recently signified his intention of setting apart five lakhs of rupees per annum for the making of roads, canals, &c., in that country. The Englishman asserts that the Governor-General had issued orders to stop further enlistment of Khalsa troops.

We reported in our last Summary that the Nizam had dismissed his new minister, Shums-ool-Oomra. It appears that matters had proceeded smoothly for some time; the minister was known to be devising a plan for the liquidation of the debt to the Company's Government, and had prepared a paper to submit to his Highness, in which he proposed to take one year's revenue from all the jagheerdars, a measure by no means without precedent, sanctioned by the Nizam himself. The friends of Shums-ool-Oomra suppose that the Malwalas had taken advantage of this paper, to impress upon the Nizam's mind, that his minister was going, systematically, to plunder his opulent subjects, and thus poisoned his mind against his faithful servant, who was suddenly ordered to send in his gooshasht, or deed of resignation. The office of minister is to be put "into commission;" Syf Jung being the person nominated to act till some person shall be appointed. The reappointment of Suraj-ool-Moolk is reported as not improbable, though his last administration only augmented the disorder in which the affairs of the state were plunged when he obtained power.

The leading topic in the local news of Calcutta is the police investigation, which was still going on, and every day had disclosed more and more misconduct on the part of the subordinates, who appear to have been under no effectual control. The papers are filled with the details of the examinations. The Englishman asserts that Mr. Patton, the chief magistrate, had resigned; but the Indian Times declares, "upon an authority not to be gainsaid," that Mr. Patton "would rather die 10,000 deaths than resign his post whilst the Commission of Inquiry is pending."

An Act had been printed (not passed), for the improvement of Towns, by appointing municipal commissioners, whenever it may be desired by the inhabitants that they should enjoy the comforts and conveniences of lighting, paving, watering, and cleansing. "As these improvements," observes the Englishman, "can only be effected by ratepaying, it is not likely that the inhabitants of many Indian towns will voluntarily consent to be taxed, though for their own immediate benefit."

The Marquess of Dalhousie was expected to leave the hills about the 1st of November, and proceed on a visit to the Punjab.

The accounts from Bombay, where a short supply of rain had been apprehended in the north-west provinces, report that the season had been favourable, and promised to be productive. The Governor was expected to return from the Deccan to the Presidency in a few days.

No intelligence of a later date than appeared in our last issue has been received from China or the Cape of Good Hope.

DEFALCATIONS OF SIR THOMAS TURTON.

Minute of the Governor-General.

The announcement of the default of the Ecclesiastical Registrar, Sir Thomas Turton, has been received in England, as in India, with strong expressions of indignation. The Government of India had no voice in the appointment of this officer, nor any control, directly or indirectly, over his proceedings; but as soon as I heard of the event, I stated my determination, as head of the Government, to institute a prosecution against so gross and scandalous an offender, if I could find the legal means of doing so, and if it should appear that there was any statute or regulation on which a criminal prosecution might be founded with any chance of success.

I deferred submitting a proposal to that effect to the Council until the committee appointed to investigate Sir Thomas Turton's defalcations should report. I wrote, however, to the President of the Board of Control, intimating my intentions. The President, fully approving of them, submitted a case to the Queen's Attorney and Solicitor, to ascertain whether a prosecution would lie.

Their opinion is now before me, and I regret to observe that they do not consider that Sir Thomas Turton can be brought within the reach of a criminal prosecution. The committee have not yet reported; but without further delay I propose to transmit the opinion of the law officers of the Crown to the Advocate-general, and request to be favoured with his opinion, as to whether Sir Thomas Turton can be criminally prosecuted for his default in office, with any reasonable chance of success. If the answer should be in the negative, I shall deeply regret it; but the Government of India will have been enabled to place upon record an evidence of their indignant detestation of the conduct of this officer, and of their resolution, if the law had given them the power, of sending to merited punishment in Botany Bay this worst of all robbers, a robber of the widow and the fatherless.

Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown on a Case laid before them with respect to the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Calcutta.

Her Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-general are requested to advise the Commissioners for the Affairs of India, whether, as far as they can form an opinion from the circumstances disclosed in the foregoing papers, Sir Thomas Turton has rendered himself liable to a criminal prosecution for the misappropriation of moneys entrusted to his charge in his office of Ecclesiastical Registrar of the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

We are of opinion that, under the circumstances, no prosecution of any sort can be instituted against Sir Thomas Turton, under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 74, which contains the criminal law applicable to India, because the money embezzled by him was not received by him in any private capacity within the meaning of that Act. The 2 Will. 4, c. 4, s. 1, which might apply to a case of this description, does not extend to India. If Sir Thomas Turton held an office under Her Majesty or the East-India Company, he might be proceeded against under the 24 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 64, and the following section, as amended by the 26 Geo. 3, c. 57, for a misdemeanor. The mode of proceeding under that Act is anomalous, and seems never to have been exercised; but as the offence of Sir Thomas Turton is of a very grave description, this perhaps will be no objection to such a course, particularly as we are not aware of any other mode by which proceedings can be taken against him. We have not sufficient information to enable us to judge whether the office held by Sir Thomas Turton would bring him within these without fuller evidence.

Temple, May 19, 1848.

From James W. Colvile, Esq., Advocate-general, to George A. Bushby, Esq., C.S., Secretary to the Government of India, &c. &c. &c.; dated Sept. 22, 1848.

Sir,—I have for some time delayed answering your letter of the 27th of July last, in the hope that the committee appointed to examine and report upon the accounts of Sir Thomas Turton, the late Ecclesiastical Registrar of the Supreme Court, would by this time have been able to make their Report. Some weeks will, however, I fear, still elapse before this can be done, and I therefore proceed to communicate, through you, my views upon the question referred to me by the Governor-General in Council, viz., "whether Sir Thomas Turton can be criminally prosecuted for his default in office, with any reasonable chance of success."

for his default in office, with any reasonable chance of success."

I entirely concur with the Attorney and Solicitor-general in the opinion, that Sir Thomas has been guilty of no statutable offence. He is clearly not within the scope of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 74; and if his misconduct falls within the letter of the 2 Will. 4, c. 4, that statute has never been extended to India. His offence, therefore, if indictable at all, must be a misdemeanor at common law; that it may be so seems to be contemplated by the law officers of the Crown, for the statutes the 24 Geo. 3, c. 25, and the 26 Geo. 3, c. 57, which they think may be applicable to his case, create no new offence; they simply provide a new tribunal and procedure for the trial of certain classes of persons accused of the crime of extortion or other misdemeanors.

Sir Thomas Turton was Registrar of the Supreme Court on its Equity, Ecclesiastical, and Admiralty sides; he was appointed to that office by the Judges, under the powers vested in them by the 10th clause of the Letters Patent, commonly known as the Charter of Justice. He was, therefore, derivatively, an officer of the Crown, and upon the principles laid down by Lord Mansfield in the case of Charles Bainbridge (Howell's State Trials, vol. 22, p. 77 and p. 155), I should think Sir Thomas Turton is indictable for his default in office, unless it can be shown that the office in respect of which he has been guilty of such default is not "one of trust and confidence concerning the public." The Ecclesiastical Registrar of the Supreme Court has, it is well known, certain functions which do not properly or naturally appertain to his office. Under the 39 and 40 Geo. 3, c. 79, he is, under certain circumstances, entitled as of right to administer the estates of persons dying intestate. The administration of other estates of deceased persons devolves upon him in practice under the will, or by the act either of the deceased themselves, or of their representatives. He is further, under Act 17, of 1843, ex officio trustee of trust funds brought within the operation of that Act. The defalcations of Sir Thomas Turton have arisen mainly in his administration of estates of deceased persons. From an account before me, for the precise accuracy of which I do not at present vouch, the gross amount of costs, balances due from him to such estates, appears to be Rs. 8,04,188. 10. 8., of which the larger, though I cannot yet state what precise, proportion is due to estates of which he was administrator under the statute 39 and 40 Geo. 3, c. 79. His defalcations, as official trustee, are stated at Rs. 12,036. 15. 8, whilst the moneys which ought to have been in his hands as an officer of Court, being suitors' moneys deposited for costs and other purposes, do not appear to exceed Rs. 6,611. 12. 7.

In respect of his breaches of trust in the administration of estates, to which he administered otherwise than under the statute, I am clear that Sir Thomas Turton, like any other administrator, is only civilly responsible to the parties interested in those estates; as to these, therefore, no indictment will lie. to breaches of trust in the administration of the estates to which he administered ex-officio and by virtue of the statute, I have felt far more doubt. On the one hand, it may be argued that the duty of taking out administration to, and consequently that of faithfully administering, these estates, is cast upon the Ecclesiastical Registrar as such by a public statute, that it has thereby become a duty inherent in his office, in the performance of which the public is as much concerned as in the performance of any other duty by an officer of justice; on the other hand, it may be argued that this selection of the Ecclesiastical Registrar is merely a matter of convenience for the parties interested in the estates; that his remuneration is derived not from the public, but from the particular estates; that for every breach of duty by him, the law affords a civil carnot be said to concern the public, which is no more affected by them than by those of ordinary executors or trustees. If the course taken by Parliament in the case of Mr. Ricketts, at Madras, viz. that of making the revenues of India, and therefore in a sense the State, liable for the defaults of the Registrar as official administrator, had established this liability as a principle, or was likely to be followed as a precedent on the present occasion, I should have no doubt as to the propriety of indicting Sir Thomas Turton for his malversations as official administrator; for in that case, his breach of duty would directly and materially affect the public; but if this liability be repudiated, the question whether Sir T. T. be amenable to the criminal law in respect of his defaults as administrator, seems to me to be one of doubt and difficulty; and the impolicy of doing anything which may be construed to imply a recognition of the liability of the State, is an additional reason why I should hesitate, as I do hesitate, to recommend a Government prosecution of Sir Thomas, for any misappropriation of moneys in his charge, as official administrator. The same considerations apply to the malversations of Sir Thos. Turton, as official trustee, under Act 17, of 1843.

It appears to me, that if the misappropriation of the suitors'

It appears to me, that if the misappropriation of the suitors' moneys received by Sir Thomas Turton (Co.'s Rs. 6,611. 12. 7. in all), strictly, as Equity Registrar, can be brought home to him (and I do not anticipate much difficulty in respect of evidence on this point), he has been guilty of misconduct in office, amounting to an indictable misdemeanor. I believe that the amount in cash made over to the present Registrar did not exceed Rs. 5,000, and was therefore less than the whole amount of Equity deposits. Had it exceeded these, there might have been some difficulty in proving the misappropriation of these particular sums, as we have, I believe, no means of tracing the particular moneys paid in.

Another ground on which I have always thought that Sir Thomas Turton is indictable, is his disobedience of the statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 84.* By the 5th section of that Act, the Registrar is bound to keep the accounts of each estate committed to him in a book open to the inspection of the public. He is also bound to file in Court, periodically, true and perfect schedules of all sums of money, bonds or other securities received on account of each estate remaining under his charge, together with the payments made thereout, and the balances. I believe that it I believe that it would not be difficult to show that the books kept by the late Registrar were not in accordance with this enactment, and that the schedules filed were by no means true or perfect. It is, however, difficult to say, that the precise errors assignable imply a fraudulent intention. Many make against, though many others make for the Registrar; and all, I believe, arose less from design than from the generally loose manner in which the accounts of the office were kept. In the schedule filed, as the practice was, so late as December, 1847, though purporting to be a schedule of the assets as they stood in December, 1846, there are various errors which may not unfairly be attributed to design. The Registrar is bound not to keep, unless under par-ticular circumstances, a large cash balance in hand; it was therefore his interest, in order to avoid injury, to make the amount of the securities invested on account of any particular estate appear in the schedule to be as large, and to make the cash balance on account of that estate appear to be as small as possible.

Now, in the schedule in question, I find, in the estate of John Athenass, the cash balance is stated at 6,171. 13. 10, and the amount of securities is stated at 25,000 Sicca rupees. By the ledger, it appears that the real cash balance due to that estate was 15,050. 15. 7, and the securities only 17,000 Sicca rupees, Company's paper, to the amount of 8,000 Sicca rupees, having been sold in November or December, 1846, but no notice of that transaction taken by those who made up the schedule. In the estate of Lieut. Charles Dicken, the schedule debits the estate with a small cash balance, 470. 10. 5, and credits it with Government paper to the amount of Rs. 11,000. That Government paper had been sold in November, 1846, and on the 31st December, 1846, the ledgers show the state of the account to have been a cash balance of Rs. 11,676. 11. 5, and no Government paper at all at the credit of that estate. There are other instances of the same kind; but the extreme carelessness of all the native writers in the office (and there were none but natives employed), the general confusion of the accounts, and the laxity of the whole system of the office were such, that it is possible Sir Thomas Turton may, in respect to these false entries, have been guilty of no more than a very culpable degree of careless-ness, and may not have been himself conscious of the errors.

Upon the whole case, his Lordship in Council will see I am of oninion, that an indictment against Sir Thomas Turton for the missplication of the equity deposits, or one for the omission to file a true and perfect schedule, pursuant to the statute, is the least open to objection, and affords the most reasonable grounds on which to expect a conviction. There is nothing to prevent two separate indictments being prepared against him for these distinct offences. There was not in the office a single employé on whose evidence I should be disposed to rely; and this circumstance, and the complexity and confusion of the accounts, would probably operate to prevent success in any but the simplest case. The cases, however, to which I have adverted, are simple, and evidence in them seems to be easily attainable.

Since I began this letter, I have examined more attentively the amounts relating to the equity deposits. They consist of small sums deposited by way of security for the costs of an appeal or re-hearing. Some have been many years in the office, owing to the carelessness of those entitled to claim them, and were taken over by Sir Thomas (probably as items in account) from his predecessor. Others I may instance, Sa. Rs. 1,220, in a cause of the Rajah of Vizinagram v. John Muller and others, and a sum of Cs.'s Rs. 420, in a cause of Wallace v. M. Kellar, were paid in during the year 1847-1848.

It will no doubt strike his Lordship in Council, that the most obvious objection to the adoption of the course suggested above is, that if it be followed, we shall be driven to indict Sir Thomas Turton for offences insignificant, when compared with the greater delinquencies, which, from defects in the criminal law, we must leave unpunished; and that a conviction upon such charges can only entail a punishment proportioned to the nature and magnitude of the offence charged and proven.

Calcutta, Sept. 22, 1848.

Minute by the Governor-General. Dated Sept. 26, 1848.

I circulate the Advocate-general's opinion relative to the liability of Sir Thomas Turton to criminal prosecution, for the gross malversations of which he has been guilty in his office as Ecclesiastical Registrar.

The Advocate-general concurs in the opinion expressed by her Majesty's Attorney-general and Solicitor-general.

I attach great weight to the observation in the concluding paragraph of the Advocate's letter.

If Sir Thomas Turton cannot be prosecuted with any probability of a conviction for the great crime of which he has been guilty, I think the Government would lower itself, and would err, if it were to pursue him for the minor and comparatively petty delinquencies he has committed.

I deeply regret that so great an offender should escape the punishment he merits. But the Government is powerless in the matter; and the Governor-General in Council can do no more than now place on record the evidence of his resolution to bring this criminal to trial and to punishment, if the state of the law had enabled him to do so.

Minute by the Governor-General.

In the month of September, 1848, the Advocate-general submitted his opinion on the liability of Sir Thomas Turton to criminal prosecution under the statutes, on account of the malversations of which he had been guilty as Ecclesiastical Registrar. The Advocate-general concurred with her Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-general, that under the law as it stood Sir T. Turton could not be prosecuted for the principal crime which had been laid to his charge. On receiving these concurrent opinions of the legal authorities, I recorded a minute, in which I stated my own opinion that the Government was powerless as against Sir Thomas Turton, and that it could do no more than place on record the evidence of its resolution to punish him, if the state of the law had permitted it.

Mr. Millett and Sir John Littler concurred in this view of the subject. Mr. Bethune, while he agreed with the law officers in thinking that the law, as it stood, would not reach the main offence, and while he agreed also in thinking that it would be inexpedient to prosecute for a comparatively insignificant irregularity, declared his opinion of the propriety of supplying the deficiency of the statute law, by passing in the Council an Act of Pains and Penalties for the punishment of the crime committed by Sir Thomas Turton. The measure proposed by Mr. Bethune was a very strong one; it was without precedent in the proceedings of the Council of India, and consequently was of a character to forbid its being lightly determined upon, or hastily determined upon.

Moreover, the Committee appointed by the Supreme Court to examine and report upon the state of Sir Thomas Turton's office, lad not completed their task, so as to afford a foundation for proceedings against him. They have not reported even now. For these reasons I delayed recording any further minute on the question, awaiting until the Report of the Committee be given in, and more especially until I should receive a reply to letters which I addressed, demi-officially, to the authorities at home on the subject, as soon as I received Mr. Bethune's minute.

The mail which has just arrived, and which might have brought me a reply, has not conveyed to me any observations on the subject. I will, therefore, no longer delay the expression of my sentiments on Mr. Bethune's proposal, which has been again brought under my notice by a demi-official letter from the President in Council, received by me a few days ago.

Sir Herbert Maddock informs me, that a general rumour prevails that Sir Thomas Turton is about to take his departure from India. He expected, at the time he wrote, that the Report of the Committee on Sir T. Turton's office would be given in forthwith. He suggests, in accordance with Mr. Bethune's proposal, that an Act of Pains and Penalties against Sir T. Turton should be passed; and that, to prevent the risk of his leaving India before the Act could be rendered complete, another preliminary Act should be passed (as I understand per saltum), authorizing the arrest and detention of Sir Thomas Turton for such specified time as will admit of the passing of the main Act. I have given very anxious consideration to this question, not only since the receipt of the letter addressed to me by the President in Council, but during the time which has elapsed since Mr. Bethune delivered to me his minute.

It is quite unnecessary for me to repeat the declaration of my desire, personally, for the credit of the Government of India, to find the means of punishing this man; and although the measure proposed would be, as Mr. Bethune truly says, "unusual and distasteful to the common way of thinking of English jurists," I should not be deterred by any such considerations from promptly adopting it, if I could satisfy my own judgment that it would be successful. I entertain very great doubts of its success. Mr. Bethune, as I gather from his minute, and from the conversation we had upon the subject, feels no doubt whatever of the entire competency of the Council of India to pass such an Act.

Without placing my opinion for a moment on a question of law in competition with his, yet on various grounds I feel myself unable to entertain any confident opinion that the competency of the Council for passing such an Act would be admitted. The enactment of a Bill of Pains and Penalties relating to such crimes as that with which Sir T. Turton is charged, is an event of very rare occurrence indeed, even in the Imperial Parliament. Only two precedents are quoted, and one of these failed. I am by no means confident that the power of the Council of India to pass a retrospective Act, inflicting punishment on an individual for a conduct which the statute law of England had not recognized to be a crime, and thus exercising an authority which the Imperial Parliament itself does not put forth except on the rarest occasions and at distant intervals, would be received as indisputable, either by legal authorities in England, or by the Hon. Court of Directors, under whom we serve.

The Hon. Court has of late, on more occasions than one, evinced an inclination to hold that the legislative powers of the Council of India, on other points than those which are specially regulated by the Charter Act, are anything but co-extensive with the powers of other Legislatures; while it is very certain, that if the highest legal authorities of her Majesty's Government and of the Hon. Company should be of opinion that the Council of India, in passing an Act of Pains and Penalties, had exceeded its powers, or had even exercised a power that was questionable, their opinion would of necessity prevail, and very embarrassing results might be produced. If the Act of Pains and Penalties, passed by the Council of India, should be disallowed, the result would a triumph to the criminal, instead of a punishment. If the power to pass the Act should be questioned, it would lead to litigation, and to the stirring of propositions which might create unnecessary doubts, and lead to vexatious and endless controversy.

Having regard to these considerations, and to the doubts which I myself entertain of the recognition of the competency of the Council of India to exercise such a power, or, at all events, of the expediency of its exercising it without reference to the Hon. Court; having regard, also, to the rapidity with which such reference can now be made, I am adverse to the commencement of any proceedings in the Legislative Council of India without

I have already stated, that within a few days after the receipt of Mr. Bethune's minute, I solicited, demi-officially, the instructions of the authorities at home on the point. It is more than probable that I shall receive those instructions; but, even if they should not reach me, I should still recommend strongly to the President in Council, and to my colleagues, that the proceedings in question should not be commenced without the authority of the Court. I recommend this course with the less hesitation, because, if it should turn out that Sir Thomas Turton in the meantime did actually quit India, his departure will not place him beyond the reach of punishment for the crime which he has committed in that country. An Act of Pains and Penaltics against him may still, if it is thought right, be introduced into the Imperial Parliament. I think it infinitely better that we should hereafter recommend to those we serve to obtain the punishment of this man from Parliament, than that we should exercise what is to my mind a doubtful power, in making an attempt to punish him here, which attempt, if it fail, will place the criminal in a better position than that which he now occupies.

If it should be proposed to pass an Act for detaining him here until the orders of the Court may be received, in the same manner as it is proposed to detain him by an Act until the main Act should be passed, I must again reluctantly dissent. The expressions in Mr. Bethune's minute confirm my recollection of his having expressed doubts himself, in our conversation, of the expediency of inflicting the penalty of transportation in the proposed Act, and of his having contemplated inflicting by it the degradation of perpetual banishment from the territorics of the East-India Company. In accordance with the doubts I have already expressed, I could not assent to the infliction of a sentence of transportation; and to pass an Act preventing a man from leaving the country, in order to give us time to pass anther Act sending him out of it, would, in the eyes of the public generally, appear to be something so inconsistent, and even more, that I fear the effect would be bad.

I take the liberty, for the reasons I have stated above, to recommend to the President in Council not to pass an Act of Pains and Penalties against Sir Thomas Turton, without having obtained the previous sanction of the Hon. Court. And in case I should not receive a reply to my demi-official communications which may appear to be sufficiently authoritative, I would suggest that a full statement of the facts should be made by the next mail to the Court, the wishes of the Government of India explained, and the instructions of the Court requested. This, however, cannot be done otherwise than hypothetically, if the Report of the Committee of the Supreme Court has not yet been before Government.

Jan. 9, 1849. (Signed) DALHOUSIE.

The Report of the Commissioners, Messrs. Colvile, Sandes, Macpherson, Higgins, and Smoult, is dated 25th January, 1849. It is of great length, filling nineteen folio pages of the Blue Book. The subjects of their inquiry were, 1st., the amount of the gross deficiency in the assets lately under the administration of Sir T. Turton; 2nd, the mode in which that deficiency was to be apportioned amongst the several estates and trusts committed to his charge; 3rd, what were his means of meeting, and partially making good, his liabilities to these estates.

The manner in which the accounts and records in the office were kept appears to have been disgraceful. "The accounts," the Commissioners say, "had been wholly kept by native mohurrirs and writers employed in the office; no European clerk or accountant was employed there," and the Commissioners were unable to investigate the accounts without the assistance of an European accountant (Mr. Mackellar), who was obliged to pay a staff of writers, and some of the employés in the office, to make up and balance the books.

Under the first head, they say that the account of assets with which Sir T. Turton debited himself, as apparently due on the 25th February, 1848 (when he resigned the office), is Rs. 8,70,224. 3. 1., which balance, by corrections, consisting mainly of remittances stated to have been omitted in the cash book, is afterwards reduced to Rs. 6,74,313. 15. 1. "Sir R. Turton expresses his willingness," the Commissioners say, " to be bound by this account; it was, however, obvious to us that very little dependence could be placed upon it, and we directed the books to be balanced and made up irrespectively of it." result of this making up of the books is to show that the total amount due from Sir Thomas is Rs. 10,25,714. 5. 10, or, allowing for balances from estates appearing to be due to him, the demore than the sum of misappropriations with which Sir Thomas charged himself. "Whether the larger amount with which we have, prima facie, charged Sir, Thos. Turton, he radicable or not, the Commissioners add, is, as we have before shown, uncertain; if, however, it be reducible, it is so only by proof of errors in the official books and accounts kept by writers in the employ of Sir Thomas Turton prior to the 1st of January, 1847. or of payments of which no record or voucher is to be found in the office. We profess only to give the results of the books as they existed in February, 1848, and of the additions made to them from materials found in the office at that date.

"We think it necessary further to observe, that, although in estimating the sum for which Sir Thomas Turton is a defaulter. it may be right to give him credit for the balances apparently due to him; that sum does not correctly measure the amount of his legal liability, or of the gross deficiency in the assets belonging to the various estates and trusts committed to his charge. In the first place, we are by no means clear that Sir Thomas's claim to these sums as still due to him could, in all cases, be substantiated; in the second, the Ecclesiastical Registrar was, in point of law, no more to entitled to advance the moneys belonging to estate (A.) for the purposes of estate (B.) than he was entitled to apply them to his own use, and it by no means follows that the moneys so advanced will be recoverable in full, or that such as may be recovered will be traceable to the particular estate from which they were borrowed, or capable of being applied otherwise than the other moneys which may be recovered from Sir Thomas Turton's estate, that is, by way of dividend on the general amount of his official liabilities. It seems, therefore, more proper to state the gross apparent deficiency in cash, at the larger sum of Rs. 10,25,714. 5. 10., and to treat the sum of Rs. 1,42,022. 2. 2., as a part of Sir Thomas Turton's estate, of which so much as may be recovered will be specially applicable to the discharge of his official liabilities."

Under the second head, the Commissioners give a deplorable picture of the state in which they found the securities, partly the result of errors and omissions in the books, and the Registrar's utter neglect of the rules of his office; and partly, as it would appear from a remark of the Commissioners, of less venial Buying and selling of Government paper were entered into with a view to the profit, not of the estate, but of the office. For the purpose of these transactions, there was what is called a "Suspense Account," and the Commissioners say, "in many cases Government paper appears to have been passed through the 'Suspense Account' merely for the purpose of making a profit, which, there is evidence to show, was treated as the legitimate gain of the office." It would appear that the existence of this "Suspense Account" was accidentally lighted upon in the course of their investigations. "Certain accounts," they "were discovered in the office, consisting of sheets of paper loosely stitched together and very roughly kept, but obviously purporting to record the transfers of Government Securities to and from an account entitled the "Suspense Account." The Commissioners, supposing there might be some more formal record of this "Suspense Account" than these loose papers, caused a letter to be written to Sir T. Turton, requesting information, which elicited the following cool reply from Sir Thomas:—"The Suspense Account was kept by Parbutty Sunker Mookerjee; I believe not in any regular books, and I believe chiefly in Bengallee. I never saw the accounts; but when any transaction, such as the sale or purchase of securities, to any amount, took place, a memorandum was given to me, which, after examination, was returned to Parbutty Sunker.

Some months before my resignation, I directed the account to be closed, and to be made up in English for my information, and to be shown to me; but though I frequently asked for it before my resignation, I never obtained it. If they are not in the office, I do not know what has become of these accounts, which, as I have stated, I never saw, nor of the books, if there were any (which I do not believe), in which they were entered." To the direct frauds must probably be added a large amount of indirect frauds derived from this source.

With respect to the third head of inquiry, namely, what are Sir T. Turton's means of meeting or partially making good his defalcations, the Commissioners report that his property consists of real estate in England and India (subject to settlements and incumbrances), a plantation in Ceylon (supposed to be worthless), houses, debts (some irrecoverable), a policy of insurance, notes, bills, &c.; the figures stated by the Commissioners, taken at the full nominal amount, make about four lacs, subject to the claims of his other creditors; but if realized in full, and applied to the discharge of his official defalcations, the amount would still leave a deficiency of upwards of six lacs, or £60.000.

BENGAL.

THE CASE OF MOOLRAJ.

GROUNDS OF THE COURT'S JUDGMENT IN CONVICTING MOOLRAJ OF MURDER, AND PASSING SENTENCE OF DEATH UPON HIM-

The connection of Dewan Moolraj with the Mooltan country is a matter of history. In September, 1844, we find that Sawan Mull, the nazim or governor of Mooltan for the maharajah of the Seikh nation, was assassinated. He was a man of great vigour and ability, and the prosperity of the province was mainly attributable to his administration. He was succeeded in his office by his son, the prisoner. It would appear, that for some months Moolraj continued to hold the government of Mooltan on the same terms as his father. Early in 1816, it seems that Rajah Lall Singh designed to remove the dewan from his charge. There had been a personal quarrel between them for some years, and now, on the treaty of Lahore being executed, Rajah Lall Singh became prime minister of the Punjab, and a force was sent against Moolraj to secure the demand of fine on succession to Sawun Mull, as well as to realize a portion of the current revenue. An encounter took place near Jung; Rajah Lall Singh's troops were defeated. The agent to the governor-general at Lahore interfered to mediate between the two parties. After much delay and trouble it was finally arranged that Moolraj should give up the district of Jung, being nearly one-third of the province heretofore held by him; that he should pay twenty lacs on account of fine on succession, and for arrears, and that the revenue of the districts still left under the charge of the dewan, should be raised in amount by more than one-third. The new engagement was in fact a farm of the province for three years, commencing in 1904 Sumbat, corresponding with the autumn crop of 1847, A.D. Dewan Moolraj expressed himself to the British agent as extremely pleased at this arrangement, as though the payment fixed was heavy, it secured to him, by the aid of the English, his life and office out of the hands of his merciless enemy.

But the close of the same year was to see a new change in the affairs of the Punjab, and the treaty of Bhyrawall, executed in December, 1846, placed the administration of the country in the hands of a council of regency, composed of leading chiefs and sirdars acting under the control and guidance of a British resident.

About a twelvemonth from this time, Moolraj, on the occasion of the return to Europe of the resident, Sir Henry Lawrence, visited Lahore. He arrived, however, too late to see that officer. He visited, however, his successor, Mr. John Lawrence, and at an interview in the first week of December, 1847, solicited from him leave to give in the resignation of the farm of the province of Mooltan, granted the previous year. Moolraj's public reasons for this proceeding, as deliberately stated to the resident, were two; one, that the new arrange-ments about the customs in the Punjab, which reduced the old transit and town duty system of a native state into one of simple export and import duty, but which change did not extend to Mooltan, on account of the three years' lease, caused him He urged that the Lahore authorities had let off great loss. so many duties on articles in their new tariff, that the Mooltan people were unwilling to pay according to his own local scale of duties, and he further expressed his dislike to follow the example of the durbar in its system of fiscal commutation. The second reason was that he did not retain his old hold upon the people of Mooltan, since the treaty of Bhyrawall had introduced a formal appeal to the new council from his proceedings as governor or maxim. On this latter point, Moolrej persisted with great pertinacity in his interview with Mr. John Lawrence, for he distinctly told that officer that he would retain his charge if the system of interference was given up.

From Mr. Lawrence's evidence, it clearly appears that the question of responsibility for acts done to the inhabitants of Mooltan was debated by Moolran mainly as one of profit and loss. He stated distinctly, that the enhanced rent would not pay, if the privilege of appeal was conceded to the people in all private and public wrongs. He stood out for independence as a necessary condition of his retaining the farm.

As a key to future events, it is desirable that the object of Moolraj should, in respect to the resignation, be cleared of every shadow of doubt. Now Mr. John Lawrence states his firm belief that Moolraj was sincere in his expressed wish, and if anything further than such evidence of the British resident at the time is required to satisfy the commissioners of Moolraj's motive and intentions, we are supplied by the same officer with particular cases of money suits decided against Moolraj, which were the source of great vexation to his feelings, and of embarrassment to his system of government.

While Moolraj's sincerity in requesting to resign in Dec. 1847 seems undoubted, the same witness, Mr. J. Lawrence, continues to state that he has no reason to suppose the dewan to have changed his mind on the subject before Mr. Agnew and his party left Lahore in April following, to receive charge of the Mr. Lawrence, though still residing at Lahore in March 1848, never heard a native remark that Moolraj's wishes had altered; he is not aware of any necessities that could have induced Moolraj to change his determination. Notoriously a rich man, and without children, the dewan spoke of himself as having no one to assist him in the government; as being in ill health, and as being at enmity with his brothers. Pulling up his sleeve and showing his arm, he continued to urge to the British resident, "Is that the arm of a man to rule a country?" After his return from Lahore to Mooltan, Moolraj un-doubtedly made great reduction in his troops. He sold off stores, and in April paid in his last instalment of rent for the current harvest. In all these circumstances there is clear evidence of his motive and intention to quit Mooltan.

We now arrive at the events in the city of Mooltan. On April 5th, Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieut. Anderson, assistants to the resident at Lahore, with Sirdar Khan Singh, the officer selected as successor to Moolraj in the government of Mooltan, left Lahore by water for Mooltan to relieve the dewan. The troops which were detached on duty with the party went by land. They consisted of about 1,300 fighting men, 600 foot of the so-called Goorkha regiment, 700 cavalry, and 100 artillery, with six guns. On the 17th the boats anchored off the landing place nearest to the fort of Mooltan. On the following day the party with the troops encamped in and about the Eedgah, a building in a direct line about half a mile from the fort, and the same distance from Moolraj's own residence, the Am Khass. Moolraj paid two visits, one of ceremony and the other of business, in the course of the 18th, and it was settled at the last interview that the fort should be delivered over to the new governor on the following morning.

About 7 o'clock on the morning of the 19th, the British Officers, Khan Sing, and Moolraj, visited the Fort. Mr. Agnewinspected the stores and magazines; harangued the troops of Moolraj who were to be detained or dismissed, and, leaving the Fort in charge of two companies of the Goorkha Regiment, prepared with the rest of the party to return home. The egress from the Fort lay through an inner gate called Sikhi, and then an outer one called Kumr Kotha. This last was connected with the glacis by a standing bridge over the deep fort ditch. At this point Mr. Agnew is said to have been riding on the extreme right; next to him was Moolraj, then Lieut. Anderson, Khan Singh being on the left flank. Somewhere near this bridge, for the spot is placed differently in the different depositions, Mr. Agnew was struck with a spear by an assassin, fell from his horse, and was wounded with three blows of a sword by the same man, who escaped by falling or getting into the deep ditch. Moolraj, seeing what had taken place, pushed on his horse. Lieutenant Anderson too rode off rapidly, while Khan Sing stopped behind with Rungram, a relation of Moolraj by marriage, to take care of Mr. Agnew. From the bridge the distance to the city gate is less than the distance of the city gate (which has the name of Doulut) from the Am Khass, the residence of Moolraj, and that is about 100 paces, the road lying through a bazaar in the suburbs, under the walls of the Am Khass, to the Eedgah, where Mr. Agnew was encamped. In taking, however, this the regular road, the elephant on which Mr. Agnew had been placed was compelled to go a bye-road, to escape from the hostile demonstration of the soldiery, whose cantonment surrounds the Am Khass, or rather with Mooiraj's palace composes it. Matchlocks were fired, as if to warn the party from the direct route, and guns were brought out of the cantonment. In the mean time, Lieut. Anderson had been severely wounded in his flight from the scene of the attack upon Agnew, and was found beyond the Doulut gate, lying on the ground, with seven wounds on himself and four on his horse. He was brought home by some of his own people, but the manner of his being cut down is not clear. Some time after this Moolraj, at the persuasion of Rungram, who is married to his first cousin, and who staid behind to succour Mr. Agnew, prepared to visit the wounded officers; when mounting their horses, a carbineer of the escort attacked Rungram with a sword, and inflicted three severe wounds on his arm, one of which might have cut open the forehead.

Moolraj then returned into the Am Khass, and contented himself with sending Toolseeram, one of his Moonshees, to wait upon Mr. Agnew with a letter of excuse and warning, saying that he had wished to come in person; that in making the attempt Rungram had been wounded; that there was a riot among the Hindoo and Mahomedan soldiery, and that Mr. Agnew with his party should be upon the watch to protect themselves.

This scene may be said to close the first act in the sad drama of Mooltan, and it is now necessary to pass again under review the position of Moolraj in respect to his tenure of the government of Mooltan.

Now if Moolraj secretly directed the attack upon the British Officers before he visited the fort (for the movement of the head by Moolrai, which is interpreted in some of the evidence into a sign to the assassin, appears to have been accidental or fancied) we must search for adequate motives, having their origin in the month of April, and in influences pervading at Mooltan-either he repented having given in his resignation, or from revenge of some fancied insult he compassed the assassination of the two officers. Now, after the most careful consideration, the Court cannot discover in the different circumstances that took place during Mr. Agnew's progress to Mooltan, and up till the night of the 18th, any connected chain of suspicion against Moolraj. A want of attention on the road; Moolraj failing to go out to receive the officers on their arrival at Mooltan; the absence of a salute; the want of courtesy towards Khan Singh at the Eedgah interview, even the excitement of Moolraj during the dispute about the accounts and cases of petitioners, may, without any violence to probability, be explained by the perplexities of the position of Moolraj, and the vexation of his feelings at the mode of his removal. Surprise, disappointment, and subdued anger would not unnaturally produce these circumstances on the part of a man of Moolraj's temperament, and it is an assumption to treat them as causes and effects of a spirit of disaffection and rebellion in his heart. Mr. J. Lawrence, indeed, states that all old claims of the state were satisfied and settled by the money payment in 1846. And in his opinion Moolraj quitted Lahore in December 1847, with that impression of the understanding between them. In Mr. Lawrence's belief, no remarks of Mr. Agnew, who was a very honest-minded man, could make Moolraj fear that the accounts were sought for from any other object than to form the basis of a new engagement with the landholders. Moolraj might have been disturbed and irritated by the pertinacity of Mr. Agnew in regard to the accounts and undecided claims, it is to be remembered that the furnishing of these accounts was one of the circumstances which were to be placed to his credit as grounds for a grant of land on his retirement, so that if the disclosure of his private affairs was of itself a subject of annoyance, it had its set off of advantage to Moolraj, whose future fortunes were still to be determined by the Resident and Council of Labore.

Then as to the character of the man on whom these circumstances were to produce so startling an impression. - Moolraj would seem by nature and habit to possess much more of a mercantile than a martial character. On succeeding, in 1811, to his father's office, it was with no great promise of success. His intercourse with the British Resident in 1846 and 1847 had not left any very favourable impressions of fitness to represent his father in his bold and vigorous career as governor of Mooltan. There seems to have been more of calmendurance than of active daring in his temperament. He may have been oppressive on systematic principles of business, but he does not figure in the character of a cruel and violent man, nor consequently as a man who would be feared under all changes of circumstances by a lawless body of soldiers and followers. In short, he is not a man of strong passions, or of great mental power, which would command obedience. But he had many valuable qualities for civil administration in quiet times, and the spirit and success of his government in maintaining the prosperity of Mooltan, set an example deserving of imitation in eastern countries.

It is necessary to form some clear estimate of Moolraj's character in order to calculate the extent to which Mr. Agnew's interference with his interest, or the disaffected spirit at Mooltan, could induce him to engage in deeds of violence and danger, and suddenly to yield himself up to the gratification of revenge; and certainly, after the most careful consideration of the Dewan's character, and after giving every attention to the arguments of the advocates on both sides, Moolraj's complicity in the attempt at assassination must be rejected unless much assumption is thrown into the balance of probabilities.

No doubt Moolraj's flight, immediately on seeing Mr. Agnew attacked, does strike the mind as a very marked circumstance. It may be said, would not the natural impulse of a loyal and gallant servant have been to do other than desert the wounded Agnew at such a moment of danger? We are not, however, called upon to discuss the extent of active moral obligation at a moment of emergency. A man of a bold and chivalrous charac-ter by temperament, and a man of high feeling and general sympathy, would doubtless have remained behind. But it is equally true that, under similar circumstances, Moolraj would not be found a solitary instance of a somewhat timid character, thinking only of securing its own safety in flight. It is right too, not to exclude from view that Moolraj was unnerved and discontented. He was giving up office and all its sweets-the charm of power and pride in his army. He may have had to endure secret reproaches and open taunts from many of his followers for abandoning his post and sacrificing their interests to please the enemy of the Khalsa. The involvements of his position at this new event might, for the moment, bewilder a mind liable to be swayed by contradictory impulses. Neither, as the advocate of the pri-soner has urged, does Lieut. Anderson's speedy flight at the same time, though the authority possessed by the two was certainly very different, afford us any light by which to trace out Moolraj's criminality from the act of abondonment and escape.

How then was this act of violence committed at all? done in open day at the gate of the fort, at Moolraj's side, in the face of his followers, by a single assassin. Could this be without the direction or approval of Moolraj? It has never been suggested that the assassin had any personal wrong to revenge. He seems to represent the feelings of others. From what can be gleaned of the identity of the man, he would seem to have been a desperate bravo, the terror of peaceable people, and equal to any open or secret crime. Though Moolraj's character might not involve him in a scheme of assassination with such a desperado as this, it may be urged by the prosecution whether Moolraj may not have encouraged by his conduct and complaints his confidants and followers to believe or assume that he was a helpless creature in the hands of the English, and willing to lead any opposition to the extension of their influence, which the patriotism of the people might demand. Words of complaint and upbraiding might be used by Moolraj, as indeed expressing his real feelings, but with no object but to amuse the excitement of his followers, and to conceal the peaceable and obedient course which he himself had contracted with the Resident in December to pursue. The influence of such complaints might easily assume a hostile form in the minds of the chief officers, and a still more hostile shape with the common followers, so that, unknown or unsanctioned by Moolraj, a man like the bravo who attacked Mr. Agnew, and the band of horsemen who cut down Lieut. Anderson, might be moved to action by excited feelings. They might be influenced by a sense that Moolraj would secretly approve of their zeal, or at least would be right glad to enjoy the fruits of their conduct in emancipation from the toils of the English and their party, without incurring the charge of procuring it by his open defiance and resistance.

Nor, while reasoning upon the improbability of any attempt at assassination being made in Moolraj's presence, without his connivance, can we exclude from consideration a most important point, urged indeed very properly by the Advocate for the defence, that the plan arranged by Moolraj with the Resident, Mr. J. Lawrence, in December, 1848, for delivery of the fort and government to the Lahore Council, and which plan differed very materially from that carried out by his successor, Sir F. Currie, in April, 1849, was suggested and urged by Moolraj, as best suited to prevent any commotion and resistance on the part of his own people. The resignation was to be kept a se-There was not to be a native successor appointed. Some English officers were to visit Mooltan for purposes of inspection, they were gradually to be invested with the power and machinery of the Government, and Moolraj, when all looked fair and secure, was to slip away from the country. Here Moolraj's provision against tumult was secresy. It matters not whether the secresy that was openly abandoned in April could have been perfectly secured in December; Moolraj deemed that it could have been maintained sufficiently for his object, and it is undeniably a very effective argument for Moolraj's defence in regard to the first attack, that by the act of the British Resident and the Council, "I was not furnished with the means of providing against commotion which were best suited to my character." Secresy and caution were Moolraj's instruments of action. The transfer that was intended to have been made in winter was now to be made, and in the oppressive heats of summer a native officer was formally appointed the successor of Moolraj, instead of an European gentleman. The matter, hitherto secret, had been laid before the Council by the new Resident, Sir F. Currie; while the proceedings of Mr. Agnew, in his progress and on arrival at Mooltan, placed it out of the power of Moolraj to blind one follower for a moment as to the real character of the affair in hand.

Further, it cannot be said that the arrangements made for the transfer were particularly well adapted to overawe a tumultuous body of Eastern troops, whose bread was at stake, and but few of whom, under the new state of affairs, could hope to retain it. The English officers selected were not old, experienced military men. Mr. Agnew, the chief officer, was a young civilian, who men. Mr. Agnew, the chief officer, was a young civilian, who seems to have shut his eyes purposely to the symptoms of disaffection which were presenting themselves to him in his progress to Mooltan, or were brought to his notice before his visit to the fort. The British officers with the new governor were quietly proceeding by water to Mooltan, while the Durbar troops were marching by land—blind confidence in the fidelity of the Sikh soldiery taking the place of establishing a regard and respect for the English, by ties of professional courtesy and intercourse. Then too a hody of fessional courtesy and intercourse. Then, too, a body of followers and soldiery, sensitive of the honour of their go-Then, too, a body of vernor, and unaccustomed to the forms of office in the British provinces, might have been excited by the reports of the abrupt and imperious bearing of Mr. Agnew on the day of his arrival, when his proceedings exhibit more of the prompt and decided tone of an Englishman of business going about an ejectment of a lessee, than the delicate and cautious conduct of a dilatory diplomatist, who with courteous determination would first have placed his position beyond peril, and have proceeded then to take up open questions of old accounts, and of suits of petitioners, which necessarily are very sore subjects in the eastern world. The Mooltan troops, too, saw that all suspicion was lulled in Mr. Agnew's mind; that he failed to exercise any due military precaution in taking possession of the fort; that the transfer was indeed nominal, the guns and garrison being quite as much at the command of Moolraj then as before, so that the old garrison turned out of the fort by noon of the same day the two Goorkha companies left by Mr. Agnew in charge, and this with out a blow. All this was inviting and facilitating the movement of minds working under the combined influences of national hatred, religious enthusiasm, indulgence of the lawless liabits of eastern military life, and of desperation at the prospect of the loss of employment from a change of administration. But among these minds can Moolraj be placed in the foremost rank, or even at all?

Throughout the proceedings of the present trial, limited though the scope of inquiry has been, there is certainly at times a gleam of light breaking out, showing movements of a political character from a distance towards Mooltan. But Moolraj's wish was retirement. The political intrigues among men having authority; any proposal of the Sikh troops on their road to Mooltan to join in an anti-British crusade; the applause of the people echoing his name as the saviour of his country; the call from the Sikh veteran for a leader to give him another and fuller, and he would think, fairer trial of strength with the British soldier—all these cries would be and were indifferent to Moolraj, or listened to but as desperate schemes, foreign to the natural bent and real interest of the merchant prince, tired of the vexations of office, and unequal either to yield to the new system of administration at Lahore, or to bend it to his own purpose.

Still, there was one point in which Moolraj's wish for retirement, and it may be peace, was vulnerable, and that is the transfer of the Government being made to a native Sirdar instead of to an English gentleman. However clear might have been the understanding with Mr. Lawrence, and though Mr. Agnew's own conversation might not have shaken Moolraj's confidence in the feelings of the British authorities towards him, yet still here was a native successor appointed, and present at Mooltan. Moolraj's resolution to resign might have been staggered at the prospect of all the form of native official torture being put in force against him by the ingenuity and self-interest of his rival, and even he might see his power of appeal to the generosity of Mr. Agnew or the Resident as very much limited by the presence and advice of a man whose interest he could not conciliate, and whose sagacity he could not dupe. This last trial may have been too much for Moolraj, and it is possible may have thrown him into the hands of the more violent party, whose every thing was at stake; who measured the extent of the national strength by their pride and ignorance, and saw pleasure, profit, and the duty to the Chalsa in firing, at Mooltan, a train that should shake the existing influence of British councils in the Punjab to its base.

Allowing, however, full weight to Mr. Lawrence's evidence, and to the character of Moolraj, we must repeat that the balance of probability is against Moolraj's procuring by any overt act the attack to be committed on Mr. Agnew.

We now arrive at a period when motives and acts are no longer involved in inscrutable secrecy. The two officers had been severely wounded-it might be mortally. Rungram, in an attempt to lead Moolraj (they are cousins by marriage) to exculpate himself with Mr. Agnew, had been wounded. had returned to his palace in the Am Khass, and Toolseeram, one of his head clerks, had been deputed to carry a letter of condolence, excuse, and advice to the officers. It was now noon. The troops were in a state of excitement in front of the Am Khass. Matchlocks were fired at some messengers sent by Mr. Agnew to Moolraj, and they were warned away, Rungram sending word to them that he himself had been wounded in the attempt to get to the Eedgah. Inside the palace of Moolraj a general assembly of chiefs took place. It was a war council. Toolseeram, the man selected as messenger by Moolraj, as above stated, and who is one of the men selected by the prisoner's advocate out of the witnesses summoned for the defence to give evidence in this case, describes the proceedings of this council on his admission to it, after his return from his mission:—"At that time the Pathans were sealing the Coran, some five or seven paces off — Moolraj and the Sikhs the Grunth. The Sikhs were fastening a Kungna* or bracelet on Moolraj's wrist.'

On the evening and night of the 19th, the camels, bullocks, and an elephant, which had gone out to graze and water, were carried off. The means of obtaining supplies for horses and men among the Lahore party were cut off, and when the troops with Mr. Agnew were offered, next day, money as an encouragement to fight, they asked instead something for themselves and horses to eat. At 7 A.M. on the 20th, purwanalis were prepared at the council of the Am Khass as proclamations to the people in the name of Moolraj to excite the country to a general rise. In the council, the expediency of removing the families and valuables into the fort from the Am Khass before an open war commenced, was decided and acted on. Then messengers were received in council from Mr. Agnew, who, as a last appeal to the loyalty of the insurgents, brought purwanahs or letters of instruction to the Mooltan authorities, issued by the Lahore Council to Mr. Agnew and Khan Sing, about the delivery of the fort and command of the troops. The messendelivery of the fort and command of the troops. The messengers received presents. At eight o'clock the guns of the fort and Am Khass commenced firing, those from the latter cantonment being placed upon an Awa, or high mound, which lies between the Am Khass and Eedgah. The number of large pieces served from both the fort and mound is named at 19. There were besides 20 zumbooruks or camel guns. The firing continued throughout the day. The execution was but trifling. One sowar had his leg broken by a cannon-shot. The solid masoury of the walls and roof of the mosque of the Eedgah rendered the position tenable. But the preparations made for the defence of the Eedgah were nullified by the artillerymen, after firing one round from the six guns, refusing to serve the guns. General disfrom the six guns, refusing to serve the guns. G affection now began to stare Mr. Agnew in the face. faithful of the detachment, Kurrum Illahie, saw that the whole body of officers and men had been corrupted. In the end the sowars went over to Moolraj's side, and then the foot followed. In the mean time, however, at 4 r.m., about two or three hours before the final desertion of Mr. Agnew, a party was sent by that officer to plead for mercy at Moolraj's palace. This party was admitted into the Am Khass, and were detained in conference till late. In the end it was agreed that the officers were to quit the country, and that the attack upon them was to cease. The artillerymen were in consequence directed by messengers sent to their battery to cease firing, but only one gun stopped. While the matter was in hand at the mound, the troops and people saw that the corruption and desertion were complete, and that the Eedgah was without any protection. As the sun was going down, a general assault took place. Men in tens from all sides, under cover of the batteries of the Awa and fort, Men in tens it may be said,—but no cover was needed, the cannonade and corruption having left the Eedgah deserted,—burst in. The supplication for quarter was unheeded. Mr. Agnew, so is the general belief, appears to have been singled out by a Sikh sweeper, who hacked him with a sword and cut off his head. Lieut. Anderson was despatched at the same time. At the time of the attack, the place was deserted by every one but Khan Sing, the servants and office people, and Kurrum Illahie, with a small band of sowars, about 30 persons in all. The head of Mr. Agnew was subsequently taken to the Am Khass.

The series of circumstances now detailed occurred subsequently to the taking of the oath and the binding of the war bracelet on Moolraj's wrist. The act of receiving the war bracelet precedes, if it does not originate, the series of circumstances ending in a period being put to the sufferings of the wounded men by death. Moolraj at this time, which may be said to run through thirty hours, from noon of the 19th to sunset of the 20th, was an unwilling instrument in the hands of his officers and soldiers, according to the evidence of Toolseeram. He is called a prisoner; but it is important to recall to recollection the simple metaphor by which this witness attempted to explain the character of the duresse upon Moolraj—"The child does not go to school, they drive him." When the character of the duresse upon a man is of the same species as that put upon a boy going to school—"they drive him," and the events narrated above occur before and around him; when that man is a governor of a large country, of notorious wealth, who had sustained a siege of his fort for months against the most powerful army in the East, there can be no doubt that Moolraj is in reason and law responsible for the array of armed force that caused the death of the two British officers. He displayed no act of succour, advice, or sympathy (unless, for the sake of argument, the receipt of the mission, which was to lead to no end, is reserved from that broad position) during more than four and twenty hours after the officers were lying helpless. But how could a chief with the bracelet on his arm apostatize from his own professions, and extend succour to the hungry and dying men, when his very family was moving into the fort from his palace in the Am Khass for security, and for the effectual prosecution of destructive measures?

We must now turn to other evidence on the conduct of Moolraj at this time. After giving every consideration to the circumstances affecting the credibility of Sadik Mahummud, as urged by the advocate for the defence, the Court have come to the conclusion that it is clear and substantially trustworthy. He was an officer doing duty at Mooltan under orders from Lahore. He was only under Moolraj. Neither can the Court refuse to give credit to the substance of Cazie Ghulam Hussain and Illahie Bux's depositions about the mission to Moolraj on the afternoon of the 20th. These three statements do furnish such a probable account of Moolraj's proceedings and position, and also of his conversation, in respect to his feelings, treatment, and policy, that they stamp the events of the last thirty hours at done with Moolraj's express countenance and authority, or in the legitimate and professional pursuance of such authority.

From the evidence of the above witnesses, and from the general probabilities of the case, the attack at the fort seems to have been regarded by Moolraj as hopelessly compromising him with the British authorities. Taking his position as it stood at noon on the 19th April, he seems, on a deliberate calculation of chances, to have come to the conclusion that in the then state of affairs, he had more to hope from the fears of the English than from their mercy. He headed an armed movement as his best policy; and the death of the officers was completed in due pursuance of his hostile proceedings. He yields to the circumstances of his case, and draws new vigour and determination from his isolated Having once taken the war bracelet, and schooled his mind to the stern necessities of the case, all his acts show that he looked upon the matter in hand as to be fought out. It was his business, as head of the movement, to strike awe in his opponents, and to embarrass them to the utmost. In this view of the case, the corruption of the Lahore force, by orders and promises issuing from Moolraj's own mouth during the last thirty hours preceding the death of the officers, is a matter bearing comparatively little upon the case. As governor of the country, he had filled in a full measure of criminality when he sanctioned or directed the employment of an armed force and of a cannonade against two innocent men. The array of armed force involves the intention of using all available means and occasions for securing success.

It is necessary here to read again parts of the evidence of Sadik Muhummud, Cazee Ghulaum Hussain, and Illahie Bux.

And now in respect to the law of this case. In a political commission like the present, the Court is not directed certainly to take the law of England for its guide, but, looking to that law as the fountain from which the rules of the strictest justice and soundest policy can be drawn, we now refer to the law of that code on the subject of compulsion, or what is legally called du-"Therefore in time of war or rebellion, a man resse per minas. may be justified in doing many treasonable acts by compulsion of the enemy or rebels, which would admit of no excuse in the time of peace. This, however, seems only, or at least principally, to hold as to positive crimes so created by the law of society, and which therefore society may excuse, but not as to natural offences so declared by the law of God, wherein human magistrates are only the executioners of divine punishment-and therefore, though a man be violently assaulted, and hath no other possible means of escaping death but by killing an innocent, this fear and force shall not acquit him of murder, for he ought rather to die himself than escape by the murder of an innocent; * and so completely is this principle adopted in the law of England, that in the case of crimes which are mala in se and prohibited by the law of nature, as murder and the like, a woman who is guilty of the same by the coercion of her husband, or even in his company, which the law construes a coercion, is without excuse, because those crimes are so odious and dangerous to society.

How forcibly does this view of the duty of a member of civil society to his fellow-creatures under circumstances of duresse apply to the case of Moolraj! By what right, human or divine, was he to escape from his own uncertain loss or even peril through the path of the certain murder of other helpless innocent fellow-creatures? There would be no security to society, if men of sound mind were rendered irresponsible for acts of violence towards the life of another by the excuse of moral or physical compulsion. It was Moolraj's duty to do as he would be done by, in the circumstances in which he was placed, and to have refused to countenance whatever his conscience warned him was an act of wickedness.

It has with much feeling and force been urged upon the Court by the advocate for the prisoner that the exposed condition of the female members of the family was a fearful tie upon Moolraj, and that we should not wonder at Moolraj's hesitation to do any act that might abandon them to the ill usage of his disappointed followers. But the innocent men lying in the Eedgah had as much at stake as the chief of Mooltan. They had fortune, domestic ties, public character, and life, lying at the mercy of the troops whose hostility was to be animated and directed by the spirit-stirring ceremony of accepting the war bracelet. In the solemn words of Blackstone, "he ought rather to die himself than escape by the murder of an innocent man."

The essential part of the above argument having been deduced from the facts detailed in the deposition of Sadik Mohummud, Illahie Bux, and Cazee Ghulaum Hussain, in corroboration and amplification of the statement of Toolseram, the witness for the defence, the Court deem it satisfactory that the advocate for the defence avows that the evidence of Illahie Bux is honest, and that that of Ghulaum Hussain, though coloured unfavourably to the prisoner, is in general credible. The imputation on Sadik Mohummud, who, to the Court, appeared a trustworthy and valuable witness, that he had changed sides during the Mooltan troubles, is not of itself sufficient to impeach his veracity.

With reference to the position taken by the Court, that no compulsion was exercised upon Moolraj beyond the fear of a quarrel with some of his troops in the event of his refusing to join in a crusade against the English party, a detailed inquiry into the events after their murder is scarcely needed. Moolraj having, in the view of the Court, joined in and headed the armed movement on prudential calculation, would naturally, from policy alone, countenance any further proceedings that would tend to strengthen his popularity and stimulate public The Court can see no reason to disbelieve that the man who suffered death at Mooltan for the murder of Mr. Agnew, by the judgment of the special military commission, did present the head of that officer to Moolraj, and receive a horse and a pistol in return, money being distributed to the party at the same time. Such a proceeding was neither inconsistent nor unnatural in Moolraj's position as head of the outbreak. But the proof of the fact seems to follow from the finding of the Military Commission. The indignities to which the head was subjected do not in the evidence before this Court appear to have been inflicted by Moolraj; but that the head was exposed to indignity by the people at the Am Khass cannot be disbelieved. Moolraj's sanction was doubtless assumed, or if not assumed, it was not wanted by a low rabble of the cantonment and suburbs. In the same way the character which Moolraj had assumed would authorize the men who presented the head at the Am Khass to throw it in the lap of Khan Singh in his prison. The license that could not have been refused, would, if granted, be readily granted.

The malignity of the rabble doubtless required to be gratified, but Moolraj does not appear in a malignant light, except when pursuing a line of conduct necessary to execute his policy.

In the same way the Court draw no special inference unfavourable to Moolraj's innocence of the first attack upon the bridge, from his undoubtedly permitting the notorious assassin of Mr. Agnew to roam about uncalled to account. The man assumed the character of a saint, and it was Moolraj's policy, after the events of the 20th of April, to enlist the popular and religious enthusiasm of the people in his resistance to the English interest, and whether Moolraj felt grateful or not to the man for the new turn thus given to his fortunes, it was but prudent to countenance and favour any claimant to the title of saviour of the country. Moolraj's countenance of the man after the 20th of April might have been a link in the chain of evidence connecting the ex-dewan with the plot for the first attack. But when he is freed from this suspicion, it throws no perfect light on the events of the thirty hours of the two officers' existence.

The Court, in forming its judgment, have borne most carefully in mind all the points brought forward in the addresses of the prosecutor and the advocate of the prisoner, but it is inconvenient and unnecessary to notice the value allowed to each. Generally, the Court observe, in respect to one of the arguments for the defence, that allowance must be made for variations of a subordinate character between statements made by parties in the Court and out of it. For instance, the statement of Kootub Shah, one of the witnesses for the prosecution, taken before the Resident in 1848, or by his orders, may but fairly be read as that of an eye-witness and reporter. All that came within the direct knowledge of the witness was wanted to be detailed, but that exact reference to what he had seen with his own eyes, or only heard from others, which would be necessary in formal proceed ings before this Court, would not be thought of probably in a statement made for diplomatic purposes. The Court have themselves felt much embarrassment from the general character of some of the former depositions. In this way they see nothing in the character of the variations of Kootub Shah to affect his general credibility, neither do they exclude the consideration from dealing with the evidence of the defence.

With regard to the paucity of evidence examined before the Court, which is observed upon by the prisoner's advocate, the Court remark that there can be no eye-witness of the events inside the palace of Moolraj during the most important proceedings of the last thirty hours, except Moolraj's own officers, and deserters from Mr. Agnew's force. Sadik Muhummed may be called one of the former class. Khunjur Sing is one of the latter. The statement made by Khunjur Sing, that he was induced to make exaggerated statements at Mooltan before the English Mooltanies, by Wuzeer Ali's instigation, when viewed in connection with the remarks of the defence, explains at once much of the cause of the paucity of witnesses produced in elucidation of Moolraj's conduct in the interior of his council. Both sides evidently deemed it best to produce only those witnesses who had not committed themselves; and in this way the advo-cate for the defence, though pressed by the Court to call up and examine two of the witnesses for the defence who had been examined at Mooltan, objected to call them in justice to the prisoner's interest, so that the elucidation of the credibility of their Mooltan statements was placed beyond the option of the Court.

The arguments of the advocate for the defence in regard to the quality of the crime committed by Moolraj, if homicide really took place, do not affect the present indictment. The crimes which especially affect the king, the father and representative of his people, in a monarch or the ruling powers, whatever may be its character in other forms of government, are especially within the authority of the chief powers in the state to presecute or pass by. But murder is an offence which in a peculiar manner affects and injures individuals or private members of civil society. It is impossible, too, it can be committed without a violation of the law of nature—of the moral as well as political rules of right. Therefore the relations of a murdered man, and the security of civil society, may solemnly appeal to the existing government of a country to bring to exemplary punishment the individual who has transgressed the laws of God and man and the dictates of conscience, in wilfully procuring the death of a fellow-creature. The offence of homicide is still homicide, whatever colouring the imagination of Moolraj's friends may give to the Mooltan movement. It may be treason, and yet homicide of a treacherous and unrelenting character, committed by a body of men with Mool-raj as their leader. The wrong done to the relatives and to so-

We have read Mr. Bowring's speeches with almost a wish to find something in them to convince us that we had underrated the weight of the evidence on which the prisoner was condemned. But we must confess that a careful and unbiassed perusal has done nothing to dissipate the impression which Capt. Hamilton's powerful defence produced on our mind, namely, that Moolraj, from the day on which Sir Frederick Currie despatched Messrs. Agnew and Anderson to Mooltan, to the mo-ment of his conviction, was emphatically "the victim of circumstances."—Hurkaru.

Of his guilt there must exist in the minds of most men a serious and settled doubt. As for the native evidence that was brought against him, it would indeed be hard to take away the man's life upon that. Any one, who knows anything of natives, knows full well that they would swear to any statement which was likely to lead to their advancement, or was agreeable to their We all know that, in questions of guilty or not guilty, the British judge is compelled to consult probability, and in very few instances do cases depend on what is recorded from the mouth of the witness. Now what are the probabilities in the case of Moolraj? Let us take his wealth, his position, and all the honour of his family, on the one hand, and all these were dear to him; and his object in being the murderer, or the insti-gator of the murder, of Messrs. Vans Agnew and Anderson. Could Moolraj have hoped for impunity? Could he have imagined that he would be equal to baffle the British power after the commission of such a crime, and evade punishment? To suppose this would be repugnant to common sense. Since hearing the evidence of Mr. John Lawrence, we are disposed to think that Moolraj was, indeed, a "victim of circumstances;" that he was powerless to arrest the turbulent spirit of his soldiery, or control their awakened passions. Had Moolraj insulted Mr. Vans Agnew, and had Mr. Vans Agnew's followers killed the Dewan upon the spot, could Mr. Vans Agnew have stood charged with being a party to the Dewan's destruction? It is not only possible, but probable, that Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieut. Anderson were assailed without the Dewan's concurrence, although his feelings may have been wounded, and anger stamped on his countenance. As for "the sign" which Moolraj is said to have given, the idea is ridiculous—utterly absurd. Had Moolraj given any sign, our unfortunate countrymen would not have been allowed to quit the fort alive. They would have been surrounded and murdered on the spot. Moolraj's secrecy, which he urged upon Mr. Lawrence, was evidently grounded on a knowledge of his own weakness compared with the passions and the power of his people. He evidently wanted to keep the fact of his resignation from his people; and what do our authorities? They send a successor to the Dewan, and parade him suddenly before the eyes of the Dewan's people. What the surmises of those people may have been, it is impossible to conjecture; but we are not surprised at an outbreak. All the Modrajes in the world could not stop the blood of uncivilized adherents from kindling into wrath, on such short notice. They saw their popular leader, the son of Sawun Mull, about to be ignominiously turned out of the fort, where himself and his father had so long reigned, with almost independent sway, and a stranger about to be installed in his stead!-Mofussilite.

POLICE INVESTIGATION.

The inefficiency and misdoings of the police have long formed a subject of public scandal; Government was at length compelled to take the subject up by the clamour of the press. commission was appointed to receive complaints: they sat for a fortnight with open doors, and all the evidence laid before them has been published. From this it appears that the heads of almost every department in the estublishment have become so deeply involved to natives within their jurisdiction, as to be open to the gravest imputations. The chief magistrate exercised no supervision or control over the others, nor kept any separate records. Government property was sold to the chief creditor of the members of the establishment at half the price offered for it by others. The cash thus received was thrown into a box, into which were thrust all varieties of property which fell into the hands of the police,-money, watches, jewels, specie, &c. No one knew who kept the key; no account was kept of the goods, and a very small proportion of them seem ever to have been accounted for. The price of the property just referred to was received in 1846,—up to the present time it has not been accounted for: tenders made four years since by intending purchasers of police property still remain unopened.

Warrants were issued by the chief magistrate, and remained for years unserved. One influential native employé was known to keep an extensive gambling establishment, where gambling was at all hours of the day seen by the police to be in progress, no one interfering. Crimes of all kinds were hushed up and compounded for, and the whole of the subordinates seem to have been in the last degree corrupt. Such has been the system prevailing for years in the commercial capital of Bengal, under the very nose of Government. Is it to be wondered at, that belief in the corruption of the provincial police and police courts should be almost universal? The senior magistrate of police is generally selected from the civil service,—the appointment is worth £2,500 a year. The junior magistrates are sometimes officers in the army, sometimes lawyers,—but that rarely,—most frequently some friend, protegé, or dependent of some man of influence, whose qualifications have never been tested, or in all likelihood thought of, and who has had no previous training or experience, his chief recommendation probably being that he is encumbered, and needs the appointment. In India we have no public meetings, no popular assembly, and no means of making grievances known but through the press, and our rulers occasionally make it matter of boast in their official letters that they never see the newspapers .- Bombay Times, Sept. 1.

STEAM NAVIGATION.

THE India General Steam Navigation Company held their halfyearly meeting on Thursday, when no fewer than thirty-six shareholders were present. The assemblage of so large a number, without any stimulant of party spirit, or alleged misconduct or fraud, is an event in the history of metropolitan associations. The company has been unfortunate during the last six months. The steamers have earned a loss of more than twenty thousand rupees. and, unfortunately, from a cause which appears to be permanent, and will be equally felt during the first six months of succeeding years. The shallowness of the Ganges above Rajmahl subjects the vessels to ruinous detention; they are often high and dry for weeks together, and the voyages are, therefore, attended with loss. These six months of dearth swallow up the profits of the six months of plenty. The directors have taken steps by which they hope to avoid the recurrence of these disappointments, which must so seriously affect the permanent prospects of the company; they have ordered vessels of smaller draft from England. They expect also to obtain coal at the upper stations at one half the sum they now pay. On the success of these expectations depends the realisation of those glowing prospects which one of the Directors, Mr. Judge, delights to indulge in. He informed the meeting that he "hoped to see the day when the company would show a profit of twelve per cent. upon its capital." We cherish precisely the same hopes, though, being a mere disinterested spectator of events, they are tempered by the remembrance of those numerous instances in which hopes equally brilliant have proved futile. We do not think, however, that the company have taken the most effectual means for the realisation of these wishes by embarking their capital in the expensive and uncertain game of law. The former managing director, Mr. Alexander Mackenzie, when he was obliged reluctantly to quit the management of the company, brought forward a heavy claim against the directors, which was submitted to arbitration. The arbitrators awarded Rs. 13,651 to Mr. Mackenzie, and Rs. 3.100 to themselves as costs. The Directors refused to abide by the award of the arbitrators whom they had combined in choosing, and the case was sent up to the Supreme Court. The Court upheld the award, and the Directors were saddled with additional costs to the amount of Rs. 2,000; in all, Rs. 17,051. We gather from the Report of the Directors that the award rather exceeded the demand of Mr. Mackenzie; the shareholders will, therefore, perceive that it would have been more for their interests if the executive body had honoured the divine injunction of agreeing "with an adversary whilst thou art in the way with But it seems that they are less disposed to agree with him, since his claims have received a double sanction, than they were before; for they have determined to resist not only the award, but the Court's confirmation of it. They have taken the advice of counsel about the propriety of appealing the case to the Privy Council! With exemplary professional disinterestedness, their legal adviser has dissuaded them from it, considering that the award could not be overthrown, upon technical grounds. So the meeting have adopted the strange determination, which was proposed to them by a very pugnacious lawyer, of resisting the payment of the amount awarded to Mr. Mackenzie by the Supreme Court, whether he seek to enforce it by attachment or by action. Of course every one will perceive that this resolution was dictated by a feeling of intense animosity towards poor Mr. Mackenzie, but every one will not be able to comprehend the mysterious reason which led so many of the wise men of the East to exhibit that animosity by an act which must concentrate the universal sympathy of the public upon its victim. The proposal of the bellicose lawyer was opposed by the good sense of a brave old soldier, Major Anderson, who remarked that "he did not understand the technicalities of the case; but he saw that the arbitrators had awarded the amount; he saw that a court of law had supported the award, and he, therefore, thought it would be better to pay without any further resistance." Strange to say, this judicious advice was rejected by twenty-five Englishmen, who were present, and was supported only by eleven. So the company, after having submitted the case to arbitration, and subsequently submitted the arbitration to the decision of the highest court in the country, have adopted the very undignified resolution of resisting both the arbitration and the court; and have refused to pay Mr. Mackenzie, in order that they may bring the matter a third time under litigation. Such is the universal and hereditary respect of Englishmen for an award of arbitration, as an honourable termination of all differences, that we believe there are none of our own countrymen-the shareholders of the company excepted-who would not be gratified to find the company was foiled a third time. This determination of the meeting is deeply to be regretted. The strongest argument we have been able to use in reproving the litigiousness of the natives has been to contrast it with the Saxon common sense of our countrymen, who would rather submit to a loss than incur the expense and the risk and the "botheration" of a law suit. That argument has now lost its "shine." what show of reason can we urge conciliation upon the natives, when they can point to the conduct of a public body who have resisted an award of arbitration and rejected the confirmation of it by the highest Court of Law in the country, -who, not content with the loss of Rs. 23,000 on their corporate enterprize, in six months, and Rs. 17,000 in a dispute with the former manager, are now determined to stake a further sum in another law suit ?-Friend of India.

THE BENARES BANK.

The information which we have very recently received from Benares, from impartial spectators, induces us to think, that in the first burst of indignation occasioned by the announcement that the Benares Bank had failed, the conduct of the directors has been unjustly confounded with that of the Union Bank conclave; and that the delinquencies of the one are of a totally different character from those of the other. We deem it our duty to lay the statements we have received before our readers, to assist in correcting the judgment of those who may be desirous of ascertaining the real truth.

Dr. Edlin's crimination of Capt. Fagan as a "liar and a cheat," he unequivocally withdrew during the court-martial. We have a manuscript report of it now before us, the accuracy of which is unquestionable, and we find from it that Dr. Edlin stated, that "there were some things about the bank which still required explanation, and many things were done which he disapproved. He still thought that Capt. Fagan, in his correspondence with him, did not tell him the truth and the whole truth, but he had come to the conclusion that he told him what at the time he believed to be true." We may, therefore, at once dismiss the accusation as groundle-s. Dr. Edlin has been a heavy loser by his confidence in the Benares Bank, and justice requires that some allowance should be made for the acceptity of his feelings, but he never made a greater mistake in his life—the purchasing of Benares Bank shares excepted—than when he declined recalling the accusation as soon as it was made.

The downfal of the Benares Bank is manifestly owing to the confidence which the credulous directors placed in the George Hudson of Benares. They believed the resources of his commercial head and of his purse to be equally inexhaustible. He was, therefore, trusted with all the funds for employment in whatever enterprises appeared to him most likely to pay, and they have not paid. We have the assurance that Capt. Fagan had no interest whatever in any of the undertakings in which Col. Pew embarked the capital of the bank. The other directors were probably equally without interest in them. Their error was, therefore, an error of jud ment. They did not, like the illustrious directors of the Union Bank, appropriate the funds to their own rotton establishments, and it would, therefore, be unjust to involve both in one common condemnation.

In regard to the cancelling of the shares, which appeared to us to be the most heinous of their transgressions, we are informed by those whose judgment is impartial, and may be equitable, that while they do not exculpate the directors from gross indiscretion, they acquit them altegether of the heavier charge of fraud. The error lay more in allowing these fictitious shares to be created, than in cancelling them. Those who took shares for which they paid nothing - if we have been correctly informed - obtained scrip which was negotiable, while the value of the shares was placed as a debt bearing high interest in their account. Such proceedings cannot be too severely censured; and they could end only in the ruin of the shareholders and of the This was the original and fatal fault of the The cancelling of these shares, inflicted injustice bank. on others; but we have been assured from sources of unquestionable authenticity, that the directors were not aware of the injustice they committed, or of the extent of it. This proves how utterly unfit they were for a seat in the direction of a bank, but it removes the necessity of a free passage to Norfolk Island. In a circular sent to the shareholders a month before the half-yearly meeting, they were congratulated on the measure of having so many unpaid shares called in. The directors spoke as if they were conscious of having done that which was praiseworthy. No men conscious of wrong would have sent forth that circular. At the half-yearly meeting the measure might have been either confirmed or cancelled. It was confirmed. They cancelled the shares of others at the same time that they cancelled their own; and they cancelled more of their own shares than of any others, because they had the largest amount of unpaid shares. Under these circumstances, though the directors have justly laid themselves open to the charge of having acted indiscreetly, and anything but disinterestedly, in obtaining shares for which they had paid nothing, we are strongly inclined to think that they are not chargeable with any thing that can be said to look like fraud in having cancelled them .- Friend of India.

INDIAN SOCIETY.

The presidencies in India are in one respect like so many country towns. The character and affairs of everybody are no secrets: and, considering how small is the society, after all (though it is scattered far and wide), and how very little, except mere gossip, people manage to talk about it, it is by no means wonderful that such is the case. Let Sir Charles Napier open the army list, and take the name of the first subaltern that meets his eye, and let him ask the first military man he meets if he knows him, and what sort of a person he is. Knows him? Yes ! knows when he came out, how much he is in debt, and to what bank, and who are his sureties. Knows where he served, whebank, and who are his sureties. Knows where he served, whether with distinction or otherwise; knows whom he married, how many children he has got—whether the wife is at home or in this country. Knows everything about him—even unto the songs that he may sing. Some people, by study, have Burke or Debrett at their fingers' ends; others are walking calendars or law-lists; but as far as the Indian army or the Civil Service is concerned, everybody, he instinct as it were, has the same kind of knowledge; and it is by instinct as it were, has the same kind of knowledge; and it is usually displayed with all that pride with which men of profound learning sometimes deliver themselves of the brain's repositories. There is no occasion, therefore, for Sir Charles Napier to ask for private and confidential reports on matters so notorious; and Sir Charles is too much of an utilitarian to think of doing anything without some definite object.

Let us conclude with something practical. Let us suppose the Commander-in-Chief should ask some notorious gambler, in command of a regiment, what was his private and confidential opinion of the officers under him. Why, the most meritorious person in his eyes would be the subaltern who, after receiving his pay, has no objection to go to his quarters —take a hand at cards—and lose and pay his ten or fifteen gold mohurs "like a man." He would not recommend him probably for staff employ; but he would not hesitate to speak of him as "a perfect treasure in his regiment "-"one of the most promising regimental officers in all India." And let us suppose the chief asking some colonel of conspicuously disgusting repute what is his private and confidential opinion of his officers. Would he not naturally say of the youth who accompanied him to witness the Hooley Nautch, and who was in ecstasies on beholding the performance of that ancient rite—"this is the young man for my money?"—and would he not also, naturally, put in a strong word against those "squeamishly moral, married officers," who insubordinately refused to comply with an order to attend, and who declined to accede to a request? In precisely the same sort of way would the sinner, the saint, the prodigal, the thrifty, the moral, the libertine, respectively be governed in his confidential estimate of the body of officers under his command. -Mofussilite, July 28.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BOMBAY EXPRESS, with news from England to July 7, reached Calcutta Aug. 14.

H. M.'s 87th Regt.-Three hundred men of H. M.'s 87th have been cantoned at Chinsurah, awaiting arrangements for their departure to the Punjab. The officers who accompanied the regiment have presented a letter of thanks to Capt. Pixley, of the Essex, the transport in which they have arrived.

Col. Gowan, c.B. has assumed the command of the horse artillery at Meerut.

THE I. G. S. N. Co.s' steamer Sir F. Currie has made a voyage from Calcutta to Allahabad in thirteen days and four hours; one of the shortest trips ever made on the Ganges.

Union Bank Salk .- At the recent sale of the assets of the Union Bank, fourteen debts due from the firm of Messrs. Carr. Tagore, and Co. were put up to auction. Of these, twelve, amounting to Rs. 2,34,687 were withdrawn, but two others, amounting to Rs. 49,000, were sold for Rs. 4,310.

COTTON CLEANING.—A report of a committee appointed by the Agri-Horticultural Society of Bengal, "to consider the proposed prize for an improved cotton-cleaning machine, unrestricted to any particular mechanical principle; and the suggestion that the society should procure drawings and models of agricultural machines," proposes that Government should be solicited to offer a high pecuniary reward, to be given, in conjunction with the society's gold medal, to the inventor of a suitable implement. It is remarked that the native churka is so cheap and simple in construction, as scarcely to admit of improvement; and therefore it is recommended that neither the condition of small cost, nor that of adherence to any specified form or principle of construction, should be imposed on competitors. It is intended to be made imperative, however, that the machine shall be suited for the cleaning of the short-stapled cotton of India. The 1st of March, 1852, is to be the date on which the trial of the machines sent in shall take place. A separate prize, consisting of a silver medal and Rs. 250, is also proposed to be offered, for an efficient thrashing-machine, "adapted to free either kupas or cotton of the indigenous kinds, from dirt and trash." In determining the merits of In determining the merits of this invention, the same rules are to be applied as those proposed in regard to the cotton-cleaning machine. In addition to the above recommendations, the committee suggest that lists and drawings of agricultural machines should be procured from England, and also that models should be obtained of such implements as are likely to be applicable to Indian cultivation."

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PUNJAB -We hear that the Governor-General has sanctioned the outlay of five lacs of rupees annually for the extension of canal irrigation, and for the making of roads and the construction of other public works in the Punjab. Such a measure is entitled to the highest praise. It will not only give employment to vast numbers of the people, but show them we are in earnest when we promise them better things under British rule than they have of late been accustomed to.-Mofussilite, Šimla. - The first ball of the Marchioness of Dalhousie, which was given at Simla on the 3rd inst., was kept up to a late hour, and "went off much to the satisfaction of all present." The second ball is to take place on the 17th of August, and if as good as the first, will add much to the improved feeling engendered by that party.—The hoped for batta, and expected relief, were the chief subjects of conversation at Simla. It was believed that the Governor-General and Lady Dalhousie would vist Mussooree before the end of the season, and that her ladyship would thence move to Saharanpore, Delhi, or Meerut, for winter quarters, while the marquess would proceed on to Umballa, and thence into the Punjab. There is an air of probability about these reported arrangements, which induces us to believe they may take place. The popularity of Sir Charles Napier is on the increase in certain quarters, in consequence of his expressed determination to put down gambling. To do this effectually he must find some fixed occupation for those whose habitual idleness generally leads them to indulge in that particular vice. is affirmed that the medical attendants of his Exc. have strongly recommended his not moving to the plains before next November. Mr. Thompson has, we are informed, intimated his intention of passing the next hot season at Simla, and has rented the house of Capt. Pengree, now in the occupation of the Marquess of Dalhousie. — Delhi Gaz. Aug. 15.

MR. LABPENT.—The Hurkaru, August 13, thus notices the fact of Mr. A. J. Larpent being chairman of the grand jury:—
"A. Larpent, esq., foreman!!! We need not risk the threat of "A. Larpent, esq., foreman!!! an action for libel by going out of our way to describe who A. Larpent, esq. was and is. There is not a man, woman, or child in India, capable of reading a newspaper, who does not know as much about him as we do; and there are too many who have such reasons to remember his claims to celebrity as happily we have not. Well! here is A. Larpent, esq.: Albert John de Hochepied Larpent, esq. of the late firm of Cockerell and Co., a director of the late Union Bank, and a member of its Finance Committee—here is this same Mr. Larpent foreman of the grand jury of Calcutta in the month of August A.D. 18491 Twenty-two respectable gentlemen, or the majority of them, instead of protesting against being compelled to sit in the same box and the same room with him, have actually chosen him as their chief. We will make no further comment on the fact, which, perhaps, is nothing so wonderful after all-for Calcutta; and we have noticed it merely to protect ourselves from that obloquy and ridicule which our contemporaries in other parts of India would heap on their brethren here should they find that a matter which to them must appear so deserving of severe animadversion, had been passed over by the local press without a word." Mr. Larpent has written an angry letter to the editor of the Hurkaru, imputing to him a desire to "trample on a fallen man," and adding, "It is not my intention to enter upon any justification, for I am unaware that any is needed; but I wish simply to remark, that I was not a director of the Union Bank at the period of its stoppage, nor had I been so for two years previously; and further as regards my connection with the late firm of Cockerell & Co., that it was competent to any parties, who had a right to complain of my proceedings in that capacity, to have appeared before the proper tribunal, viz. the Insolvent Court, and then taken such measures as might have appeared necessary to them. Having, however, passed the ordeal of that court without the slightest imputation upon my character, I confidently leave it to the sense of the community to decide, if you, or any other journalist, is justified in the line you have thought fit to adopt."

MUTINY IN THE 1ST SIKH CORPS.—The Mofussilite informs us that Major Hodgson and his adjutant have been summoned to Hoshearpore, to be present at a Court of Inquiry instituted to inquire into the alleged mutiny in the 1st Sikh corps under the command of that officer. In common with the Mofussilite, we received intelligence of the conspiracy in the regiment, and pub-lished it, upon which the Delhi Gazette asserted the whole story was entirely imaginary, and set afoat for interested purposes by some individuals in the north-west.—Friend of India.

CASTE. - In most of the old mission stations of southern India, caste has been kept up among the converts to Christianity. This has led to a great amount of evil—evil which now presses so heavily on the prosperity of the various bodies of Christians, that all the missionary societies, with but one exception, are re-solved to get rid of it. We hope that a usage so repugnant to the spirit and genius of Christianity, will not long be permitted to disfigure it. - Calcutta Christian Advocate.

THE FIRST DIVISION OF H.M.'s 87TH, consisting of about 460 men, under orders for Allahabad, left the fort this morning; but after waiting at Prinsep's Ghaut till nearly 8 o'clock, it had to march in again, because the government boats were not ready to receive it, none of the baggage or stores being on board. division is to try its luck again this evening .- Hurkaru, Aug. 21.

THE GAMBLING CASE. - The Mofussilite states that a court of inquiry is now sitting at Lahore upon the dispute between Major Cooke and Capt. DaCosta, in the late gambling transactions at

A Case involving somewhat serious consequences has lately been decided in the Supreme Court. A native of the name of Gholam Ahmed had executed a deed with a Hindoo lady, by which he bound himself to pay a certain sum of money, and a clause was, with the consent of both parties, inserted in the deed, to the effect that should any disagreement in the matter occur, both parties should go into the Supreme Court. To bring a native suit within the jurisdiction of that Court it is necessary that a European should be concerned in the transaction. For this purpose it is customary in Calcutta to employ the name of the crier of the Supreme Court, without his knowledge, and on the production of the suit he sues in conjunction with the plain-On Monday, however, Sir Lawrence Peel ruled that "as Hilder was not a contracting party to the instrument, and had nothing to do with it, there was no covenant with him to submit to the jurisdiction, and therefore nonsuited the plaintiff." This decision endangers a large amount of property in Calcutta, and would almost seem to require a special provision of the Legislative Council.—Friend of India.

A Case of some importance to shipowners was decided in Calcutta on the 8th August. Messrs. Malcolm and Co. contracted with the house of Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, and Co. for the freightage of 250 tons of rice at the rate of 41. 10s. The captain of the vessel afterwards discovered that per ton. he could only carry 150 tons, upon which Messrs. Malcolm and Co., after giving the captain a day's notice, shipped their rice in another vessel, and made a claim on Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, and Co. for the difference of freightage, amounting to ten shillings per ton. This claim the latter gentlemen resisted, on the ground that the remaining freight required ought to have been obtained through them, and that they could have obtained freight for less than 5l. per ton. Upon this Messrs. Malcolm and Co. brought the present action. The defence set up was that the defendants had made the contract only as agents for the captain and owners, who were in England, and that 5l. per ton was too high a price. The defence was however, overruled, as the Chief Justice considered that the agents were perfectly responsible, and that the contract was neither informal nor precipitate. Damages were decreed on the scale of 5l., but the defendants have permission to prove the freightage excessive .- Friend of India.

Centralization.—We are nearly tired of recapitulating instances of the absurd extent to which the system of Indian centralization is carried; but the following would be so laughable, but for the ill effects which accompany the system of which it forms a part, that we extract it:—"The district order issued on the 29th of May last, by Brevet Major J. Drummond, commanding in Kemaon, directing the commissariat to pay Rs. 1 8a. to each of three coolies, for the conveyance of accountements from Kaleedoongce to Almorah, is, with the sanction of the Honourable the President in Council, confirmed." The officer, whose order is here confirmed, is considered equal to the command of a district. Property and money to the value of thousands of rupees are committed to his charge, yet it is necessary for him to make three tedious references, a thousand miles distant from each other, and from him, before he can pay three coolies a week's hire. The six letters by which this reference must be made, are all of course "service," and the public pays a sum nearly equal to the charge itself, without reference to the expenditure of time, paper, and wax.—Friend of India-

MILITARY DIRECTORS OF THE BENARES BANK.—The following is the reply of the Commander-in-chief to a petition from a number of the native shareholders of the Benares Bank, who represented to his Excellency the conduct of certain military officers connected with the direction of that unfortunate establishment: "In reply, the Adjutant-general is desired to inform the complainants, that Sir Charles Napier does not consider this a case for his intervention, or one which at present calls for military inquiry, as the civil law provides a proper remedy for all breaches of trust or malversation in office in the affairs of such institutions. His Excellency, therefore, recommends that redress be sought in the civil court, where disclosures may be expected, as also on a military trial recently ordered, which will probably throw light on the whole matter, and enable the Commander in chief to decide on the steps which it may be expedient for his Excellency to take in reference to the officers in question." We trust that, if the case is taken into the civil courts, and the expected disclosures are elicited, Sir Charles will remember that military officers who have been guilty of unbecoming conduct are still amenable to another tribunal; and we hope that, if the share-holders of the Benares Bank, like those of the Union Bank, do not think it worth while to prosecute those whom they believed to have squandered their money, his Excellency will not thence conclude that the conduct of the officers referred to has been quite above all blame. - Hurkaru, July 31.

NATIVE PROCESSIONS.—The superintendent of police in Calcutta has made a bold attempt to abate the nuisance of native processions through the European part of the town, which are most disgusting and dangerous. The natives, who deem themselves aggrieved by this interference with their religious ceremonies, have instructed a lawyer to indict the superintendent in the Supreme Court for having prevented, with force and arms, the annual religious ceremonies of the natives.

India General Steam-Navigation Company. —A meeting of the shareholders of this company was held at Calcutta on the 16th July, but no business was transacted; the meeting being counted, it was found that the number of shareholders required by the deed were not present. The Star remarks, "this is the latest illustration Calcutta affords of the degree of attention her citizens pay to their own affairs, and the interest they take in them."

Dr. Durr has arrived at Calcutta in excellent health after his visit to the missionary stations in the Madras presidency.

SMALL CAUSE COURT.—The Calcuits journals mention that the proposed Small Cause Court Act is still under consideration, with a view to its passing Council. It is therefore probable that, notwithstanding the objections urged against it, and the unanimous disapproval of H. M.'s judges of the three presidencies, it will yet pass into law.

THE RANGE CHUNDA, in her flight from Benares, was preceded by one of her women, who walked out of her guarded residence in disguise, and was afterwards found wandering about in man's attire. The havildar and two sepoys, who were on sentry duty at the time, have been tried by courts-martial for having, through great neglect and carelessness, allowed this woman to escape from their custody. The Court sentenced the native officer to be reduced to the ranks, and imprisoned six The Commander-in-chief ordered a revision, because of the inadequacy of the punishment, and the Court then added to the reduction imprisonment with hard labour for a year. It recommended the offender to mercy, however, on the score of his former good character; and his Excellency was pleased to listen to the recommendation and to remit the labour. The schoys were sentenced to be dismissed from the service; but the Commander-in-chief considered this inadequate to their crime, and on revision they were condemned to imprisonment with hard labour for one year. This satisfied Sir Charles, who "approved and confirmed" the sentence, but remitted the hard labour, "for reasons," says he, "which I do not choose to make public."—Hurkaru, Aug. 7. This satisfied Sir Charles, who MILITARY RETURNS. - A correspondent of the Mofussilite has informed the editor, who distrusts the accuracy of his information, that Sir Charles Napier has issued instructions to officers in command of regiments to transmit to him secret and confidential reports of the characters of the officers under their com-We believe this to be a mistake, which has probably thus originated: a return has been forwarded to commanding officers, which they are required to fill in, and transmit to headquarters, in which the nature and length of the service performed by each officer, and his general qualifications, both as an officer and as a linguist, are to be exhibited. This return embraces, we have been told, a statement of the number of years and months passed by each officer in the performance of regimental duty with his corps, with local or irregular corps, on military staff employ, on civil employment, and on sick or private leave, the number of campaigns served, actions engaged in, wounds received, and honorary distinctions acquired; also of the languages each officer may have passed in. In another column the each officer may have passed in. In another column the Military qualifications of each officer are to be noted by an index figure, the figure 4 denoting that the officer is in the highest degree efficient, the figure 2 that he is in the second class, and the figure 0 that he is in the lowest, or least efficient class. Similar returns are to be furnished half-yearly, and are to pass through the prescribed channels of communication, namely, officers commanding stations and divisions; they are to be signed as examined by regimental Adjutants, in whose office duplicates will be lodged; and, as far as we have learned, it is by no means intended that these returns should be regarded as "private and confidential," or that officers should be debarred from knowing what index figure may have been placed against their names. They are called for, we believe, from a sincere and honest wish on the part of Sir Charles Napier to obtain the fullest and best information obtainable, without personal observation, as to the claims and fitness of officers for the various departments of the Staff, and of the public service generally.—Englishman.

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUT. ROBERT BRUCE NORTON, 35TH N.L.1.

Head-Quarters, Aug. 2, 1849.—At a general court martial, held at Barrackpore, on Monday, July 16, 1849, Lieut. R. B. Norton, 35th N.L.I. was arraigned on the following charges, viz.:—

1st. For having, at Barrackpore, on the night of April 9, 1849, when on duty as regimental officer of the day, absented himself from his quarters without leave, and without reporting the circumstance, and remained away all night and until the afternoon of the following day, having proceeded to Calcutta during this interval without permission, and in gross neglect of his duty.

2nd. For having failed to attend the parade of the regiment at Barrackpore, on the morning of April 10, 1849, at which it was his duty to have been present.

3rd. For having, at Barrackpore, on the morning of April 10, 1849, failed to furnish his report, which it was his duty to have done as relieved officer of the day; and for not having furnished the report till called on for an explanation of his neglect, by order of the commanding officer, on the evening of the same day.

4th. For having, at Barrackpore, on the evening of April 10, 1849, when furnishing the said report as relieved officer of the day, sent in with it a letter written and signed for him, and with his approval, by a brother-officer, addressed to the adjutant of the regiment, in which his absence from the morning parade on that day was falsely stated to have been caused by his having overslept himself; he, Lieut. Norton, well knowing that his absence from parade was without permission and in neglect of his duty.

Finding.—Guilty on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd charges, and guilty on so much of the 4th charge as accuses him of having, at Bar rackpore, on the evening of April 10, 1849, when furnishing the said report as relieved officer of the day, sent in with it a letter written and signed for him, and with his approval, by a brotherofficer, addressed to the adjutant of the regiment, in which his absence from the morning parade on that day was stated to have been caused by his having overslept himself; but the court are of opinion that the statement in that letter of his having overslept himself was not false, and do therefore acquit him of that and of the remainder of the charge.

Sentence.—To be publicly and severely reprimanded.

Confirmed. (Signed) C. J. NAPIER, General, C .- in-C.

-I approve of the "finding," but regret that I can-Remarks. not approve of the sentence of the court, which I consider too denient for so grave a military crime, committed by an officer of ten years' standing in the service.

The brigadier commanding at Barrackpore is to read, or cause to be read, first the proceedings of the court and then the following reprimand to Lieut. Norton, in the presence of the president and members of the court, and of all the officers of the steff and cantonments of Barrackpore. (Signed) C. J. NAPIER, General, C .- in-C

Lieutenant Norton-You have been tried, and sentenced to be publicly and severely reprimanded. I believe that the severest reprimand to an honourable man is to point out the magnitude of his offence. Your's has been that of quitting your post when on duty—a crime for which you might be cashiered. The officer of the day has charge of his regimental lines: he ought to be present at all parades, at all roll-calls, and in Queen's regiments at all issues of provisions or stores; he is placed on duty to be ready also in case of fire or any other accident that may disturb the tranquility of the lines; to see all orders obeyed; and should any disturbance arise, the officer of the day should at once repair to the spot and be ready to take prompt measures for its suppression; in short, his duty is to watch his lines or camp by day and by night. This is his duty in all armies. Yet you, Sir, made no scruple to take your pay from the public treasury for the honest execution of this duty! On the day when you abandoned your post, and went off to amuse yourself at Calcutta, you received a certain amount of rupees in pay and allowances. This received a certain amount of rupees in pay and allowances. This money you took from the East-India Company, many of whom are poor and suffering people; and you did not do the duty for which you were paid by those poor people. But this was not the full extent of your crime; you set the example of abandoning your post to the soldiers whom you command, and if any one of these men followed your example you would be obliged to report and bring that man to trial—with what feeling on your part I eannot say, but I know what the feeling of the man and all his comrades would be, namely, those of contempt and disgust to-wards their officer! Sir, I believe you to be a brave and honourable man, and I trust that such conduct will not happen again; but it is my disagrecable duty to place this truth before you in plain language, for I will not allow the discipline of the Indian army to be broken with impunity—the lesson may be rude, but it is necessary. The rigid performance of regimental duty is no less a matter of honesty and honour, than the more brilliant and dangerous one of fighting an enemy. Now return, Sir, to your duty, and let your future attention to that duty become as conspicuous as your bravery was on the field of battle!
(Signed)
C. J. Napier,

General Commander-in-Chief.

Lieut. E. B. Norton is to be released from arrest.

SUPREME COURT, JULY 13.

Iyavoo Iyer and Joseph Victor Pereira were indicted for feloniously forging and causing to be forged two promissory notes for Rs. 20,000 and Rs. 22,000, with intent to defraud the East-India Company. Separate counts charged them with uttering the same, knowing them to have been forged and counterfeit.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Bain appeared for the prosecution; Mr. Osborne conducted the defence.

This was a case of an extraordinary character. were a bramin, who acted as law-broker to a well-known atterney, and an East-Indian master printer, long past the prime of A lithographer, belonging to the same community, and s wealthy native female, besides other subordinate actors, whose several parts in the transaction were not publicly detailed, were involved in the case. It was proved that the printer and the bramin came to the house of the lithographer, and, producing a genuine Tanjore bond, asked him to strike off a dozen copies, complete in all but the signatures and dates, and for sums varying from Rs. 22,000 to smaller amounts. The lithographer, who is a very clever workman, undertook the job without the least hesitation for the stipulated sum of Rs. 35, and went about his task in open daylight. Some friends, however, who hap pened to see him engaged in pencilling the rough draft, told him to mind what he was about, as it was Government business and he must be careful; on hearing which, he resolved to guard himself from the apprehended consequences by obtaining a letter of license from his employer, and when the parties next appeared at his place of business, he exacted the following guarantee : —

" Madras, 2nd October, 1848. "I, the undersigned, do acknowledge having given the order to Mr. William Orton to print twelve copies of blank Tanjore debt, that if anything should occur I shall take the blame to myself.

Witnesses,
"D. E. ATKINSON, " IYAVQO IYER."

The mind of Mr. Orton was now perfectly at rest, his conscience never having suffered, it would appear, any uneasiness on this subject; but Mr. Pereira evidently thought that as he having a greater concernment in the ultimate results, had been made to exonerate the workman, it was but fair that the bramin. who was the actual principal, should in turn take his share of the responsibility, and he accordingly demanded and obtained from his brother forger a form of release from penal liabilities in the following terms:

" J. V. PERRIRA.

" Madras, 2nd October, 1848. "I do hereby certify that I have empowered Mr. J. V. Pereira, through his means, to get the accompanying Tanjore debt of 4 per cent. loan, to print for me twelve copies of the same, by omitting all the writing part, and I agree to pay for printing the said Tanjore debt bond the sum of Company's rupees two hundred; and if anything should occur, such as forgery, I shall take the blame to myself,—for which trouble I promise J. V. Pereira 1,000 rupees reward.

" Witness my hand (signed in Tamil), IYAVOO IYER." "T. PAUL.

A verdict of guilty was returned. The judge told the prisoners they had been convicted of endeavouring to perpetrate a gross fraud on the Government. It was one of the worst offences he had found it his duty to investigate since he had arrived in the country. It was a very bold and an impudent forgery, and he had no doubt, nor did he believe the jury entertained any doubt, that they had concocted the forgery, and that both would in some manner share in the proceeds. He would not be doing his duty if he passed a lenient sentence on them; he would pass such a sentence as would prove a lesson to them for the future, and operate as a warning to others of their description of character. They were sentenced to transportation

The Athenaum observes :- " It is hardly credible that these men, both of mature years, and who had hitherto lived an irreproachable life, for aught that appeared to the contrary, could have supposed that, by this interchange of mutual indemnifications, they had defeated the power of the law; yet such appears to be the fact. The transaction, if not openly talked about, was at least made known to many persons whom it was not necessary to make accomplices of; and whatever may be our opinion as to the moral notions of the criminals, it is very clear that their ideas of law and justice were outrageous in the extreme."

MISCELLANEOUS.

CURE OF SNAKE-BITES .- A young man of the Malabar caste, named Aurimuttoo, was bitten at St. Thomé by a large cobra. It was killed, and, together with the wounded man, taken to the house of a native in the village, who applied some herbs to the wound, and promised speedy recovery. The editor of this journal saw the snake and the man about two hours afterwards. The latter was still sensible, but complained of giddiness and a torpid sensation in all parts of his body. The hand was much swollen, and the eyes wore the dreamy appearance common to opium-eaters, when not under the influence of the intoxicating drug. Some time afterwards, from two to four hours, he was taken to a peon named Mootoosawmy, in the service of the Catholic establishment at St. Thomé, who is said to be reputed all over the country for his skill in this mysterious branch of knowledge, the cure of snake-bites. The patient was by this time apparently in a dying state, nearly insensible, and presenting all the appearances usually indicated by persons under the influence of deadly poison. Mootoosawmy's first care was to bind the arm tightly round from the shoulder to the wrist, forcing at the same time with both hands the blood towards the extremities. He then scarified the wounded part with a piece of glass in several places, and brought away a quantity of blood, quite black and perfectly fluid. He next made a slight abrasion of the skin on the top of the head, and rubbed some powdered leaves over both the wounded places. A vegetable preparation, in the form of snuff, was next forced up the nostrils, and into the eyes and ears, and an emetic administered in the usual way. The patient was then left under the charge of his relatives in a state of perfect unconsciousness; the swelling of the body continued to increase, and for some hours the chances of recovery appeared hopeless. During the night, however, he rallied, continued to get better during the following day, and is now quite restored to health, with the exception of being unable as yet to use the injured hand .- Athenaum, July 26.

IMPROVEMENTS. - A man might set himself a curious task, were he to keep a record of the improvements effected by the Government of India from year to year. A small stock of sta-tionery would serve him, but a few helps to proper insight in the optical way would be requisite. To write the annals of Madras after this fashion would not be a very arduous undertaking. We would engage to get up the records of a twelve-month any morning before breakfast, and have plenty of breathing time to spare. From the 31st of July, 1848, to the present date, there has not been as much work done for the public benefit as would serve to fill a paragraph in the way of narrative. Some half dozen groins have been laid down on the south beach, to prevent the sea from effecting an unauthorized junction withthe Cooum river, and some progress is making in the effort to keep down the usual inundation of the sepoy lines at Perambore; but this is all. The steam-engine, about which the justices have been confidentially debating, and, as they declare, about which they have earnestly petitioned, for goodness knows how long, still rests in the workshops of the English maker, or slumbers, perhaps, in the Staffordshire mines. The Cochrane Canal bakes its reeking slime in the sun, after the accustomed fashion, and the boatmen still unload at sundry places their heavy freights, from the impossibility of floating the laden vessels, execrating the cruelty of John Company if they happen to have no discretion, and marvelling at his folly if fortune has gifted them with brains. There is not at this moment, as compared with the corresponding period of last year, an ounce less of poison in the atmosphere, or a single acre the less of pestilential swamp suffered to remain undrained. - Athenæum, Aug. 9.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS. - A correspondent at Ellichpor expresses strong indignation at the cruel treatment experienced by the Rohilla prisoners who were captured at Taklee by the detachment under Capt. Ramsay. The Nawaub of Ellichpore, under whose charge these Rohillas remain, is said to fear their being left at large, and the prisoners, who are about 150 in number, are in consequence kept in irons, which we are sure would not be allowed if the Resident were aware of it. Our own good name suffers, too, by such barbarous treatment of these poor fellows, as it was expressly stipulated and explained to them, when they gave up their arms, that arrangements would be made on their arrival at Ellichpore for their being sent away to their own country; and on the faith of that promise they readily surrendered. As yet, however, no steps have been taken to carry this measure into effect, and, as above stated, they are not only kept prisoners, but prisoners in irons, and their horses and tattoos are being sold off daily in the city !- Madras U. S. Gaz., Aug. 21.
Two Companies of H.M.'s 25th Regiment proceed on the 20th of August to Poonamallee to relieve the detachment at that station.

LIEUT. JAMES EDMUND LEAHY, OF H. M.'s 84TH FOOT, and another officer were in pursuit of game, in the neighbourhood of Secunderabad, on the 14th August. A large rocky hill, midway in their road, induced them to take opposite sides, and being at full speed, collision ensued; both fell, Lieut. Leahy never to rise again. His head was jammed between two rocks, and death ensued immediately. The other officer, we hear, was not much injured. The deceased officer obtained his lieutenantcy on the 10th Dec. 1817.—Telegraph and Courier. on the 10th Dec. 1817. - Telegraph and Courier.

BOMBAY STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS OF THE ROMBAY STEAM NAVIGATION COM-PANY TO THE PROPRIETORS ASSEMBLED AT A GENERAL ANNUAL MEETING, HELD AT THE OFFICE OF THE COMPANY, BOMBAY GREEN, ON THE 20th AUGUST, 1849.

Your Directors regret that, in addressing you at this annual general meeting, they are unable to congratulate you on the result of the operations of the company for the past season.

The accounts which have been made up to the 31st of July last, for your information, and which, together with the books of the company, have been open for your inspection since the 11th instant, consist of a balance sheet, a statement of the receipts and expenditure of the several boats, a profit and loss account, and an account of the outstanding credits and liabilities of the

From the second of these accounts, you will observe that the net produce of the operations of the several boats amounts to the sum of Rs. 14,450-14-0, a sum not sufficient to cover the other expenses of the company, giving therefore no profit for any balance to carry to an insurance or a replacement fund.

This most unsatisfactory result is partly attributable to the accident which befell the Surat, and to the retrenchments which were reported to you at the last half-yearly meeting not having come into operation till the middle of the season.

These retrenchments we estimate at Rs. 750 a month, after allowing for some increased allowances which were deemed absolutely necessary.

This saving will be increased by at least Rs. 1,200 a month by the laying up of the Victoria, which took effect from the 1st of this month. This course was rendered necessary by the condition of her boilers, but your directors think it desirable always to have a reserve boat, to take up the place of any other boat in cases of accident, or when it stands in need of repair.

The new boilers which had been ordered for the Victoria have arrived within the last few days.

Since our last report the Bombay has arrived, and on the 28th of February, immediately after her arrival, made her first voyage. She has cost already the large sum of Rs. 189,908-4-10, and her operations during the few months she has run have not been remunerative. This, however, must not be taken as a test of her future operations, as a defect in her screw apparatus has limited her capacity for the stowage of cargo, by keeping one part of the vessel constantly wet, and has rendered it necessary to keep her always under steam during her voyages, when she might otherwise have been under sail. This defect is now under repair. One of your boats is now employed in voyages to Ceylon under a contract with the Ceylon government for the conveyance of the mails for Rs. 500 a month, which, added to the general traffic, is likely to make the line ultimately pay. To aid their operations in this, your Directors have made an arrangement with government for the carriage of all their treasure on the coast at reduced rates, inversely proportioned to the magnitude of the sums conveyed.

The steamers Victoria and Surat have been employed on the Kurrachee line, till the latter met with her accident, when the Dwarka, which had been in the Ceylon and Surat lines, was trans. ferred to that of Kurrachee, and the Surat line has been almost abandoned to the several other boats which run to that place.

The accident which happened to the Surat has been productive of great loss, both directly and indirectly.

The cost of her repair amounts to Rs. 7,460-10-8, but the greater damage to your interests consists in the loss of her services from the month of February to the close of the season, rendering it necessary to employ the Victoria and Dwarka when their boilers were in such a condition as materially increased the expense of working them.

Your Directors have been unable to come to any satisfactory settlement with Mr. Grey, who denies his liability to make good the remittances to himself and his co-agent in England, as mentioned in our last report; consequently legal proceedings have been instituted, and are now in progress against him. patent slip tools and other articles which he held, and declined to give up till paid the full amount he claimed, have been obtained by making that payment under protest. This was almost necessary, as many of the things were urgently required, and others were spoiling from the want of care on the part of those to whose hands they had been intrusted.

Your Directors regret that they have been unable to obtain a fitting piece of land on the shore of the harbour on which to place the patent slip, though they have made every endeavour to do so. They have applied to Government for the waste land adjoining the Mazagon Pier on the north, but that was refused, as your Directors believe, because of its propinquity to the Government dockyard; and another piece of waste ground higher up the harbour was also refused, on account, as is supposed, of its neighbourhood to the powder works. Your supposed, of its neighbourhood to the powder works. Directors much regret the difficulties they have met with in this matter, as they are persuaded that the use of the patent slip will prove most profitable to you, as well as being a great source of convenience and economy to the shipping interest at Bombay.

Your Directors are in negotiation with Government with the view to obtaining a grant of the ferry between Bombay and Panwell on certain terms, which will have the effect (if carried out) of putting the communication with the main land on a satisfactory footing, and will in the end, we doubt not, afford a profitable business to the company. From the accounts of outstanding debits and credits, partly made up from estimates, you will observe that there was on the 31st July last a balance of Rs. 948 in your favour. That account includes Rs. 24,350, due for calls unpaid. Of that sum Rs. —— have since been paid, leaving Rs. ——, being the 5th call on shares still unpaid. All these shares have been declared forfeited. Repeated notices extending over a period of nearly twelve months have been given to the owners, but were disregarded, so that the Directors have had no alternative but to take the course they have done

Of the Directors elected at your last annual general meeting, only one accepted the office; one other has since been elected by the Directors, and one of the former Directors has resigned, and Gregor Grant, esq., and Juggonath Sunkersett, esq., now go out by rotation; there are consequently five vacancies in the direction to be filled up.

RETURN OF SIR C. NAPIER.

We can, we believe, announce upon authority, that it is the intention of the Commander-in-Chief of India to return home at the end of the cold season. This we intimated some six weeks since as more than probable—it may now be received as certain, unless the prospects of active service make their appearance, or the gallant veteran shall change his mind. It is probable he may drop down the Indus, and either take steamer, as formerly, from Kurrachee, or call in at Bombay in passing. These matters are less definitely settled than the fact of his departure. The reforms in the army, and all the other fine things that we looked for, thus prove visionary for the present. The universal panic occasioned by the tidings of Chillianwalla made the good folks at home imagine that India was lost, and, as usual, they never gave themselves leisure for a moment to reflect whether the remedy intended could be applied in time or not. Sir Charles had not only proved himself a gallant, but a skilful and successful general: his trumpet had been lustily blown by himself and brother William, and scarcely a month elapsed that some newspaper notice or other from a peculiarly friendly pen did not keep him before the world. He and Lord Gough were in reality the only British officers of mank and standing who had drawn blood since Waterloo:-Gough was a failure, and his rival became the cynosure of all eyes. All the nice newspaper stories about the colloquy with the Duke, where the hero of Waterloo-who afterwards declared that he was never in any way alarmed—is made to say, that "if you don't go out to India, I must,"—about the "no politicals in camp,"—the readiness to start on the instant for India—with the rest—could, we have no doubt, be without difficulty traced to the same source. No men have shown themselves more alive than the Napiers to the value of "working the press." That part of it only which refused to be worked by them, they abused and professed to despise. The panic speedily passed away—it was never entertained by those who had the benefit of it; the Duke got his crotchet, the Hero of Mesnee his spite indulged. The Court had to give way to clamour, and yielded, as any one might, to coercion, what they would not otherwise have conceded. Sir Charles has thus had a triple triumph—he has triumphed over the Court of Directors; been put at the head of our armies by the most sweet voices of that discerning multitude, against the lugress of whose missiles the windows of Apsley House remain barred to this hour; and that of securing some 20,000l. pay and allowances, with the prospect of a title in reversion. He can hereafter boast of what he would have done in the field had he been allowed to lead in battle,—of what in council-room or camp had he remained in India. Having come out to attempt that which no one, as the multitude supposed, but himself could perform, he goes home when matters have returned to such a position as ordinary mortals can control. There is not, after all, much greatness in the whole display: Gough, Gomm, and Cotton have deep cause to rue the day at Chillianwalla. We confess we were of those who expected very great things of Sir C. Napier, and who grieve most heartily at his departure. His politics and political morality we detest, and do not quite go the length of the multitude in our admiration of his tactics. But believing him infinitely less of a hero than he is generally taken for, we see very many things in him eminently fitting him for the highest command. He has no apprehension of responsibility or dread of inmovation; he is void of all old-wifeishness and goldthreadism, the besetting sins of our military chiefs; he loves his profession, and knows how to win the confidence of those under and around him the last being more than half the secret of half our military successes .- Bombay Times, Sept. 1.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 24 reached Bombay by the Secostris August 22.

A GOOZENATTE DAILY NEWSPAPER has appeared at Bombay, named the Summachar Durpun, or 'Mirror of News.'

LOCAL LITICATION. — The Bombay Telegraph furnishes the following illustration of the pleasures of local litigation. A case came recently before the Small Cause Court, in which 125 witnesses were declared to be ready to give their evidence in regard to a question touching the ownership of a few brass pots! The judge intimated that, when the Court had a spare month or so, it might take the case quietly.

THE GANGES CANAL.—We perceive, by the Calcutta Gazette, that 1st-Lieuts. E. Sharp (of the artillery) and F. Whiting (of the engineers), with 2nd-Lieut. J. F. Tennant, of the latter corps, have been placed by the Government of India at the disposal of Lieut. col. P. T. Cautley, for employment on the canals west of the Jumna. From this it would appear that, as stated by a north-west contemporary some short time since, the completion of the Ganges Canal is to be set about with vigour. Col. Cautley began this great work when but a young captain: since then he has been for a while in England, has assisted Dr. Falconer in passing the splendid work on the fossils of the Sewalie range (the Faunna Sevalensis) through the press, has lived half a lifetime as an active literary man,—a sad comment on the tardiness with which works of public utility advance, compared with the rate at which the rest of the affairs of the world run on. Before us we have a letter from the Hon. Mr. Thomason, now retiring from the governorship of the N.W. Provinces,—then, so far as we remember, little more than a rising civilian,—enthusiastically recommending the work which up to this hour is only lazily progressing. We have had four Governors-General and two acting Governors to rule over five Governors on the N.W. frontier, and ten Governors at the minor presidencies, since the grand design was made known to the world. Six great states have been overrun and humbled; seven stupendous campaigns have been begun and ended; three sovereignties have been permanently subjected to, or added to, our dominions; and ten times as much money expended on each of these occasions as would have subdued the barren wilderness to the husbandman, and made the desert blossom as the rose.—

Bombay Times, Aug. 11.

THE BOMBAY STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, which has been in existence but two or three years, and whose shares are selling at 75 per cent. discount, has had a meeting, which was, as usual, a somewhat "squabblesome" affair, for, if we except the Union Bank Directors, who joked gleefully in the midst of their deepest misfortunes, men are never less disposed to "peace, harmony, and good will" than when they have incurred losses or involved themselves in embarrassments. A resolu-tion, expressive of an opinion that the Company had been managed on principles of extravagance, though brought forward by one of the directors, was unseconded, and the meeting came to the cautious vote that the report should be printed and circulated, and that an adjourned meeting should be held to take it into consideration. This point disposed of, Mr. Fogerty opened a campaign against the gross abuse of the two responsible offices of the solicitorship and the directorate being united in one person, but the meeting did not seem to participate in his feelings, for the motion was not carried. Some amendments of the deed, one of which allows the shareholders access at all times to the books of the Company, and another gives the shareholders immediate control over the appointment of a manager, were carried, and the meeting appointed new directors, there being five vacancies increased to six by the resigna-tion at the meeting of Mr. Walker. The gentlemen elected were—Gregor Grant, F. Hutchinson, William Graham, W. Keys Fogerty, Bhasker Soonderjee, esqs., and Mr. Tyabjee Bhoymeah. Two gentlemen, Major Swanson and Mr. Ayrton, were appointed not only to audit the accounts, but to report on the general affairs of the Company, and by their report some light may be thrown upon the question as to the future prospects of a concern which has certainly been the reverse of wellmanaged or prosperous hitherto. Since the meeting, the new directors have been compelled to transfer one of the existing loans (Rs. 40,000) from the Bombay to the Oriental Bank, at a higher rate of interest; and they have also chosen as manager of the concern a Mr. Wilson, who is or was chief mate of a country ship.—Bombay Telegraph.

DISHONESTY OUTWITTED.—An equity bill has been filed by the advocate-general, on the part of Government, against Cassim Natha, to recover the sum of upwards of three lacs of rupees, part of the confiscated property of Alloo Parroo, who was some time since transported. It seems that the wife of Alloo Parroo had placed the money in the charge of Cassim Natha, to be kept by him for her use; but when she applied to him for money, he denied that he had any of her property in his possession—telling her that all her husband's property had been forfeited. She applied to the Company's solicitor for advice, and thus "the cat slipped out of the bag."—Telegraph.

The Brevet.—The majors in the Bombay regiments, who

THE BREVET.—The majors in the Bombay regiments, who have been superseded by the new brevet, have addressed a memorial to the Court of Directors complaining of the circamstance.

Societies.—A ball was given at Government House, Dapoorie, on the night of the 22nd ultimo, which is said to have gone off with great éclat. The company began to arrive at about half-past ten, and so did—the rain, which was at first thought likely to have proved a damper to the ball, but it however soon passed off, and everything was as gay as possible. The party broke up shortly before two o'clock. "After the ball at Kirkee on the night of the 15th," says our correspondent, "the officers of the 10th hussars cannot be classed as amongst those who never dance. As you would have said had you seen them." Times dance, as you would have said had you seen them. — Times.

Monry Market.—The five per cent. fixed deposit accounts of the Oriental Bank has been closed, and the interest allowed on current accounts been reduced from five to four per cent. The bank has, we presume, been induced to resort to these measures from the large quantity of money lying in their treasury for which employment cannot be obtained. The Bank of Bombery are just now, we hear, granting loans at the low interest of five per cent.—Ibid.

THE "LORD DUFFERIN."-The trial of the case of the Lord Dufferin was concluded on the 14th ult., when judgment was given against the claims of the salvors,—the sum of Rs. 5,000, originally offered by the underwriters, and no more, having been awarded to them. The Chief Justice spoke strongly against the claim in giving his decision.

MONUMENTAL TABLET TO CAPTAIN ENNIS, 21st N.I., IN THE CATHEDRAL. — The melancholy fate which befel this much-beloved officer on the Indus on his way to Kurrachee in 1843-and for being suspected of having been concerned in the perpetration of which one of the ex-ameers, Shadad Khan, was kept a close prisoner in Surat Castle for years—is well known to our readers. The officers of his corps have procured a monumental tablet from home for erection to his memory in the Cathedral, on which is the following inscription:—
Sacred to the Memory of Sacred to the memory of Captain E. M. Ennis, 21st Regt. N.I., on this Establisment,

Who was barbarously put to death,
Between Sukkur and Hyderabad in Scinde,
On the 18th February, 1843, When en route to the Presidency on sick leave; Aged 45 years.

To the character of a Gallant Soldier and an Excellent Officer He united the kindest and most honourable disposition, And his memory will long be affectionately cherished By his brother-officers of the 21st Regiment, Who have caused this tablet to be erected.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The Chinese Repository contains some specimens of Chinese poetry from that very ancient classical work, the She-king, or Book of Odes, of undoubted authenticity, though dated anterior to the time of Confucius. To feel all the peculiar beauties of these rude efforts of the Muse in a primitive age, a very critical knowledge of the language and a familiarity with the allusions are indispensable; but even in a bald translation, like the following, the simplicity of the imagery and the pathos of the sentiments will not be entirely lost.

THE HARMONIOUS WATER-BIRDS.

- " 1. The harmonious voices of the sacred water-birds
- " Are heard from their river-island home:
- " This excellent maiden, gentle and retiring,
- " Is a lovely mate for our virtuous prince.
- 46 2. The hang-plants' uneven stalks are swaying to and fro. "This mader, gentle and retiring, was sought by our prince, sleeping and waking,
- "And not finding her, his troubled thoughts ejaculated, 'how long? O, how long?'
- "He turns restless on his bed; he goes hither and thither.
- " 3. The hang-plants' uneven stalks sway to and fro, but now he gathers them;
- "This excellent maiden, retiring and gentle, he welcomes home
- with lutes and guitars.
  "The hang-plants' uneven stalks, swaying to and fro, are fit
- for offering now : "This excellent damsel, gentle and retiring, with music of bells and drums, welcome her home!'

This is the first ode in the She-king. It is referred to more sition, and an expression of chaste feeling; as exhibiting "harmony without voluptuousness, and grief without excessive sorrow." It commemorates the marriage of the Wan-wang, father of the founder of the Chow dynasty (B.C. 1122), with Tae-sze, a lady celebrated for her beauty and virtue, and is supposed to have been composed by one of the inmates of the palace, immediately after her arrival. In its structure, this ode belongs to the class of Chinese poetry denominated hing, or 'suggestive,' in which some other object than that intended is first mentioned, and some quality or trait in that object suggests or introduces the idea which the poet wishes to raise, and in the comparison or contrast of the two consists the principal beauty of the composition. In order to help this comparison and the understanding of the historical and other allusions, a comment is required, even by a native reader. One commentary, compiled in the reign of Kang-he, comprising the most valuable notes of a large number of scholars upon the She-king, fills no less than twenty-four volumes. From the notes of the commentator Choo-foo-tsze, the following remarks are extracted, to elucidate the sense of the aforegoing verses :-

"King Wan, of the state Chow, was by nature possessed of the most virtuous qualities, and was so favoured as to obtain for his consort a virtuous lady of the Sze family. On her arrival at his palace, the inmates, perceiving in her the retiring and meekly chaste qualities, composed this ode in her praise. They first spoke of the responsive notes of the water-birds, which dwell in delightful harmony on the islands in the river, comparing her modest, meek, respectful, reverent, and chaste virtues, to the qualities of those sacred birds, which pointed her out as a suitable match for the virtuous Wanwang. "In the second stanza, the feelings of the king, before he had secured this partner of his bosom, are described. As the uneven stems of the hang-plant float uncertainly on the river's stream, and are tossed about by the waves; so the king's thoughts, whilst his acquisition of this rare treasure was doubtful, fluctuated and dis-Waking, his thoughts were of her; sleeping, he dreamed of her. The days passed heavily and uneasily; at night he found no repose upon his couch.

"In the third stanza, the joy of the king, when he secured his prize, is depicted. The stems of the hing-plant, which at first suggested the restless emotions of the prince, now represent the bride. The plant, when ripe, is used both for food and sacrifices; a person is and when properly prepared, they are officed in solemn sacrifices; and when properly prepared, they are officed in solemn sacrifices. This suggests the arrival of the bride at her new home, and the fitness of her union with a prince of such rare virtue as Wan-wang, whilst the sound of lutes and guitars, of bells and drums, expresses the joy with which she is welcomed, and the tender feelings in which she is to participate."

So far the commentator. By the "water-birds," are meant the Anas Galericulata, commonly called "Mandarin ducks," and which have been always justly celebrated in China for the mutual constancy and affection of the male and female. During life, the same pair always continue together, without exhibiting the forward and obtrusive fondness of other birds whose attachment is less permanent, and never pair with another mate after the death of the first. Hence, they are the symbol of perfect affection, their harmonious voices suggesting nothing that is too The terms "retiring" and "gentle," applied to Sze, are intended to denote the softness and mildness of her nature, and her modest deportment.

The hang-plant grows in rivers and ponds; its leaves are of a purplish or reddish colour, and float on the surface of the water. The flower is yellow. The root is sometimes put in wine, to give it a flavour, and it is sometimes used in sacrifices.

The kin, or lute, had five or seven strings; the seh, or guitar. twenty-five; they are here used for all sorts of small and softbreathing instruments, whilst the bells and drums denote those of powerful tone. Their combination implies greatness and universality of joy. "Wan-wang's joy," observes Choo-foo-tsze, was shown by the union of lutes and guitars with drums and bells; had it been evinced by feasting and revelling, it would have been voluptuous and improper."

The commentators upon this ode deduce from it illustrations of the various relations of life, and their appropriate duties. Kwang-wang, for example, says: "The institution of marriage lies at the foundation of a nation's prosperity, and is the source of ten thousand happinesses. When the rites of matrimony are duly ordered, all things assume their proper place, and heaven's decrees are perfected. Hence Confucius, in arranging the odes, gave the first place to this of the 'Harmonious Water-Birds; for he said that those who held the highest station are the father and mother of the people, and if the actions of the prince and his consort do not correspond with those of heaven and earth, it will be impossible to serve acceptably the divine spirits, or regulate all things according to just rule. From ancient days until now. the prosperity or decline of the three dynasties of Hea, Shang, and Chow have been entirely owing to their attention to or neglect of those great truths."

THE MOUSE-RAR.

- " 1. I gather and gather again the mouse-ear plant,
- "But my bamboo basket I cannot fill.
  "Alas! I am thinking of my lord,
- " And the basket I have laid by the broad road-side.
- 2. I wish to ascend that stone-covered hill,
- "But my palfrey is lame and cannot go up.
  "Then bring me the storm cup of chased gold,
- "That I may for a while forget my griefs.
- 3. I wish to ascend you high hill's back,
- " But, alas! my black palfrey is sickly and faint;
- Then bring me the cup of unicorn's horn,
- "That I for a while may forget my woes.
- " 4. I wish to ascend that rock's gentle slope.
- "But, alas! my poor palfrey is weak with disease;
- " My page, too, is unable to walk:
- "Alas! alas! what then shall I do?"

This is the third ode in the She-king, and is said to have been composed by Sze, the wife of Wan-wang, as some suppose, whilst her husband was absent on a service for the tyrannical Chow-sin, the last emperor of the Shang dynasty; but, according to others, when the tyrant, through jealousy, had immured him in prison. It points evidently to his absence, and her dread of some danger impending over him.

The structure of this ode places it in the class foo, or 'direct,' the emotions of the writer being expressed in direct terms, without comparisons. In the first stanza she represents herself as so absorbed and abstracted, in thinking of her husband, as to be unable to perform the simple act of filling an open basket with a plant that grew by the road side. The other stanzas are merely varied expressions of her anxiety and grief. She desires to ascend a high hill, to see if there be any signs of her lord's return, but her horse is lame and sick. She calls for a cup of wine, not to drown her grief in intoxication,-an idea which is indignantly rejected by all the commentators,-but to express the depth and intensity of her grief, which cannot be soothed by ordinary occupations. She sees an eminence some way off, with a gentler slope, and hopes to climb that on foot; but her page is too weak to attend her. In an agony of grief, she bursts into a pathetic exclamation, like "What shall I do!" but which cannot be rendered into English.

The "Mouse-Ear," or "Curled Ear," a plant growing in Shense, is a kind of creeping vine, with numerous curly leaves, green above and white beneath, with white flowers, having slender stems; the leaves are used for food. In the fourth month, the pods are somewhat in the shape of the pendant ornaments worn by ladies in their ears; hence it is also called "Ear pendant." The basket referred to was an open, shallow, bamboo basket, very easy to fill; and a commentator remarks that the lady's finding it so difficult to fill such a basket with a plant so easily gathered, was of itself a proof how much her thoughts must have been occupied about her husband, so that she deposits her useless basket on the ground.

The "storm cup" was a large goblet, with golden ornaments, and emblems of storms engraven upon it. Cups are often found in Chinese shops made of rhinoceros horn.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

LONDON,

THURSDAY, October 4, 1849.

IT must be acknowledged that British India has of late furnished lamentable examples of obliquity of principle amongst some of the most prominent classes of its European society. If we were to estimate the tone of social morality at Calcutta from the disclosures made, not only in the commercial circles, but in the offices of certain public functionaries in that city, we should be compelled to place it low indeed. It is to this deteriorated tone we must, we suppose, attribute the lenient and mitigated censure which seems to follow acts done by individuals in these prominent classes which offenders in an humbler sphere are doomed to expiate by transportation, imprisonment, and whipping. We perceive by the last Calcutta papers, that a barrister has been actually challenged by an attorney for uttering something derogatory to the character of Sir Thomas Turton!

Some recent revelations which affected the purity of a department of public justice in Calcutta, wherein purity is, perhaps, of the highest importance-namely, the police magistracy-rendered it absolutely necessary that an investigation should take place into the conduct of the functionaries of that department, and into its general administration. Mr. J. R. Colvin and Mr. Wm. Dampier were accordingly named Commissioners, and they have commenced their inquiries in public. The result of four days' examination of the witnesses, published in the Calcutta newspapers, is now before us.

It would be unfair to pronounce a final opinion upon a partial, that is, an incomplete, body of evidence; but there is enough in these extraordinary records which is confessed, or not denied, or well established, to excite shame, sorrow, and surprise—shame and sorrow that such a system should have existed in British India; surprise that the Government should have been so ill-informed of what was notorious amongst the native community, or so tardy in remedying a state of things disgraceful to the British name.

It appears that the Chief Magistrate of the Calcutta Police (Mr. James Hardwicke Patton), the late Second Magistrate (Major Birch), and the late Superintendent (Capt. Hicks), were under pecuniary obligations, for money borrowed, to wealthy natives, who, it was generally believed, exercised a corresponding influence in the police. Mr. Hume, the junior Police Magistrate, stated to the Commissioners that a European inspector had told him that the police were afraid to go to a certain place in search of stolen property, because it belonged to Baboo Mutty Loll Seal. "From all I have observed during my career as a magistrate," says Mr. Hume, "the impression on my mind is, that the Executive officers are cognizant of an undue influence on the part of Baboo Mutty Loll Seal in the police, and that they have not the courage to do anything that may be prejudicial to his interests." And again :—

"The whole conviction produced on my mind, in the course of my magisterial experience, and from remarks made in the course of business, by Executive Officers, is, that the Executive Police are themselves fully conscious that Mutty Loll Seal has an influence in the police beyond that of other parties. They speak of a case in which he is concerned as one in which extraordinary caution should be observed. I have never had the means of tracing whether this influence arose from his power as a wealthy man, and his supposed mode of using it, or from some secret and direct influence, or I should have brought the matter to the notice of the Government.
My own belief is, that it arose from some secret and direct influence.

"Mr. Colrin.—Was it, within your personal knowledge, a matter of notoriety that Baboo Mutty Loll Seal was a creditor of any of the members of the executive police, from the principal officer down-

"Mr. Hume.-If I am to speak as a magistrate, I say certainly not.

"Mr. Colvin.—We do not wish you to speak in your particular capacity of magistrate. We ask you, generally, whether you have never heard of rumours that such was the case?

"Mr. Hume.—I do not wish to give evidence of rumours.

"Mr. Colvin.—Did you never hear prevalent reports?

"Mr. Colein.—Did you never hear prevalent reports?
"Mr. Hume.—I have not heard prevalent reports. I have heard many things about the police; but I do not know that they are true. I have heard that the police is independent in none of its departments. The opinion of the public appears to me to be, that the whole police is at the feet of Mutty Loll Seal."

The fact of high functionaries of the police being in debt to wealthy natives does not appear to have been denied. Mr. Patton was examined, and did not repudiate the charge. Major Birch's pecuniary obligations are patent. Mr. W. F. Fergusson, a partner of the firm of Oswald, Seal, and Co., stated that an advance to Mr. Patton by Mutty Loll Seal was made through his house, and that he had heard respectable and intelligent natives say, that undue influence existed in the police by reason of the magistrates borrowing money of natives, for he distinctly asserts that he knew of similar advances of money to Captain Hicks (who is likewise said to have been indebted to Aushootosh Dey), and he speaks of some pecuniary transactions between Mr. Hume and Mutty Loll Seal. This native gentleman was himself examined by the Commissioners, and his disclosures are curious :-

" Mr. Colvin .- Have you any objection to say whether Mr. Patton, since his appointment as magistrate, came under pecuniary ob-ligations to you in two ways—that is to say, by direct advances from you to him, and by debts contracted to Oswald, Seal, and Co.

which subsequently passed into your hands?

"Mutty Loll Seal.—In both ways.

"Mr. Colvin.—Have you any objection to say whether any other magistrate of the town, or superintendent of police, or deputy superintendent, or any upper member of the executive police, such as Mr. Farrell and Mr. M'Cann—have also been in your debt since their employment in the police?

"Mutty Loll Seal.—Yes, I have accounts with every one-Birch, Mr. Patton, Mr. Hume, and Mr. M'Cann, and Mr. Kennie, his son-in-law, on a joint account.

"Mr. Colvin.—With reference to the magistrates, we wish to know whether they had money transactions with you since their appointment. Have you had accounts with Mr. Hume since he has been a magistrate? Do your accounts refer to sums advanced by you to the magistrates, and to superintendents before their appointment?

"Mutty Loll Seal.—My accounts with Mr. Patton and Major Birch began after their appointment. My account with Mr. Hume began before his appointment, except as to certain negotiable instruments of his, which came into my hands by discounting after his appointment.

It is due to Mr. Hume to say that he distinctly denies money transactions with Mutty Loll Seal " since he was a magistrate."

The consequences of these pecuniary dealings with wealthy natives, who invariably expect their quid pro quo, might easily be anticipated; but the fact does not seem to rest upon surmise or conjecture. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjea knows that, "in consequence of the reports that the magistrates are indebted to Mutty Loll Seal, there is a belief among the native inhabitants of the town that the Baboo has an improper influence over the police. It was a matter of notoriety that the magistrates generally were indebted to Mutty Loll Seal. It was popularly believed that the police were under the hands of Baboo Mutty Loll Seal, and that the Baboo could lead them by the nose as he pleased." Baboo Peary Chand Mittra says :- "It was a matter of general notoriety that Mr. Patton and Major Birch were indebted to Mutty Loll Seal." Anundonarain Ghose states that, in a dispute between Mutty Loll Seal and himself, partiality was shown by the police to him. "I presented petitions sometimes to Mr. Patton, sometimes to Major Birch, sometimes to Mr. McCann, but no notice was taken of them beyond an occasional order to Gunga Ram to make inquiries. But Gunga Ram seemed to act utterly without control, as though he were magistrate himself." There is a remarkable episode respecting this Gunga Ram, which deeply involves the character of a police magistrate; but, for the present, we forhear to notice it.

Some of the interrogatories put by the Commissioners elicit rather amusing answers. For example-Mr. Colvin thus questioned a Mr. James Farrell, a police inspector, whose style of living had attracted observation, and was somewhat suspicious :- "We have it, upon the authority of Mr. Law, that, while receiving a salary of 250 rupees per month, you have a palankeen-carriage, a buggy, four horses, and a pony. Will you have the goodness to explain how you contrive to maintain such an establishment with such an income?" Mr. Farrell answers :- "With all possible respect, I must say that the Commissioners have not the right to control my private establishment!" He does, however, condescend to give an explanation, which he afterwards contradicts, and then substitutes a third!

What, it may be asked, was the "system" under which the police were managed, whilst all these transactions were going on? In a letter from Government to Mr. Patton, dated December 31st, 1845, occurs the following passage:-" The Deputy Governor has been given to understand that police reports are still heard and disposed of by the superintendent, instead of yourself, as was expressly enjoined in despatch dated 21st July, 1845; and his Honour desires that, if this be the case, it immediately be amended; and that you will, without any further delay, take upon yourself the duties which have been assigned to your Mr. Colvin, referring to this letter, asks Mr. office." Patton:-

"The Commissioners desire to know what control you, as chief magistrate, have exercised in the police, in pursuance of the express directions of Government?
"Mr. Patton.—Whenever I saw occasion I interfered,—in such cases as misconduct of police-officers-not cases of theft, but a variety of things. My interference was very often required; and I did interfere. All the letters I have laid before you will show what was the nature of the control I exercised, and how I exercised it.

"Mr. Colvin.—But we should like to have a more specific answer to our question. The Government gave you certain specific instructions; and we wish to know whether you followed them; and if so, to what extent?

"Mr. Patton.—The question comprehends so many things, that I would rather give a written answer.

" Mr. Colvin .- Had you any system by which you could learn, at the end of a week or a fortnight, the result or progress of grave offences of which the occurrence had been brought to your notice by the daily returns?

"Mr. Putton.—I had none. But I produce a book from which you will see how I watched the progress of cases.

" Mr. Colvin .- But what did you do to see that the investigation of these cases was brought to a definite result? Suppose, for instance, there was a heavy robbery, or a murder, and parties could not be apprehended immediately, what did you do?
"Mr. Pallon.—I gave the necessary orders to the superintendent of police, and kept my eye on the cases reported in the daily returns.

" Mr. Colvin .- But what check had you upon the execution of your rders? We wish particularly to know whether the members of the xecutive police did or did not exercise too great a license in apprehending and detaining parties in custody between the time the report was furnished in the daily returns you have spoken of, and the investigation by the magistrates?

"Mr. Patton.—I left the execution of my orders to the superintendent of police. I considered that as entirely within the scope of If the superintendent of police did not attend to that, I his duties.

do not know what I could do besides.

What would be thought of such a "system" of police in England; and what must the natives of India think and NATIVE INDIAN AND NEW ORLEANS COTTON. - Mr. Shaw gives the following calculations of the relative profit of the culgives the following calculations of the property of native Indian and American cotton:—The yield of an acre of native cotton, when cleaned, is about 60 lbs. It will, an acre of native cotton, when cleaned, is about 60 lbs. therefore, require about thirteen acres to produce the Bombay candy of 784 lbs. To clean this quantity from the seed, which forms three-fourths of the bulk gathered (the gin of 25 saws being used for the purpose), would cost, Rs. 3 10an.; rent, at Rs. I llan. 10p. per acre, Rs. 22 llan. 10p.; cultivation, at Rs. I 5an. per acre, Rs. I7 Ian.; picking, at 3an. per acre, Rs. 2 7an.; so that the 784 lbs. of clean cotton would stand at Rs. 45 17 an. 10 p. From the sale of this, at the average rates, the cultivator would obtain Rs. 49 San. 6p. The difference, viz. Rs. 3 10an. 8p., together with the value of the seed, Rs. 14 1an., in all Rs. 17 11an. 8p., comprises the whole profit derived from the cultivation. The balance-sheet for New Orleans cotton presents a very different result. In the first place, that variety yields more to the acre, and one-third instead of one-quarter of the bulk assumes the form of cleaned cotton. Reckoning 1151bs. to the acre, it will require a little more than six acres and three quarters to produce a Bombay candy of 784 lbs. Mr. Shaw puts it at seven acres. The same cost of cultivation gives Rs. 11 3 an. 0 p.; cleaning, as before, Rs. 3 I an. 3p., rent, as before, Rs. 12 3an. 6p.; picking Rs. 1 5an. 0p. The total cost, therefore, will be Rs. 27 12an. 9p. The value of the seed (Rs. 9 6an. subtracted) makes Rs. 18 6an. 9p., and taking the sale of the cotton to produce Rs. 61 4an., the profit on the cultivation will be Rs. 45 13an. 3n. showing a difference in fewers of the Name be Rs. 45 13an. 3p., showing a difference in favour of the New Orleans seed of Rs. 28 1an. 7p. In these calculations there are two circumstances that require to be remarked. First, they are upon the hypothesis of all the labour being hired, which makes the case of the ryot a little more tolerable than which makes the case of the ryot a little more tolerance than appears at first sight; and, secondly, they are according to the old rate of assessment, which was considerably above that under the recent survey. These considerations, however, do not in any way affect the substantial difference in favour of the New Orleans seed. The really important feature is in the economy of land and labour, with which an equal result can be obtained. Absolute prices vary with the value of money, and from many other causes; but to replace a crop with one of only equal value, that saved nearly half the land and half the labour hitherto employed, is an addition of positive wealth to a country of which we have few examples.—Colonial Mag.

RIVER NAVIGATION IN INDIA.—At a meeting held last week in the Glasgow Chamber of Commerce, it appears resolutions were passed, recommending the India-House to grant a charter limiting the responsibility of the subscribers, for the purpose of testing and carrying out Mr. Bourne's plan of Indian river naviga-We have long considered that the question of limited responsibility has been very imperfectly understood in the United Kingdom, and it is a curious fact that the leading parties in the present recommendation are those who about a year back petitioned the Government against the charter granted to the Eastern Archipelago Company, on the ground that "the limitation of liability for copartnery obligations was an exclusive privilege of the worst description," and one that was "in the highest degree dangerous."- Times, Oct. 3.

A DICTIONARY

BY DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one wolume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

"If condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable,—if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forbes's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patrons and students of Hindustani literature."—Friend of India, October 19, 1848.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

This mail brings the satisfactory intelligence that "peace and tranquillity reign throughout the length and breadth of India, from Peshawur to Pooree, and from Cashmere to Cape Comorin." The Punjab is not disturbed even by rumours, the transient dissatisfaction amongst the troops at Rawul Pindee having entirely disappeared, and the settlement of the country is said to be proceeding quietly. The report mentioned in our last Summary, as upon authority, that Sir Charles Napier was to return home at the end of the cold season, is not contradicted, and the annual relief, which is now due, is said to have been suspended until the journey of Sir Charles to the Punjab and Peshawur, on his way home, which was to take place in October. "The tents of the Governor-General are to be ready at Kalka, on the 18th October," says a correspondent from Simla, "and those of the Commander-in-Chief on the 20th, when both will proceed on a tour in the Punjab." The problem respecting Sir William Gomm is solved by an announcement in the Madras papers, that he was on board the Bentinck, on his way from Calcutta to Galle.

The native states of India present no incidents worthy of notice. At Hyderabad, no successor had been appointed to Shums-ool-Omrah; but, at a durbar, the Nizam, who had invited Suraj-ool-Moolk to court, presented that personage with a string of pearls, and restored him his valuable jaghire, a change of feeling which is supposed to indicate kindlier sentiments towards him, and to augur his reappointment as minister.

At Calcutta, the chief topic was the proceedings of the Commissioners of Inquiry into the police, who had closed their investigations, having collected sufficient materials for a report. Another investigation is said to be in progress, but is conducted with closed doors, into the pecuniary embarrassments of a member of the Bengal civil service.

From Madras we have accounts of two melancholy incidents, which furnish the only set-off to the otherwise gratifying news brought by the present mail.

At Malliapooram, on the western coast, an affair took place between some Moplas and a detachment of the 43rd regiment of Native Infantry, in which Ensign R. A. Wyse of that corps, lost his life. The particulars, as far as we can collect them from the meagre accounts in the Madras papers, are as follow:-

On the 27th August a number of Mopla fanatics,—a set of desperadoes,-after committing various atrocities in the neighbourhood of Calicut, took post in a strongly-built stone mosque on the summit of a hill, and bade defiance to the police. The civil authorities, being unable to disledge them, applied to the nearest military station, at Mallianooram, and a detachment of the 43rd was sent to disperse the men, under Captain Watts, who pushed forward a party of 60 men in advance, under Ensign Wyse, following himself with another of the same strength. When the first party approached the mosque, a few of the Moplas, not more than fifteen, issued forth armed, and descended the hill to encounter the 60 sepoys, who fired at random, it is said, without orders, and then turned and fled, leaving Ensign Wyse, a jemadar, and about five men, to contend with the infuriated Moplas. The young officer cut down the first man, but was wounded by a second, and one account represents that the sepoys did not fly until this moment, when they saw their only European officer fall. Ensign Wyse and his six gallant men were hacked to pieces by the knives of the Moplas, who returned to their stronghold with the loss of only two of their number. Captain Watts vainly endeayoured to rally the fugitives, who seem to have been panic-struck, and he retired to the cutcherry, for the protection of the treasury. Matters now became serious, and it was deemed advisable to obtain the aid of European troops. A requisition was accordingly sent by the civil authorities of the district to Cannanore, and 200 men of H.M.'s 94th regiment, with two guns, under Major Dennis, started for Malliapooram on the 30th. A short account only of the result is given in the Madras papers, namely, that the Moplas were completely routed, 64 of their number being killed. The loss of the 94th was three killed and two wounded, besides Major Dennis and Lieutenant Vaughan, both of whom received wounds.

These Moplas are termed a caste, as if they were Hindus; they are in fact Mahomedans. The Moplas, or Mapillas, are the descendants of Arabs settled in Malabar, long before the Christian era,-probably the Sabæan colonies, mentioned by Agatharcides,* and converted by their countrymen to the religion of Mahomet, with which they blended Hindu habits and customs, some of them (as the law of succession) repugnant to the Koran. When the Portuguese first visited India, the Nairs and the Mapillas were amongst the most conspicuous classes of inhabitants on the Malabar coast.

The other incident to which we have alluded is a strange calamity which happened at Trichinopoly, whereby about 400 natives lost their lives.

It appears that the 21st of August was the anniversary of the Hindu festival of Pooliyar Choothee, or, as it is vulgarly termed, "Belly God Feast." Pooliyar, or Vighneswara, a name of Ganesa, according to the Abbé Dubois, + is one of the most universally adored deities: he is called "The God of Obstacles," and his image is seen everywhere, in temples, choultries, places of public resort, streets, highways, forts, by the side of streams and tanks, and generally in all frequented places. From time immemorial it has been the custom for all classes indiscriminately to be allowed, on this occasion, free access to the Fort Rock, on the summit of which the temple stands, when coco-nuts are broken, and offerings made to the elephant-headed deity. Thousands always avail themselves of the opportunity to gratify curiosity, obtain a fine view of the town and suburbs, and make holiday. Owing to the heat of the day, the ascent was deferred by the votaries until the afternoon, when crowds flocked thither. Amongst the dense masses ascending and descending, some confusion appears to have taken place about six o'clock, when a body of the votaries, packed together on the summit of the rock, fell in one mass upon those immediately below them, and those again upon the others occupying a lower position on the rock. The effects may be easily imagined; terror, the pressure of thousands trampling upon each other, and their efforts to escape, caused the suffocating of no less than 200 or 300 persons in the vicinity of the very shrine. From the time when the calamity occurred until long after midnight, the whole fort was a scene of confusion and horror. The authorities from the cantonment were soon on the spot. rendering assistance and restoring order. The main guard were stationed at the entrance of the rock, to prevent any further ingress or egress of hordes of natives collected around it. The total loss is estimated at between 300 and 500 persons.

The original cause of the occurrence is not explained. In the first instance it was attributed by the people to the police ameen and his department, who, contrary to usual custom, it was said, permitted the people to ascend and descend indiscriminately, and used some violence towards those on the top of the rock. But this officer, it appears, has been fully acquitted by the Collector. In a letter from Trichinopoly the writer says :- "I have often been up this rock, and from the place where these dismal deaths occurred, being a narrow, dark, and nearly perpendicular avenue, I am not surprised at the shocking occurrence. The only marvel is that the number of deaths did not prove greater, the confusion being so great, and the crowd so numerous." A correspondent of the Athenæum suggests another dreadful solution :-

'You are aware that the Hindoos attend their pagodas on festivals attired in all their jewels, and perhaps there may have been a conspiracy at the bottom of this horrible affair to obtain possession of these valuables. If my memory serves me right, the ascent to the pagoda on the rock of Trichinopoly takes a zig-zag direction, so that, should a party of people fall from above, they would be precipitated at once to the level of the ground. But on this occasion it would appear that by some new law in dynamics, the peopled wrig-gled through the most eccentric gyrations in toppling over the throng traversing the upward path behind them. They must, in fact, have shot round the corners, and described a course as curious as the magnetic currents which pass about the globe. Now, put in juxta-position with this case, another of which I will remind you. A few years ago some hundreds of natives, arrayed as usual in jewellery, were purposely capsized from boats in crossing the river at Cuddalore, likewise bound for a pagoda on a festival, and their per-sons stripped of all their treasures. The conspirators were none others than the native officials, among whom some were in high en ploy. The design was subsequently divulged through a squabble that arose among the plunderers in dividing the spoil, which induced one or more of the conspirators to inform against the others."

The China papers announce the murder of Senhor do-Amaral, the governor of Macao, by a party of Chinese, on the 22nd of August. It appears that this gentleman, accompanied by his aide-de-camp, was returning from hisusual ride in the afternoon, when, within 150 paces of the barrier gate, a Chinese boy presented him with a flower and then struck him with a bamboo twice. Senhor Amaral was expostulating with the boy, when he was attacked by five Chinamen with swords, who stabbed him in the side and back, and before he could draw a pistol from his holsters (having lost his right arm many years ago), he was thrown to the earth and despatched. The assassins cut off part of the head and the left hand, which they took away, effecting their escape in a boat waiting for them near the barrier. The aide-de-camp was severely wounded. This atrocity, which was perpetrated in the most daring manner, at a time when most of the foreign residents take exercise, is attributed to the offence given by Governor Amaral, whose policy is described in the Hong-Kong paper as "that of a bold ‡ Ganesa, according to Hindu mythology, was born of the excrement of Parvati, who made him her guard, in which capacity he was acting when the god Kumara cut off his head. Siva, grieved at the calamity, vowed that he would cut off the head of the first living creature he met with, and unite it to the trunk of Ganesa. The animal proved to be an elephant, the head of which was set on the neck of Pooliyar, who returned to life.

unscrupulous man, careless of the future, and determined to gratify the whim of the day, who was held up to public admiration as able, with only 450 soldiers, to dare the whole empire of China." It was known that rewards had been secretly offered at Canton for the Governor's head; hence no doubt was entertained at Macao that the murder had been instigated or connived at by the Chinese authorities.

"That the crime was arranged in Canton," observes the Friend of China, "scarcely admits of a doubt. The illused villagers of the campo were too poor to pay assassins who were above taking away gold watches; and had the deed been committed by themselves, the watch would not have been left behind, nor yet the head taken away. It is pretty certain that, twenty-four hours after the murder, the proofs were in possession of the Canton patriots, and gloated over even by Seu himself."

The Senate of Macao, three days after the murder, sent a detachment to take possession of the barrier gate, which they carried after a slight resistance; and a Chinese fort, having fired upon the Portuguese, was stormed and taken, seventy-four Chinese being killed, including a mandarin of small rank, whose head and left hand were cut off (in retaliation of the indignity offered to the Governor) and carried to Macao.

As soon as the intelligence of the assassination of the Governor reached Hong-Kong, her Majesty's ship Amazon and steamer Medea left Macao, for the protection of British subjects, and by their presence to give countenance and support to the Portuguese authorities. A French and two American vessels of war were at Macao for similar purposes. About sixty British marines were stationed on shore, and a party had charge of the Francisco fort. Marines from the American and French vessels had also landed.

It is to be lamented, for various reasons,—on political grounds as well as for the sake of humanity,—that the Portuguese should have resorted to acts of reprisal scarcely less cruel than the assassination of Senhor Amaral. The plain and proper course to have pursued was to represent the facts to the Chinese authorities, and demand justice. Instead of this, assuming that the government of China had prompted and justified the murder, they commenced hostilities, and even were guilty of a barbarous attack upon an unoffending woman. They have, in short, committed themselves, with an army of 450 men, and not a single ship, to a war with the Chinese empire, under circumstances which must weaken the sympathies, and even revolt the feelings, of other nations

THE ATTORNEY AND THE BARRISTER.

A squabble has taken place at Calcutta betwixt Mr. Cochrane, official assignee to the Supreme Court, and Mr. Newmarch, attorney-at-law, agent for the Maharanee late of Lahore. Mr. Newmarch and Sir Thos. Turton reside in the same house, and the former called on Mr. Cochrane, desiring to receive from him Rs. 5,000 claimed by Sir T. Turton as executor for the late firm of Palmer and Co., to be made over to parties who were creditors of the house. Mr. Cochrane declined to make payment without the presentation of probate and trust deeds; and Mr. Newmarch, conceiving this unsatisfactory, desired to know whether he would not do so by order of the Court, when Mr. Coclirane became warm, and said he would not trust Sir Thos. Turton, using an epithet much more correct than complimentary; adding, that no man associating with Sir Thomas could be considered a gentleman. Mr. Newmarch asked if he knew that he and Sir T. Turton occupied the same house, and if the remark was meant to apply to him? Mr. Cochrane assented, when Mr. Newmarch retired, and sent a friend to demand an explanation. -with the alternative, of course, of apologizing or fighting a duel. Mr. Cochrane declined either mode of satisfaction, and was straightway posted by Mr. Newmarch in the Town Hall and elsewhere as "a coward and an insolent bully," the society of whom gentlemen were to awoid. Mr. Cochrane's character is perfectly well known in Bombay: he is a vehement and warm mas, but as far as possible from being passionate or violent unless when provoked exceedingly; and the most impatient and worsttempered man in the world could not have flown out as he is reported to have done without much more provocation than he is made appear to have received. Of course, we think it was extremely undignified in Mr. Cochrane, as it is under any circumstances in any dignified public officer, to lose his temper with any man, under any provocation, who comes to him on a matter of business. Mr. Newmarch appeared before the official assignee as Sir Thomas Turton's agent, not as his friend, and Mr. Cochrame should have met the agent as assignee. The "head and front of his offending had this extent, no more." We can easily imagine a man of the most spotless integrity and utmost warmth of heart, with evidences presented to him every hour of the day of the villany of his predecessor, and the agonizing sufferings occasioned by it to the widow and the fatherless, the poor and the helpless, feeling such repugnance to the criminals or their associates as to shudder at and loathe their very presence: whatever Mr. Cochrane may have felt, the official assignee had no right to proclaim his feelings. Mr. Newmarch pursued the approved course of a man of the world: he sent a friend for a retraction of an offensive expression used in heat and haste,which he must have felt to be true not the less,-with the alternative of pistols. Of course, had both parties proceeded to the field in the company of friends, and fired their pistols in the air, both would have been pronounced, by the usual code, men of honour and gentlemen; had the one shot the other, the triumph of high principle would have been so perfect that Sir Thomas might have considered his foot once more on the first step for admission into the threshhold of society which his friend had entered. Mr. Newmarch boasts that he never turns his back on an old friend in trouble—that he had known Sir T. Turton in his prosperity, and clings to him in his adversity. It is not Sir Thomas's misfortunes, but his guilt, that has made the world turn its back upon him: we have no right to persecute or punish each other even for our mutual misdeeds. Mr. Newmarch would be only acting the part of the good Samaritan in relieving the miseries of his fallen friend: to give him his countenance or company, or do more than assist him as a detected criminal, is to lead the world to imagine the existence of a sympathy with want of virtue, which virtuous men will not pardon. Were Sir To Turton to demand "the satisfaction of a gentleman," he would assuredly be refused it: why should his friend expect a greater privilege? Mr. Newmarch, we are bound to suppose, believed Sir T. Turton an honest man in the days of his prosperity; now he knows him to have been a knave,-and there all connection ought to end. A woman who kept company with another denounced and proved to have been a courtezan, on the plea of intimacy before her guilt was exposed, would be refused access to society: how then is the intimate friend of a detected swindler to expect the treatment of a gentleman? - Bombay

THE CIVIL SERVICE ANNUITY FUND.

We have been given to understand that a large body of the Bombay civil service has under consideration an application to the Court of Directors relative to the annuity fund. bay civil annuity fund was placed on its present footing by the Court of Directors twenty-five years ago. The pension was fixed at 1,000l. a year after twenty-five years' service. One-half this sum was a free service pension; the other half, or 500l. was to be paid for by the annuitant, by a monthly contribution from his allowances, amounting in the aggregate to Sic. Rs. 50,000. It was calculated at the time by the Court of Directors, that a deduction of four per cent. from the monthly salaries of their servants at compound interest, and at the favourable rate allowed them, would realize the sum of Rs. 50,000 within the prescribed period. There has now been twenty-five years' experience of the working of the fund and the result is the total and shearly dispersion to find and the result is the total and shearly dispersion to find and the result is the total and shearly dispersion to find and the result is the total and shearly dispersion to find the result is the total and shearly dispersion to find the result is the total and shearly dispersion to find the result is the total and shearly dispersion to find the result is the total and shearly dispersion. fund, and the result is the total and absolute disappointment of the hopes which were based upon it. Owing to the reduction of offices and of salaries, and the slowness of promotion, men belonging to the Bombay service who have recently retired after completing a period exceeding that required for the pension, instead of finding that the monthly deduction from their allowances has made up the sum of Rs. 50,000, have been required to pay from Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 40,000. We understand that there are many who have completed their term of service, but from the want of private means are unable to pay the large sum required of them for the annuity. There are others, from fifteen to twenty years' standing, now holding subordinate appointments, with little prospect of reaching the head of an office within the prescribed period of their service in this country, and who have not paid up a fourth or a fifth of the requisite sum of half a lac of rupees. Nine annuities are now without a claimant.

We believe the same may be said of the Bengal civil service. A large proportion of its members will not have paid up the full amount, by the usual deductions, in the twenty-five years of service, and will find it very difficult to make good the sum which entitles them to the pension. And, it is made good with a heavy heart, for the continuance of the pension is entirely dependent on their own individual existence; and their families may cease to derive any benefit from it at any moment. More-over, the sum they contribute for the 500L would in any insurance office purchase them, we believe, about 630l. a year. But it is to the impossibility of the great body of civilians paying up the full amount of contribution under the altered circumstances of the country, that we would direct attention. civilian who passes through the usual grades of magistrate, collector and judge, will be found to have contributed by the deduction of four per cent. from his salary, less than Rs. 20,000 towards the sum of Rs. 50,000 which he is expectd to make up. Nor must it be forgotten that the tendency of circumstances points to the probability of a reduction of the present scale of allowances, rather than to its remaining untouched. Mail announces a deficit of a million sterling a year in the income of India—and that in the first year of peace. If popular report be entitled to credit, this is rather under than above the actual deficit; and it now appears inevitable that the East India Company will be obliged to meet Parliament at the close of the present charter with the exhibition of an awkward annual deficiency, and that the question of a very material reduction in the expenses of the public establishments will be forced on the consideration of the home authorities. In the event of any such reduction, the civil service cannot expect to be exempted from the operation of the financial shears. It appears, therefore, evident that the capacity of the members of the service to make good the whole sum required under the existing rules for the pension, will be rather diminished than increased with the progress of time.

If we have not been misinformed, there is a clause in the letter of the Court constituting the fund, that this sum of Rs. 50,000 shall be open to adjustment at the end of twenty-five years. That period has now arrived, and the members of the Bombay civil service propose to address the Court on the subject, in the hope of obtaining such a modification of the annuity rules as may appear to be adapted to the altered circumstances of the times. If, through the reduction of allowances, a civilian is unable to purchase the 500l. annuity, ought he to forfeit the 500l. pension which he is entitled to for twenty-five years' service? If the sum of Rs. 50,000 is found to be an erroneous calculation, ought he not to obtain an annuity equal to the sum which has been actually accumulated by his subscription of twenty-five years,—in addition to the pension of 500l, which the Court grants after a quarter of a century of services? This appears to be both equitable in itself, and calculated to benefit the service. Those who have been enabled to pay up the full amount would receive the unbroken annuity of 1,000L a year. Those who choose to remain in the service after twenty-five years' service with the view of completing the contribution of Rs. 50,000 will be at liberty to do so; while those who, from failure of health, or spirits, or from motives of family convenience, are anxious to retire with the pension their contributions entitle them to, will be enabled to quit the service, generally, with 750L a year. We would, therefore, recommend a combined effort on the part of the services at the three presidencies, to bring the subject under the consideration of the Court of Directors at the earliest period, with the view of obtaining a more equitable settlement of the question, and a modification of the rule, that no man is at liberty to enjoy the pension of 500L a year to which his service entitles him, unless he has been able to contribute the value of another annuity, of equal amount, from his own exertions.—Friend of India, Sept. 6.

THE BENGAL MILITARY FUND.

A special General Meeting of the Subscribers of the above Fund assembled in the Town Hall yesterday, for the considera-tion of a special question. What this question was, was, at first, matter of dispute between the Subscribers and Directors present. It appears that the Fund has lost £2,918 by the failure of Cockerell, Larpent, & Co., of London, and the officers of the 18th N.I. have proposed that the Management should submit the circumstances connected with the loss, to the Army at large, with a view to determining the point, whether or not, Major Doveton, the Home Agent of the Fund, is to blame for the loss, in having failed to recover the amount from Cockerell, Larpent, & Co., who held it as a cash balance to the credit of the Fund for above fifteen months. Prior to the proposed reference, it is necessary, under the 39th Rule of the Fund, that the subject, and the correspondence and documents connected with it, should be published twice a month in each of the daily newspapers of the Presidency. The papers connected with the loss in question are very voluminous; and the Managers, seeing that their publication would involve considerable expense, dethe expediency of suspending, for this particular case, the operation of the clause in the rule requiring publication. The Directors, it seems, subscribed to a written requisition to this effect; but, somehow or another, an advertisement was published in the newspapers stating that "the President and Dinisned in the newspapers stating that "the President and Directors of the Military Fund conceived it necessary to submit to the general body of subscribers at or near the presidency, certain circumstances connected with the loss, &c." When the meeting was opened yesterday, none of the newspapers happeded to be in the room, and Captain Bracken contended that the only question the meeting had to consider, was, whether the clause in Rule 20th preparating publication, should be had a leave in Rule 20th preparating publication, should be had a leave in Rule 20th preparating publication, should be had a leave in Rule 20th preparating publication, should be had a leave in Rule 20th preparating publication, should be had a leave in Rule 20th preparating publication, should be had a leave in Rule 20th preparating publication, should be had a leave in Rule 20th preparating publication, should be had a leave in Rule 20th preparating publication. clause in Rule 39th respecting publication, should be held in abeyance in this particular case:—while the others insisted that according to the published advertisement, the conduct of Major Doveton, as regarded the loss, was also matter for present discussion. One of the newspapers was sent for, and Captain Bracken, upon reading the advertisement published, agreed in this view, and the following were the resolutions which, after very stormy and very lengthy discussions, were submitted to, and disposed of by the meeting :-

"Proposed by Colonel Sage as follows—It appears to this meeting that Major Doveton received charge of the home office from Messrs. Cockerell and Co. in December, 1845. In July, 1846, having previously stated that he had been refused the papers and books, he said he had not got the cash from them, and he hoped the Directors would take steps to coerce the balance of 2,9184. 9s. 9d. to be paid to the Court of Directors. The Directors did not reply, but noted that it would be time enough to take steps when their accounts from the Court of Directors showed the money had not been paid. Messrs. Cockerell & Co. failed in September, 1847; but it does not appear that within this period of fifteen months any other measures were taken by Major Doveton; and the meeting cannot therefore acquit him of indifference, if not indolence, in conducting the affairs of the society. The meeting are further of opinion that, in a pecuniary point of view, the onus is removed from Major Doveton to the President and Directors of that day, whose names are as follows:—

Major Wroughton.

Rev. Mr. Fisher. Rev. Mr. Ruspini. Rev. Mr. Eteson. Rev. Mr. Charles. Major Boscawen. Major Wintle. Major J. Ramsay. Major Marshall. Major Rutherford,—

Captain R. Ramsay.
to whom the army must look for the sum lost—viz. 2,9181. 9s. 9d.
This motion was not seconded, and fell to the ground.

Proposed by Captain Thuillier, seconded by Captain Bracken -- That the immediate cause of this meeting having been called, consisting in certain letters from Lieut. Col. Mackenzie and the officers of the 18th Regt. N.I., these documents be read to the meeting."

The correspondence was read.

Proposed by Capt. Bracken, and seconded by Dr. Montgomerrie—" That the expense of carrying out the wishes of the officers of the 18th regiment, as to the circulation to the army of their proposition, with the whole of the papers connected with the subject, would be very enormous; and, as the provisions of Rule 39 would throw the expense upon these officers, the said provisions be suspended in the present instance."

Moved as an amendment by Col. Sage, that the printing of the papers on the subject he deferred, until the army have the opportunity of seeing in the public papers the several resolutions of this day, when, should the 18th regiment still desire that they should be circulated for the votes of the army, the Directors will take the necessary steps to meet their wishes; the provisions of Rule 39 being suspended, to save expenses; and that the Secretary be directed to communicate this resolution with the proceedings of this meeting to Col Mackenzie and the officers of the 18th regiment-Carried by a majority.

Proposed by Col. Sage, and seconded by Capt. Gaitskell-That at all meetings, whether of directors or subscribers, special and ordinary, of the Military Fund, reporters from the several newspapers shall be admitted.

Moved as an amendment by Capt. Bracken, and seconded by Col. Handscombe—That it be left to the discretion of the directors to decide whether at their ordinary meetings they admit reporters or not.-Carried by a majority.

Proposed by Capt. Thuillier, seconded by Capt. Fraser-That the documents relating to the part taken in this matter by the agent of the Fund in England having been considered, this meeting desires to record its perfect confidence in Major Doveton, and approves of his conduct throughout,-Carried by all, except three, among whom was Col. Sage, who put in the following protest against the resolution :-

"I protest-because the last line of the resolution is not borne out by the record-i.e. from July, 1816, to September, 1817, in which he did not, according to the record, do any thing to save the balance of 2,918/.

WM. SAGE."

The meeting would not allow the protest to be put upon record.—Bengal Hurkaru, Aug. 29.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Expanss, with English news to July 24, reached Calcutta on September 1, and the steamer with the mails on the following day.

The Punjar. - There appears to be a general impression among the officers employed in the Punjab that the strength of national opposition in that country is broken; that the hope of successful resistance, which so soon decays in India, has already begun to die out, and that it will be our own fault if we allow any nucleus of rebellion to be formed by the old Khalsa soldiers, or if we fail to conciliate the great body of the people, and enlist them on our side by the justice and moderation of our administration. The papers announce that the Governor-General has sanctioned, or is about to sanction, the construction of roads and canals upon a large scale. We have reason to believe that the information is perfectly correct, and that we shall at no distant period hear of improvements which will raise the envy of the residents in Bengal. It is a noble beginning of our career in the Punjab, to emulate the Romans in the construction of roads; and it is wise to make so beneficent an appropriation of the revenues of that country before they come to be incorporated with the annual "ways and means" of India. Whenever that may be the case, there will probably be just as contemptible a spirit of parsimony exhibited regarding the expenditure of revenue on improvements in the Punjab, as we have to lament in reference to Bengal and Behar, where the British Government expends the magnificent sum of about onequarter per cent. per annum of the revenues on local improvements. - Friend of India.

GLOSTER MILLS. - The Gloster Mills Company, at their meeting yesterday, declared a dividend of nineteen per cent. per annum, after putting aside five per cent. for the improvement of the machinery.—Eastern Star, Aug. 18.

AGRA BANK.—At the last half-yearly meeting of the Agra Bank a dividend of eight per cent. was declared. The operations of the past half year would have allowed of a dividend of ten per cent. and a fraction, but the surplus amounting to nearly a lakh of rupees has been judiciously added to the reserve.

SIB CHUNDER MULLICK, who has so long succeeded in eluding the police, has surrendered himself; he was bound over by Mr. Hume in his own recognizances of Rs. 20,000 to appear and answer the charge of forgery on an appointed day.

LORD DALHOUSIE has, it is said, determined upon the abolition of the export duties, but the question must be referred to the decision of the home government.

Superintendent of Stamps - An investigation is going on into certain alleged malpractices in the office of the superintendent of stamps; Mr. E. Currie, of the C.S., is conducting the inquiry with closed doors.

A FAST PASSAGE. - We observe the Minden reported from Gravesend the 5th June, or in eighty-six days only! This we believe to be the fastest passage on record. The Medusa frigate arrived here some years ago in eighty-four days from Ports-mouth, and the Wellington, coming a singular route, viz. eastward of the Cape de Verds and up the Mozambique channel, arrived, in 1829 or 1830, in eighty days from the Land's End; but neither of these seems to be so good a passage as the Minden's. - Hurkaru, Sept. 1.

TROOPS FOR ALLAHABAD.—The Government vessels Lord William Bentinck and Soane, Hoorungotta and Luckia, proceeded yesterday morning from Prinsep's Ghat with a detachment of the 75th for Allahabad. The troops that came out in the Lord Dalhousie also proceeded by steam yesterday morning for Chinsurali. The depôt there will, when these men arrive, be tolerably full, we suppose. - Hurkaru, Sept. 1.

A BATCH OF AUSTRALIAN HORSES were sold on the 1st September, averaging Rs. 537.

THE PILOT SERVICE.—Capt. Rogers's proposed modifications in the pilot service are approved by the Court of Directors. This will abolish the monopoly, and throw the pilotage of the river open to private enterprise.—Englishman.

Tigens are so abundant in Singapore, that the authorities have made a requisition to the Bengal government for a few professional tiger-killers.

A JESSORE CORRESPONDENT says, that Jessore has never known such a favourable season for indigo as the present; that almost every factory has averaged 25 per cent. beyond its usual out-turn; and that all the Bengal Indigo Company's concerns in Kishnaghur have done wonders.

DR. GOODEVE. -- If we are to judge from the tone of various meetings of the members of the medical service up the country, there is very little chance of this gentleman's claim for a pension being granted. - Hurkaru.

GRAVEVARD AND MONUMENT OF CHILLIANWALLAH. - The sum of five thousand rupees has been subscribed and paid for the construction of a graveyard and monument on the battlefield of Chillianwallah.

A Govindghur letter mentions an extraordinary accident; Lieutenant Bowles, of the 61st N. I., fell out of the window when asleep, on to a heap of round shot, and broke his right leg. - Englishman.

THE POLICE. - Mr. B. W. McCannah, who has recently been officiating for Mr. McCann, has been removed from that post by Mr. Law, and a Mr. Campbell, late a lieutenant in the army, has been appointed in his stead. Mr. McCannah still retains, however, his appointment of a deputy-superintendent of one of the three divisions of the town. It is rumoured, that Mr. Wylie will succeed Major Birch, as senior magistrate, and that Mr. Reddie will take Mr. Wylie's place in the Court of Requests.

MILITARY ORPHAN SOCIETY.—The following resolutions by the management of the Military Orphan Society are in circulation to the army for its approval:

" Proposed by Dr. Mouat and seconded by Captain Bracken

"The general management having heard of the death of their late secretary, the Rev. John McQueen, desire to place on record the high sense entertained by them of his zeal and ability during the long time he served them.

"Also that the Rev. T. Wood be appointed to the office on the full salary of Co.'s Rs. 500 (five hundred) per mensem from the date of the decease of the late incumbent.

"Also that all privileges heretofore attached to the office, in regard to the farm and other matters not included in the salary above-mentioned, cease at once—and that the adjustment of all questions respecting the resumption of the farm be referred to the special committee now engaged in investigating the affairs of the Orphan Gunge. Likewise that the appointment be published in the usual manner and communicated to Government, and that the nomination of the Rev. Mr. Wood to the appointment of secretary to the Lower Orphan School be notified to Government in accordance with former piecedents-which resolutions having been adopted by the meeting,

Ordered to print and circulate them for the information of the subscribers to the fund.'

THE POLICE COMMISSIONERS held a private inquiry on Satur-They examined the wife of Inspector Purney, but the examination was understood to be private, and reporters were not present. It is said that Mrs. Purney made some statements concerning Mr. Farrell. During the remainder of the sitting, the Commissioners were engaged in examining records, accounts, and other documents bearing upon the matters that come within the scope of their inquiry. It may be mentioned that, although the Commissioners do not see the necessity of continuing their public examinations, they are still ready and willing to accept, with open doors, the statement of any party who has information to tender that is germane to the nature and object of their commission.—Hurkaru, Aug. 20.

TAMPERING WITH THE ARMY OR NAVY .- An Act has passed the legislative council for the punishment of persons endeavouring to stir up mutiny and sedition among the forces of the East-India Company, or to seduce them from their allegiance and duty, by which it is enacted, "that every person, who maliciously and advisedly endeavours to seduce any person or persons, serving or engaged to serve in the military or naval forces of the East-India Company, from his or their allegiance to Her Majesty, or duty to the Company, or who endeavours to stir up any person or persons belonging to either of the said services, to commit any act of mutiny, or to make or endeavour to make any mutinous assembly, or to commit any traitorous or mutinous practice whatsoever, shall, on conviction, suffer transportation for life, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for any term, not longer than seven years, as the Court shall adjudge;" and that "any person charged with any offence, punishable under this Act, may be committed by any magistrate within the territories under the government of the East-India Company, and shall be tried by the Court of Sessions, or if the offender be not within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court of Sessions, by the Supreme Court of Judicature, established by royal charter within the presidency in which he is in custody.'

A detachment of H.M.'s 75th foot, landed from the Nile on Monday morning, August 20, and marched into the fort.

THE MOOLTAN PRIZE MONEY will not, it is now said, amount to more than fourteen lakhs of rupees in the aggregate. The ransom of the town has been altogether remitted.

AT THE OPIUM SALE held Sept. 4, Patna averaged Rs. 1,005, and Benares Rs. 1,006; this is an increase of Rs. 21 on Patna, and 14 on Benares over the last sale. The proceeds of the sale were about thirty and a half lakhs.

THE ARMY of the Punjab will, the Calcutta paper states, get six months' batta.

THE RELIEF may be expected out immediately, and it is said that it will remove from the Punjab every native corps now in that province. The relieving regiments are not to receive the extra allowances hitherto issued to the troops who went into the country as on foreign service; and thus the government will be saved an expenditure of, it is said, thirty lakhs a year, and the danger of a further display of insubordination will be averted. Our contemporary of Delhi remarks, that if these allowances had been curtailed from the time at which the Punjab became a province of our empire, something would have been saved to enable the government to grant a batta donation to the army, for which he fears there is under present circumstances but little reason to hope.—Hurkaru.

THE PUNJAB .- We have intelligence that six corps of infantry and two of cavalry, each of 1,000 Punjabees, are to be raised in the civil department. They are, we are told, to be commanded by a commissioned officer, with a warrant officer as an adjutant, to be in fact on the same footing as the police battalions of Lord Ellenborough in these provinces. We have also heard of some intention to form a horse battery, of which Lieut. Bowie is to have the command, but are not so sure on this point.—Delhi Gazette, Aug. 25.

PESHAWUR. - The hill tribes do not seem at all inclined to follow the peaceable line of conduct they professed themselves anxious for, and we shall not be surprised to learn that the local authorities will have thought it necessary to recommend their being chastised during the ensuing cold weather, and compelled by force to abandon their present predatory habits and inclinations. Lieut. Pollock had been shot at on his way to his district, Bunnoo, and the baggage of Lieut. Dansey, on the way up from Mooltan to Peshawur, was plundered when within thirty or forty miles of the latter place. A party of irregular infantry and cavalry, sent out to watch the plunderers, were attacked; the infantry got in rear of the enemy, and the result was that the party sent in, on the 10th August, two heads, one man severely wounded in four places, and two prisoners .- Delhi Guzette, Aug. 25.

ASSIST .- SURGEON EDWARD EDLIN, M.D.

Head-Quarters, Simla, 4th August, 1849 .- At a general courtmartial assembled at Secrole, Benares, July 16, 1849, Assist.-Surg. Edlin, M.D., dep. apoth. to the E. I. Co., and opium examiner, was arraigned on the following charge: - For highly unbecoming conduct, in having, at Benares, on May 15, 1849, in the presence of several gentlemen, addressed Capt. C. G. Fagan, dep. paymaster at Benares, in highly abusive language, accusing him of "lying and cheating;" in having several times repeated the same abusive expressions, although remonstrated with by some of the gentlemen present, and treated with great forbearance by Capt. Fagan; and in having, when left by that officer and other gentlemen, called out to Capt. Fagan—"remember, you have been publicly insulted," or used words to that effect. Finding-Guilty.

Sentence-To be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances for six calendar months.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Aug. 4, 1849 .- At a general courtmartial assembled at Lahore, July 16, 1849, Lieut. J. W. Eccles, of the 2nd Eur. regt., was arraigned on the following charge:-For unbecoming conduct, in having, at Lahore, on May 9, 1849, without having received any provocation, struck Shaik Furreed, in the employ of Nubbeebux and Company, native merchants, a violent blow on the face.

Finding-Guilty.

G. G. O., No. 189, dated 29th August, 1805. G. G. O., dated 4th March, 820 G. G. O., No. 118, dated 18th June, 1827.

Confirmed.

(Signed) C. J. NAPIER, General, C.-in-C. Head Quarters, July 28, 1849.

Remarks-I consider that Lieutenant Eccles has made a very weak defence-so weak that it amounts to none at all, and he is sentenced to be reprimanded. He is therefore reprimanded accordingly, and admonished not to break the peace in future.

Lieutenant Eccles is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

LIEUT. FREDERIC VALENTINE DE MOLE, 2ND EUR. N.I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Aug. 4, 1849.—At a general court-martial, July 19, 1849, Lieut. F. V. De Mole, 2nd Eur. regt. was arraigned on the following charge:—For highly unbecoming conduct, in the following instances:-

MARKETS.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 7.—A good demand for nearly all descriptions of the more useful Manchester Cloths. Grey Shirtings of all sorts have sold largely, but demand has been chiefly for best kinds. White Shirtings and Jaconets, in fine qualities, have been in good request, but common makes are somewhat lower in value. Prints and Coloured Goods generally have been doing well; some of the lighter Glasgow fabrics, being scarce, realized high prices, whilst others continue much neglected. Mule Twist has not shown much alteration; 30s. and common 40s. are, however, a shade lower in value, and not easy to sell, while 50s. and upwards are in good demand at former rates. The improvement noticed respecting Metals was of very short duration, and at the present time the market is dull for all sorts.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT.

Trichinopoly, Aug. 22.-A circumstance of an alarming and very fatal kind occurred here yesterday, which deserves to be recorded. It being the celebration of the annual Hindoo festival of Pooleyarchouthy, or Belly god feast—as it is vulgarly denominated—thousands of deluded votaries, of both sexes and of all ages, ascended the rock in the fort about four o'clock in the afternoon, to pay their poojah and break coco-nuts before the filthy idol, whose temple stands on the summit of the rock. At 6 P.M. or thereabouts, from the dense masses ascending and descending, some confusion and jostling appears to have taken place, when in an instant a column of the topmost worshippers fell on those immediately below them, and these again on others occupying a lower position on the rock, until from confusion and running, and pressing and suffocation, upwards of 200 individuals lost their lives in the vicinity of the shrine of the idol; who, as it proved, had not power enough, or wit enough, to interpose and save them. The appearance of the rock from below represented that of a hive of bees, only that the swarms of men were not collected for purposes of industry, so much as from motives of idle curiosity, superstition, and fanaticism. Whilst we will not attempt to give a reason for this terrible and destructive Providence (God's paths are in the sea and his footsteps in the great deep), may we not indulge in reflecting on the utter impotence of idols-the work of men's hands-to do their admirers any benefit even at a season of the most fatal calamity! Whilst we are assured that though clouds and darkness are round about him, yet justice and judgment are the habitation of Jehovah's throne, may we not pause and wonder at the infatuation of our fellow-creatures, in persisting to rob the lord of his glory, and to lavish their unmeaning worship on an ugly and disgusting looking dumb idol! Ye intelligent Hindoos that read this be amazed and cover your faces with shame. May we not go a step further, and without pretending to explain the providence, affirm that this was a righteous rebuke of the wretched multitudes, who by their conduct on that fatal evening were render-ing themselves very gross and stupid and vile! From the time of the calamity happening, till long after midnight, the whole fort was one scene of confusion, of horror and dismay. It was a night long to be remembered at Trichinopoly. The authorities from the cantonment were soon on the spot rendering assistance and restoring order. The main guard were stationed at the entrance of the rock to prevent any further ingress or egress of hordes of natives who were collected around it.

Those from without were yelling and inquiring at the pitch of their voice after the safety of their companions on the rock, whilst a few voices from within responded to their yells. And what was the Belly god doing all this while? Why, like Baal of old, he was talking, or pursuing, or perhaps was sleeping with his long proboscis quietly resting on his protruding stomach. He heard little, and cared less about what was going on around The living men on the spot rendered more assistance to the unhappy sufferers than the dead, dumb idol, whose own helplessness appeared to his confusion. The lascars of the arsenal. under the able direction of Conductor Beamont and Serjeant Fox, were actually engaged in removing the dead into the street, who, as they were brought out, were carried away by their relatives for the purpose of burning. Some corpses were so fearfully mangled and disfigured, that they could not be recognized by their surviving relatives. In two hours, viz., from ten to twelve at night, nearly 150 bodies are said to have been counted, not reckoning those that had been carried away before, and those that still remained to be brought down from the fatal rock. For hours together nothing was heard but lamentation, and mourning and woe. The night resembled that when the destroying angel swept over Egypt and slew all the first born of that devoted land.

Up to ten o'clock this morning the dead were being carried away in carts, and so great was their number that bratties sufficient could not be found to burn them. The ascertained number of corpses from the collector's office is said to be 250, but the more probable amount is between 300 and 500, at the lowest The cause of this serious loss of life is attributed reckoning. by the people to the police ameen and his department, who, contrary to usual custom, permitted the people to ascend and descend indiscriminately, and used some violence towards those on the top of the rock, which terminated in the disaster we have here recorded. But this officer, it appears, has been fully acquitted by the collector, and the melancholy catastrophe rests with the multitude themselves. If we are to believe a few enthusiasts, a little deity in the corner of the temple was in high dudgeon with the crowd for seeming indifference manifested towards him, and hence the series of calamities that followed. It was not the vulgar only that suffered, but Brahmins also, and high caste men in abundance fell victims to their ill-directed zeal. We have often been up this rock ourselves, and, from the place where these dismal deaths occurred being a narrow, dark, and nearly perpendicular avenue, are not surprised at the shocking occurrence we have been relating. The only marvel is that the number of deaths did not prove greater, the confusion being so great, the crowd so numerous, and the Belly god so unable to afford assistance .-Athenæum August 28.

The following is a later account, dated Trichinopoly, Aug. Independent of those who met with serious accidents, upwards of three hundred lives were lost in a certain obscure part of the passage up the rock, in less than fifteen minutes, from suffocation and violent collision. The loss of life would have been still greater but for the timely closing of a door at the place where the accident happened, which was the means of saving from destruction several hundreds, who would otherwise have forced their way through, and endangered their lives. The 21st August was the day on which the Hindoo festival, Pillayar Chautty, was celebrated; and according to a custom which has existed from time immemorial, people of all classes indiscriminately were allowed on the occasion free access to the summit of the rock, where an offering of plaintains, coco-nuts, &c. is usually made by the Hindoo portion of them to the Pillayar, or Elephant-headed-god; the other natives availed themselves of the opportunity to go up the rock, to gratify their curiosity, as well as to enjoy a panoramic sight of the town and its suburbs. Owing to the oppressive state of the weather on the day, and conscious of the disagreeableness of walking barefoot part of the way on the heated surface of the rock, most of the people deferred going up until after 4 P.M. This of necessity increased the density of the crowd in the evening, and rendered the ascent a task of no easy performance. Although fully sensible of the very great inconvenience of ascending the rock in company with the mob on a day like the one in question, yet, we could hardly perceive how the accident had occurred. Surely some mystery hangs over the origin of this most grievous affair, notwithstanding the various stories that attempt a solution. The report of the accident was no sooner spread than it excited a general alarm—the whole town was up -people thronged to the foot of the rock—whole families repaired thither, yelling out heart-rending cries, anxious to know the fate of such of their members as had gone up. The main guard turned out, sentries were posted at the gate of the rock and in other parts to prevent the mob ascending; the field officer of the day and the collector came up with all possible haste; in a few minutes afterwards, they were followed by the brigadier and some doctors-but, alas! human efforts availed nought. The dead were found heaped on the steps, grappling each other, and in frightful attitudes! In a family, consisting of six persons, but one child survived to tell the tale; in another, the husband, wife, sister, brother, have all perished; in a third, mother and child; in a fourth, father and his son, and so forth. From five in the evening of the 21st and all next day, the interior of the fort and its immediate vicinity presented a sad, gloomy, and dismal spectacle. In whatever direction we turned our eyes, we saw dead bodies carried like dead sheep, in carts and litters, surrounded with relatives and friends, absorbed in grief.

AFFRAY WITH THE MOPLAS.

We regret to learn that a sad affair has taken place on the western coast, between some Moplas and a detachment of the 43rd N I., in which Ensign Wyse, of that corps, lost his life. The particulars of the occurrence are as follow:

On the 27th ult. thirty fanatics of the above caste, who had been committing murders and other enormities at Malliapooram, the scene of a former mishap of a similar nature, when part of the 5th N.I. came into contact with some of these desperadoes, betook themselves to a strongly-built stone mosque, and bade defiance to the police. Upon this, the civil authorities called for the aid of the detachment of the 43rd at Malliapooram, under the command of Captain Watts, who accordingly sent out a party of sixty men, under Ensign Wyse, with the view of dislodging them; he himself following with another party of equal strength. When the first of these detachments approached the mosque, fifteen of the men within it issued forth; five being armed with knives fastened to their wrist, five having spears, and five carrying matchlocks, and proceeded to march down the hill on which it is situated, for the purpose of meeting the advancing force. As they drew near, the sepoys fired ineffectually, without receiving orders, and then, shameful to relate, turned and fled, leaving Ensign Wyse, who had stepped out alone to meet the foremost Mopla, with only a jemadar and a few faithful men-five, we believe, was their number-to encounter the fanatic band. The young officer cut down the man who first attacked him, but was wounded by a second, who in his turn succumbed to the bayonet of a sepoy. The number of the Moplas, however, gave them a fatal advantage, and poor Ensign Wyse and the six men with him, were speedily put to death. Captain Watts did all in his power to rally the fugitives, but without success, and he was eventually compelled to retire to the cutcherry, with the Assistant-Collector, for the protection of the treasury. Under these lamentable circumstances, it was thought advisable by the authorities to obtain the aid of European troops, and two hundred of H.M.'s 94th regiment, commanded by Major Dennis, having with them two guns, were to start on the afternoon of the 30th ult. for Malliapooram. - Spectator, Sept. 4.

The Athenæum, Sept. 13, states, that the Moplas were completely routed, and sixty-four of their number killed; the loss on the side of the 94th being only three killed and two wounded. Of the officers Major Dennis and Lieut. Vaughan were wounded.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE Express with the London Mail of the 7th August reached Madras early on the morning of the 10th September.

ARTHER MACDONALD RITCHIE, Esq. was appointed, on the 1st September, to be sheriff of Madras for the remainder of the year, consequent on the resignation of R. Burgass, Esq.

THE MADRAS ADDITIONAL CLERGY SOCIETY, Instituted but a few months ago, has already secured its first clergyman, a proof of vitality which shows that the example of the Calcutta Society has excited a highly creditable emulation.

A Public Museum of Economic Geology is to be formed at Madras, under the sanction of the government, with a staff officer as curator, on a salary of Rs. 500.

MADRAS RAILWAY,-The affairs of our railway have reached that bourne to which the majority of Madras enterprises speedily arrive, and from which they too seldom return, the region of dormancy. A partial survey of the proposed line, from Madras as far as Poonamallee, a distance of thirteen miles, has been made at a very trifling expense; and this is the ultimatum of the labours of the Madras committee. We hope that none of our contemporaries will ask, for the next three months at least, what the committee of the Madras Railway are doing, because if they do, we shall find it very difficult to give them an answer. They have dismissed their surveying establishment, the cost of which was, at the outside, Rs. 500 monthly, and placed the scheme entirely in statu quo for the next six months. We can fully acquiese in the propriety of delay so far as the organization of the company at home is in question, but why the local committee should not have availed themselves of the opportunity of fine weather to complete the plans and surveys for half the distance of the intended line, is a question which can only be answered by a reference to the history of former attempts in the way of public improvement. The cost of the work would be so very trifling that the projectors of the railway could hardly be expected to give it a second thought, and the necessity of keeping it continually in the eye of the public should have had no small weight with the enthusiastic gentlemen who got up the meeting at Government House in May last. In the meantime the ordinary lines of traffic continue in a deplorable state of neglect and inefficiency. - Athenaum, Sept. 13.

MR. SHERIFF BURGASS .- We are concerned to hear that Mr. Sheriff Burgass is compelled by the state of his health to make arrangements for going home by an early vessel. Mr. Burgass was thrown from his buggy in January last, and received an injury on the spine, from the effects of which he has languished ever since. He returns to Europe in the hope of getting increased medical aid, and if fortunate enough to obtain permanent relief, will no doubt come back again to this country, where fair opportunities of public employment properly await him. -Athenæum.

Suicide of H. C. Arrow, Esq.—The Spectator gives the following particulars of a tragical occurrence, as yet unexplained, which has ended in the death of H. C. Arrow, Esq., of Hyderabad. The unfortunate gentleman was coming down by water from Sooloorpett, and being in his palanquin, on the night of the 21st August, and when off Coromandel, he in some manner discharged a pistol, of which a brace were with him loaded, and mortally wounded himself in the body. His bearers and servants, who accompanied him on board the boat, heard the report of the weapon, and hastened to his assistance, but he was either dead or dying. The remains of Mr. Arrow were interred at Pulicat. Another version of this unfortunate affair is more confirmatory:-An inquest was holden on the body of the deceased gentleman, which arrived at the conclusion that he committed suicide during mental aberration. Information, drawn from other sources, has fully justified this verdict, as the deceased had long been subject to occasional fits of depression, consequent on hallucinations, which excited the alarm of his friends.

THE CHINGLEPUT POTTERY. - The Athenaum states that an offer has been made by a firm in Madras to take the Chingleput Pottery off the hands of Government at a fair valuation. It is hoped that Government will not fail to mark their sense of the talents and perseverance which have brought the establishment to its present state of perfection.

-The Athenceum considers that the present law of bankruptcy affords too many facilities to the contractors of dishonest obligations, and brings forward in support of the assertion the following facts. No less than sixty-two bankrupts have taken the benefit of the Act at Madras during the first six months of the present year, the aggregate amount of whose debts, as per schedule, was Rs. 2,20,059, against which, they showed nominal assets to the sum of only Rs. 37,680, and even of that, the assignee has realized no more than Rs. 360 0 6!

DOCTORS WIGHT AND HUNTER. - Dr. Wight has resigned the charge of the cotton farms to the acting principal collector of Coimbatore. The doctor memorialized the Court of Directors to sanction the continuance of his salary as superintendent of cotton farms until otherwise provided for, but Governme at has resolved to replace his services at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief, permitting him to draw the allowances of superintendent until he resume charge of his professional duties. -A correspondent in the interior states that Dr. Hunter expects to find coal in the neighbourhood of Chingleput, and is engaged in making diligent search for it.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

Fort St. George, Sept. 11, 1849. - The privilege enjoyed by general officers commanding divisions of the army of being absent on leave during the prescribed periods, and within the limits of this presidency, without forfeiting any portion of their staff salaries, being, under the orders* of the Honourable the Court of Directors, conditional upon no extra expense being, in consequence of such absence, entailed upon the state,-Right Honourable the Governor in Council is pleased to direct the substitution of the following clauses for the first clause of paragraph 3, "Absence," section 9th, page 133, of the Code of Pay and Audit Regulations :-

* Vide G. O. G., No. 35 of 1835.

" General officers commanding divisions when absent on leave from their commands, but within the limits of this presidency, during the prescribed periods (vide section 1st) do not forfeit any portion of their staff salaries, provided that no additional expense to the state is occasioned by their absence : otherwise a deduction equal to the extent of such additional charge is to be made therefrom. The brigadier, or next senior officer in the division, on whom the temporary command may devolve during the absence of a general officer exempt from forfeiture of allowance under the preceding clause, is not entitled to any additional allowance beyond that for his permament command, which he does not relinquish."

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.

Fort St. George, Sept. 11, 1849. - So much of the G. O. G., 21st August, 1819, as directs the movement of the 3rd regiment Palamcottalı light infantry to Madras, and the 43rd regiment native infan'ry from Cannanore to Aden, is cancelled; and the following movement is ordered:—3rd regiment light infantry, from Kulladghee to Aden, to embark from Vingorlah.

STAFF SALARY TO MEDICAL OFFICERS ON THE NEILGHERRIES.

Fort St. George, Sept. 14.- The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to announce for general information, that under instructions from the Government of India, the staff salary attached to the medical officers on the Neilgherries is to be reduced to Rs. 100 per mensem each, on vacancies occurring by the departure of the present incumbents; and also, that that is the allowance to be granted to the third assistant-surgeon authorized to be appointed.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. ROBERT VILLIERS BRISCOE, H.M.'s 25TH REGT.

Bangalore, Aug. 14, 1849.—At a general court-martial holden at Fort Saint George, July 30, 1849, and continued by adjournment to August 1, Lieut. R. V. Briscoe, H.M.'s 25th reg. placed in arrest by order of the commanding officer, was arraigned upon the following charges :-

First charge.-For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Madras, on July 4, 1849, when a military discipline, in having at Madras, on July 4, 1849, when a guest at the mess of the 49th N.I. at dinner, made use of the following gross and ungentlemsnlike language, highly insulting to the officers of the said reg., namely,—"Who the devil would take wine with a native officer?" (meaning with an officer of the 49th N.I.). "I say, Nott, you——," addressing himself to Ens. J. K. Nott, of H.M.'s 25th reg. who sat next to him, "take a glass of wine with me," or words to the same effect.

Second charge.-For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at the time and place set forth in the first charge, when a guest at the mess-room of the 49th N.I., at dinner, been in a state of intoxication, so as to cause his being assisted out of the room by an officer of his own reg. before the cloth was removed from table.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.
(Signed) J. J. HOLLIS, Lieu

J. J. HOLLIS, Lieut.-col. Commanding H.M.'s 25th regt. of foot.

Finding .- Guilty.

Sentence.-To be severely and publicly reprimanded, and further to be reduced three steps of rank in the reg. to which he belongs, by being placed next below Lieut. W. G. Turner.

Confirmed. G. H. BERKELEY, Lieut.-gen. (Signed)

Remarks .- When an officer is tried and found guilty of charges of unofficerlike and ungentlemanly conduct, the sentence ought to be dismissal from the service. Upon that principle, I do not approve of the sentence pronounced in this case, but in consequence of the palliative nature of the evidence produced on the trial, more particularly as connected with the first charge, I confirm the same.

Lieut. Briscoe has much reason to congratulate himself, that he has met with a Court so mercifully disposed, and if he possesses proper feeling, will ever hold in abhorrence a vice that has made him commit himself in a manner so derogatory to his position in society, and which has been so nearly ruinous to his future prospects.

G. H. BERKELEY, Lieut .- gen.

Lieut. Robert Villiers Briscoe is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

LIEUT. CHARLES DANIEL POGSON, H.M.'S 25TH REGT.

Head-Quarters, Bangalore, Aug. 14, 1849.—At a general court-martial holden at Fort St. George, July 30, 1849, Lieut. C. D. Pogson, H.M.'s 25th reg. placed in arrest by order of the commanding officer, was arraigned upon the following charges :-

First charge.-For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Madras, on the night of July 4, 1849, in the verandah of the mess-house of the 49th N.I. struck in the face with his clenched hand Lieut. W. T. Potts, of H.M.'s 25th regt.

Second charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at the time and place set forth in the first charge, returned to the place where the aforesaid Lieut. W. T. Potts was sitting, and taking a tumbler off the table before him, pushed it in the face of the said Lieut. W. T. Potts.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

(Signed) J. J. Hollis, Lieut.-col.

Finding-Not guilty.

Remark by the Court .- Although the facts averred in the charges did occur somewhat in the manner therein stated, still the Court, under the circumstances of the case, consider that the prisoner's conduct, although open to censure, was not so criminal as to render him subject to the severe imputation, reflecting upon his character, contained in the preamble to the charges, and therefore the Court has recorded an acquittal.

Confirmed.

(Signed) G. H. BERKELEY, Lieut .- gen.

Remarks.-The Court has no doubt been guided in its judgment in this case by the consideration that the slight blow which reached the person of Lieut. Potts, from the open hand of the prisoner, if not purely accidental in an attempt at a practical joke, as urged in defence, is proved in evidence to have been given in no angry manner, and under such circumstances as showed it was neither intended to insult or hurt that officer, but a mere retort for a remark made by him of too familiar a nature. The subsequent act of Lieut. Pogson also appears to have been committed in the same feeling, under similar circumstances, on a repetition by Lieut. Potts of his former observation.

Lieut. Potts's own acts, and his own admissions in evidence, show, that although nettled at the prisoner's conduct, he did not deem it intentionally offensive, and the prisoner's early apology, when he found Lieut. Potts was irritated, shows that it was not so. Had the particulars of the case, therefore, been more fully developed by searching inquiry by the officer commanding the regiment, before it was submitted to head-quarters, and officers, in giving their statements, had been more explicit in furnishing particulars, I consider this case might have been disposed of otherwise than by a court-martial.

Under this view of the case, I have confirmed the finding of the Court, although I am of opinion it should have convicted the prisoner of a breach of order and discipline; for it cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of the officers of the army, that rude and boisterous conduct in their intercourse with each other, and what are called practical jokes, being calculated to produce disorders and quarrels, cannot be tolerated in the military profession. The opinion of the C.-in C. of H.M.'s forces upon this subject is too well known to be repeated, and I trust I shall hear no more of similar unbecoming conduct on the part of any officer in future.

Some remarks on the evidence rejected in this case will be made hereafter.

G. H. BERKELEY, Lieut.-gen. (Signed) Lieut. Charles Daniel Pogson is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

NAVIGATION OF THE NERBUDDA.

Capt. Fenwick (late of the Nizam's service) started with ten boats laden with coal from below the Dharee falls, in the Nerbudda river, on the 5th April, 1848, under instructions from the Resident at Indore, and noted in his journal all the difficulties and obstructions he met with. As there is ample information regarding the river from the Dharee falls to Hirunphal, and as no absolute obstruction to navigation exists in the lowest portion, from Tulluckwarrah to the sea, it will suffice to notice chiefly the portion between the Burkhery rapids, just below Hirunphal, to near Tulluckwarrah, by far the worst part of the river to navigate.

Between Dharee and Alliagaum, at some of the places,-narrow passages, with difficult turnings, and rapids studded with rocks,—Capt. Fenwick thought, during the monsoon, no boat could live. Farther on, the falls, rapids, rocks, and narrow channels ((in some places 8 feet wide, with 2 feet water), were dangerous. In several places the water was very shallow, in one (below Oordunna), where it was only 9 inches, a channel had to be made by removing the loose stones from the middle and piling them on each side, for 150 yards, to deepen the stream, when the boats were dragged over. He reached Chikuldah on the 20th April, and thence proceeded to examine the Hirunphal ghat, which he describes as "a fall of 6 feet in 30, passage 8 or 10 feet, with projecting pointed rocks on each side, very bad and dangerous; 100 yards rapid."

He did not leave Chikuldah until July 29th. After the Bhurkery rapids, a very difficult navigation (in which one of the boats was dashed on a rock and completely lost), in about 20 miles, the river widens, but then came, at Kalee-Kuraee, "a high barrier of rocks across from bank to bank, 30 feet channel near the right bank." Farther on, bad rocks, in midstream, under water, very dangerous; current very rapid; dangerous rapids; the river studded with low rocks, from bank to bank; the boats let down by ropes, knocking upon the rocks, and in some places dragged over. At the Beytana ghat barrier, rapids and falls; the passage about 18 feet wide between pointed projecting rocks for 300 yards on the right bank. Some of the coals taken out of the large boats and carried over the rocks. On the 31st July, the distance traversed about two miles! Next day, rocks and rapids at Sirkurree and Nanka. At this last place, the largest channel was fearfully obstructed with rocks, rapids, and rushing currents, waves peculiarly high, and little whirlpools or eddies. On the following day, after serious impediments, at a mile from Hanep, two of the boats were awamped and went down bodily, with 61 maunds of coal, the crews narrowly escaping with their lives. The three succeeding days similar obstacles, rocks, rapids, and whirlpools, constantly occurred. At Mokree barrier were rocks all across the river, and farther on "river studded with rocky channels, current rushing through them with sluice force—all very bad." Capt. Fenwick says, "I consider this Mokree barrier to be one of the worst in the Nerbudda; it certainly looked quite frightful."

Three-quarters of a mile below, the main channel on the left is studded with destructive rocks, the waves raging over them. "A quarter of a mile farther worse than ever; nothing could live in it. A little below there is a fearful whirlpool; it embraces the whole bed of the river, and I think we have scarcely encountered any thing so awful and terrific. The boats were let down with ropes along the rocks on the right bank, still with much apprehension, for had they come within its influence nothing could have saved them." Close to Emrio, one of the boats struck on a rock in the middle of the river, filled, and stuck

They reached Baroach on the 9th August.

· The Chief Justice has intimated from the INSOLVENTS. Bench that the Court have determined hereafter to refuse the benefit of the Act to those insolvents who voluntarily apply for it without the preliminary of incarceration .- Bombay Times, Aug. 22.

Overland Mails .- The H. C. steamer Feroze, Lieut. W. Balfour, commanding, was signalled at ten o'clock this forenoon. She left Aden on the 27th, at a quarter past 8, r.m., and brings the mails from London of the 7th August, and the following passengers:—Lieut. Archer, H. M. 78th highlanders; Mr. Pollexien, merchant.

This is the quickest passage ever known, the mails having left London on the 7th August, at 8 r. st., were delivered in the Bombay Post Office at half-past 12 o'clock on the 3rd September.—Gentleman's Gazette, Sept. 3.

LIEUT.-Col. LEESON. - An order elsewhere appears, directing Lieut.-Col. J. S. Leeson to relinquish his present command of the artillery in Scinde, and repair to Poona to join the head-quarters of the horse brigade.—B. Times, Sept. 5.

Mortality.-As August may be set down as " Cholera month," the table deserves closer examination than usual. total number of deaths appears to have been 1,104-a good deal above the monthly average; and of these 970 were natural, and 7 violent, leaving 127 coming under the head of "epidemic." Now, cholera is the only epidemic at present prevalent; and the whole 127 may therefore be considered as having been cut off by that disease. It may be of interest to look at the proportional mortality from cholera in the different classes of Total ... The most notable thing here is the non-occurrence of a single death from cholera amongst the Parsees. The Jews and Chinese are each a small class, and we wonder little at their contributing nothing to the general mortality; but considering the numerical strength of the Zoroastrian body in Bombay, it really is odd that, during an entire month, while 127 persons of other castes and countries have died from the prevalent epidemic, not one of their community should have been cut off by it. We wish the authorities would so far improve the Bombay mortality returns, and introduce into them a classification (like that in the London tables) of the diseases from which people die, as well as a state-ment of the districts where the deaths take place. With the aid of these particulars, and Captain Baynes's population returns (when reduced and tabulated), we should be able to form a much more definite idea than we can at present arrive at, in regard to the classes which suffer most from disease, and those parts of the island where particular maladies most prevail.—Telegraph and

MURDER OF THE GOVERNOR OF MACAO.

On the morning of the 23rd September, an express boat from Macao brought intelligence of the assassination of the Governor by a party of Chinese the previous evening.

Mr. Amaral, accompanied by his aide-de-camp, went out on horseback at his usual hour in the afternoon. On returning, within 150 paces of the Barrier gate, a Chinese boy presented him with a flower on the end of a bamboo. He accepted the him with a flower on the end of a bamboo. He accepted the flower, when the boy struck him with the bamboo; on the blow being repeated, he stooped forward to rebuke the lad. While thus engaged he was attacked by five Chinamen armed with swords; they stabbed him in the side and back. Having lost his right arm many years ago in battle, Mr. Amaral took the bridle in his teeth, raising the left arm to take a pistol from the holsters, but before he could effect his purpose the murderers. holsters, but before he could effect his purpose the murderers bore him to the earth and despatched him with many wounds. The head was cut off, leaving the lower jaw and part of the tongue attached to the trunk; the left hand was also taken away. The aide-de-camp was wounded severely by a cut on the head and a stab in the thigh. The remains of the unfortunate gentleman were carried to Macao in the carriage of Mr. Forbes. This daring atrocity was committed at an hour when most of the foreign residents take exercise in the campo. Several gentlemen spoke or bowed to the Governor within a few minutes of his assassination, and two witnessed the attack from a short distance, being unarmed they could render no assistance. murderers escaped in a boat waiting near the barrier, taking with them the head and hand of their victim.

On receiving the intelligence, H. M. S. Amazon and H. M. Steamer Medea immediately prepared for sea. The American schooner Dolphin was in Macao harbour at the time, and the frigate Plymouth has since dropped down from Whampoa; the French corvette La Bayonnaise has also arrived from India; these, with the two English ships, form the squadron now at Macao, the Portuguese having no men of war in this part of the

Since the murder there has been much excitement, and no small apprehension of an attack. The presence of several foreign men-of-war in some degree restored confidence. The government, so far, acts boldly; but it will be questioned whether it was prudent to provoke a savage war by capturing a Chinese fort, killing upwards of three score of the Chinese soldiers, and sticking their captain's head on bamboo in the public streets of the city. In short, Macao, with an army of 450 men, and no fleet, has made war upon China without waiting to hear the result of an application to Seu for redress and the condign punishment of Governor Amaral's murderers. They have assumed, and no doubt justly, that the Chinese authorities sanctioned the murder; but Macao is almost defenceless, and prudence dictates a conciliatory tone. An attack on Casa Branca is also talked of; but the destruction of a small fort, and the slaughter of some of its defenders, is an insult which no concession can easily atone for. It is to be feared that, so far from receiving the Portuguese mission favourably, Seu will demand terms which it is impossible to grant, and that the destruction of Macao will be determined on.

On the 25th, the troops demanded that their chief be removed and another officer appointed to the command; this was complied with, an officer being selected in whom the soldiers have confidence. The senate resolved upon taking possession of the barrier, and in the forenoon a detachment was despatched on that service. On nearing the gate they were fired upon by the Chinese, who had mustered in some strength. With the exception of a few guards, the whole military force (regulars and militia) and six pieces of artillery were marched to the barrier, which they carried after some slight resistance. A Chinese fort about half a mile inside the wall, commanding the path leading to the Casa Branca opened fire, but without injury to the Portuguese troops. Lieut. Mesquita offered to storm the fort, and with a squadron of thirty-five volunteers it was carried in good style. Seventyfour Chinamen were killed, including a military mandarin of small rank. The mandarin's head and left hand were cut off and taken to Macao. At first they were hung on a pole in front of Government-house, where the body of Governor Amaral still lies, but subsequently they were removed to the Monte fort.

That day an application was made to Capt. Troubridge of H.M.S. Amazon for assistance; about 1 o'clock the flags at the forts, which had previously been half mast, were hoisted to the mast head, with the crown of Portugal reversed. Boats from the Amazon immediately landed a party of marines on the Praya Grande.

Messrs. Paiva and Pereira carried a strong remonstrance from the members of the Government, addressed to Commissioner Seu, but on the evening of the 27th they had not returned from Canton. The foreign ministers accredited to China, now residing in Macao, have also expressed their indignant reprobation of the crime.

The Portuguese have been guilty of an act of unpardonable cruelty; a repetition of such outrages will weaken if not destroy the sympathy felt for them by foreign residents here and at other places. While the fighting was going on on the 25th, an armed lorcha belonging to a man named Antonio Grande was stationed near the barrier. A boat with a crew of women was attracted to the place by the firing and the unusual excitement. On coming near the lorcha they were hailed, and, returning no answer, the lorcha opened fire. Two women were killed,—one had her head literally blown to pieces. There is, of course, a great excitement among the tanka boat-women; and the Chinese generally will be deeply incensed on hearing of this act of barbarity.

On the 27th the members of council applied to Mr. Davis, the American commissioner, to know whether in the event of an attack by the Chinese, the American ships of war Dolphin and Plymouth would aid in defending the town. They were informed that the American ships would preserve a strict neutrality, the United States being at peace with both Portugal and China, but that they would protect all who sought refuge on board.—Friend of China, Aug. 29.

The Malla, with the London mail of June 25, reached Hong-Kong Aug. 18.

JAPAN.

The American papers contain a narrative of the imprisonment and ill-treatment of the crew of a United States whale-ship, wrecked on one of the Japanese islands. They were confined for more than a year in prisons and cages, and subjected to rigours which it is said caused one of them to commit suicide. A similar case occurred with an American whale-ship in 1846, and as the fishing-grounds in the Japanese seas are frequented every summer by hundreds of these vessels, it is argued by the mercantile interests in the States that the time is come when a demonstration against Japan is absolutely essential. The object of this would be, not to enforce any regular trading communication, but simply to procure a convention for the opening of the principal Japanese ports to all American ships driven to them by stress of weather or needing refreshments. The casus belix would be far more justifiable than in the case of our opium-war with Chins.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The advices, which are to the 23rd August, state that the excitement of the settlement respecting the convicts expected by the Neptune continued, and resignations of offices were going on. The Zuid Afrikaan charges Sir Harry Smith with having embarrassed the question. "We should never lose sight of the fact," it says, "that this colony was proclaimed a penal settlement by the instrumentality of Sir Harry Smith. If he had not promulgated the Order in Council, but delayed its publication until Her Majesty's pleasure was ascertained, he would not now find himself in such a fix. There would have been no law in pursuance of which convicts arriving here could claim to be liberated. The Supreme Court could not compel the Governor to promulgate the Order in Council, but it can compel the Government to land the convicts who come here with tickets of leave or conditional pardons. The Governor's declaration that he will not land them is no law; and no court of justice dare for a moment entertain it."

Letters from the emigrant settlement at Magaliesberg mention that the yellow fever had been raging at Origstad and Zoatpansberg, the former of which places has been deserted, and a new settlement formed at some distance, at a spot which the emigrants hope will prove more salubrious.

The Graham's Town Journal of August 11 states that the accounts of the state of the settlement at Natal are very gloomy. There prevailed an entire want of public confidence; the treasury was empty; all public improvements were at a dead lock, and private enterprise so discouraged, that many undertakings had been given up in consequence of the very unsatisfactory nature of every thing connected with the public affairs of that country. Lieutemant-Governor West was dead.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

A large public meeting was held at Sydney on the 18th June, at which the following resolution was passed: "That, considering the arbitrary and faithless manner in which this colony has been treated by Earl Grey, this meeting most humbly prays Her Majesty to remove that nobleman from Her Majesty's Councils." This resolution was embodied, with others, in an address to the Queen.

SULU.

The following particulars of what took place on the visit of Sir James Brooke to Sulu will show that the Sulus are well disposed to cultivate friendly relations with the British. The Nemesis arrived at Sulu on the 27th May, and on the following day Sir James, accompanied by Capt. Wallage and other officers of the Nemesis, paid a visit to the Sultan, by whom he was cordially received. After the usual greetings, Sir James addressed the Sultan and the Datus present in the Malay language, which they all more or less understand, and informed them of the purpose of his visit. He then delivered to them the treaty he proposed to conclude, and advised them to examine it, and if it met their approval to sign it. He shortly afterwards retired. Sultan and Datus then proceeded to consider the treaty, one of the chiefs reading the Malay translation in an audible voice, and although, according to the Sulu custom, some hundreds of persons were crowded into the house, the utmost silence prevailed. They were asked whether they thought well of the treaty or not, on which the Sultan and principal Datus, without hesitation, and with one voice, exclaimed, "We are perfectly satisfied, and within the next twenty-four hours we will put our seals to it." Sir James went the following evening about seven o'clock, without any parade or ceremony, and after a great deal of friendly conversation, and partaking of chocolate, coffee, and sweetmeats, the treaty in duplicate was handed to Sir James, sealed with the two seals or chops of the Sultan, and Sir James having attached his signature to both, one of them was returned to the Sultan, and about two o'clock in the morning the sitting broke up. The Sulus were highly delighted with the visit, and the frank and straightforward manner in which Sir James conducted himself towards them. His name was formerly a terror in Sulu, but since they have come in contact with him in person, they have quite altered their ideas regarding him, and this result has been much helped by the ease with which he converses with them in Malay, which, although not their own language, is well understood by them. From Sulu the Newsis proceeded to Samboangan, where the Spanish Governor was informed of the treaty which had been concluded. He protested against the non-alienation clause, and this will probably afford an opportunity to the Cabinets in Europe of discussing the respective rights and powers of England, Spain, and Holland in the Eastern Archipelago. The object of the clause in question is to prevent Sulu from making any alienation of territory to any power who would use the right to establish an exclusive commerce,-it does not interfere with the commercial intercourse between Sulu and any foreign power, but on the contrary leaves it free and unfettered. grounds on which the Spaniards protest against the clause above alluded to, are that the Sulu Government stand in certain relations of fealty towards the Spanish Government, and have concluded treaties with them, which have the effect of disabling the Sulus from entering into such an engagement as that recently made with Sir James Brooke. - Singapore Free Press, July 6.

INDIAN MARRIAGE-LAWS.—India stands (in respect to the law of marriage) in the following position:—The greater portion of the country has been obtained by cession, some compa ratively small portions by conquest. In those portions obtained by cession, the original Mahommedan law on this subject obtains, excepting where it has been altered by Parliament, whereas, in those portions obtained by conquest, the Mahommedan law has been abolished, and the English law was introduced into the several conquered parts at the dates when they were respectively conquered. India is again divided into three presidencies,-Bengal, Bombay, and Madras,-and Parliament has, during the last century, according to the practice of the English Courts of Judicature in India, introduced into each of these presidencies the English law which obtained on this subject at the dates when such law was introduced into each of these presidencies respectively. It is generally admitted that the statutes called the English Marriage Acts do not apply to India, so that the English marriage law which at present obtains is the common law of England; and this, according to the decision in the case of the Queen v. Millis, to which we have referred, requires the intervention of a person in holy orders to perform the marriage ceremony. A general impression prevails in India that no priest need intervene, and it is a common press. tice for the local magistrate to perform the marriage ceremony. The case of the Queen v. Millis shows this impression to be incorrect, and the sooner, therefore, that it is removed the better. — Colonial Mag.

Carnivorous Horses.—Dr. A. Campbell, in a recent visit to Sikim, in a conversation with the dewan of the raja, remarked that the bit in the mouth of a fine colt of the dewan's was too severe, as it was bleeding. "It is not his blood," replied the dewan; "it is what he has been just eating—pig's blood and liver; he has it every morning in the cold weather!" Dr. Campbell was staggered at this; but a brass basin being brought half full of raw blood and bits of liver, the colt ate the horrid mass with evident pleasure, and seemed quite used to it. "This is always done in Tibet," Dr. Campbell says, "while the horse is growing, by those who can afford it; and it is said to greatly increase the fire and enduring power of the animal."

There are at present two branches of the Parsees, whose chronology differs one month in the year, namely, the Kudmees, and the Shaenshoyees. The present scheme embraces the Parsee æra of Yezdezerd, commonly styled Kudmee or Dureeayee Nowroz, or sea-reckoning, the same being made use of in all nautical calculations among the Asiatic mariners, the new year of which always commences on the first day of Furverdeen. The Kudmees reckon the new year and the Dureayee Nowroz to fall on the 28th of August. The Shaenshoyees' new year (also embracing the Parsee æra of Yezdezerd) commences from the 27th of September.

Dr. Hooker suggests that a predisposing cause of goitre, in mountainous countries, may be the use of the head strap, or belt, across the forehead, in carrying loads, by inducing congestion of the laryngeal vessels, it being proved that the disease is most prevalent in the mountainous regions of both the old and new world, where the practice of supporting enormous loads by the cervical muscles is prevalent. It is also found in the Himalayan sheep and goats which accompany the salt-traders, whose loads are supported in ascending by a band passing under the throat.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At a meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, on the 16th August, a specimen of the "stone shell," used by Moolraj in the defence of Mooltan, was presented by Col. G. P. Le Messurier. This shell is symmetrically hewn out of a greenish soft micaceous sandstone, which can be scratched with the nail; it is eleven inches in diameter, with a vent of two inches.

The following communications were read: "Observations on two silver Coins from the Embankments of an old Tank near Sewthur," by the Rev. Dr. Stevenson; and "Further Observations on Cave-Temples, made in a Journey to the Dekhan, and Inquiries respecting certain Excavations which have not been visited by Europeans," by the Rev. Dr. Wilson.

Respecting the two coins, which were found in the embankments of an old tank near Sewthur, Dr. Stevenson states, that each weighs about 4 grains; that on one side they have "Om," the symbol of the Hindu Triad, and on the other the figure of a man with a bird's head, which can only be meant to represent the Garud of the Hindu mythology. The Om is written in the the Garud of the Hindu mythology. The Om is written in the form of a monogram; the principal letter of which will at once be seen to be the Telinga and Canarese o, with the mark over it, to show it to be long, as it generally is considered in Sanskrit works. The inscribed figure is the M of the cave inscriptions, and of what is called in the Madras provinces the Grantha cha-It would, therefore, seem most probable, that these fanams belong to the currency of the Vijayanagara sovereigns, who reigned from the eleventh century over the west regions of the Dekhan, and extended their sway as far as Gujarat in the beginning of the sixteenth century of our era. This, however, Dr. Stevenson states merely as a supposition, not being well acquainted with Madras coins.

Dr. Wilson, in his communication above mentioned, states, that, with a view to accuracy and completeness in the general memoir of the cave temples and other antiquities of Western India, which he has prepared for the Society, he has revisited, in a journey to the Dekhan, certain caves, and has made further inquiries respecting others which have not been seen by Euro-peans. A Peon, whom Vishnu Shastri, at the request of Dr. peans. A Peon, whom Vishnu Snastri, at the request wilson, had sent to the north of the Baor Ghat, had stated, that he had discovered a new series of caves near Kondáná: the Shastri had visited them. They consist, according to the Shastri had visited them. ribbed with wood, and various Buddhist figures of good execution, but much injured, a short legible inscription, and a few cells for monks. The Shastri had heard of another set of caves near them. Dr. Wilson visited the Karli caves, the Bhaja caves, the caves of Bedsa, and revised his former notes concerning them; also two small Buddhist caves on a hill near Sailarwadi; of the Braminical Shiviti caves near the Sangam at Puna, and of many other new sets of caves, Dr. Wilson had received authentic information, but on account of the commencement of the rains he was prevented from visiting them.

The Asiatic Society of Ceylon held a conversational meeting on the 27th June, at the residence of George Steuart, Esq., Colpetty, when a number of Ceylon coins, both ancient and modern, were laid before the members, being contributions to the Society's Museum, as also several Persian and Malabar The attention of the meeting was chiefly directed to these in connection with a paper recently read at a general meeting relative to Ceylon currency. The Dutch, as well as the ing, relative to Ceylon currency. Portuguese before them, introduced into use in that island the coins current in their several Indian possessions; neither of these powers appearing to have had any especial coinage for Ceylon. It remained for the English to effect this; for, although the rix-dollar was a value of Dutch origin, it had no real existence as a coin until 1808 or 1809, when half-dollars, dollars, and double-dollars were coined, in a very rude fashion, which coinage, however, was supplanted in 1821 by the dollar known in the present day, though this is rapidly disappearing from circulation. When the English became possessed of Ceylon, they found the currency almost entirely of copper, and it appears to have remained so jointly, with a small note circulation, until 1821, four years after which period, a Minute and Regulation were issued, fixing the currency upon the English standard, and ordering all Government accounts to be kept in pounds, shillings, and pence, at the same time fixing British silver coins as the only legal tender in payment of duties or for debts. The dollars and dollar notes, however, still remained in circulation. Eleven years later, namely, in 1836, the Ceylon Government put rupees, half-rupees, and quarter-rupees in circulation, at 2s., 1s., and 6d. The effect of this has been that very little, if any, British coin remains in circulation; neither is the rix-dollar often to be met with; for whilst the rupee contains but 165 grains of silver, two English shillings, for which it passes current, have in them 177 grains: the dollar weighing rather more than an English shilling and sixpence. By every rupee, therefore, which has been exchanged for two English shillings, a gain of twelve grains of silver has been effected, and this has evidently been availed of by coast traders and silversmiths. It is, therefore, a fact, that there is scarcely any of that coin which has been declared to be the only legal tender in the island. The Kandians had silver coins, besides the coco ridi, or hook money. A very neat coin was struck by them during the administration of Governor Falck, and previously there had been silver and gold coins, though not in any quantity; they are accordingly extremely scarce in the present day. The dollar notes have long since disappeared, and one of them would now be a great curiosity, as well as the silver doits and stivers of the Dutch.

Dr. Hooker, in an excursion from Darjiling to Tongho (a mountain on the confines of Sikkim and Nepal, 10,079 feet high), visited, and was hospitably entertained at, the Lama Monastery at Simonbong, of which he has given in his Notes (Journ. As. Soc. Bengal) the following curious description :

"Simonbong is one of the smallest and poorest gumpas (or monasteries) in Sikkim.* Unlike the better class, it is built of monasteries) in Sikkim.* Unlike the better class, it is built of wooden beams only, and has no monuments, except the chaits mentioned on our way up the mountain. It consists of one large room, with small sliding shutter windows, raised on a stone foundation, and roofed with shingles of wood; opposite the door, which is at one end (the east), the altar is placed, of wood, chequered with black, white, and red, diagonally; to the right and left are shelves with a few MS. books, wrapped in silk; a model of Symbonath at Nepal, in wood; a praying cylinder, and some implements for common purposes, bags of juniper, &c. On the shelves are English wine bottles and glasses, with tufts of Abies Webbiana, Rhododendrons, and peacocks' feathers. On the altar seven little brass cups are ranged, full of water; a large shell, carved with the sarred lotus; a brass jug from Lhassa, of beautiful design; and a human thighbone, hollow, and perforated through both condyles. The shelves a orass jug from Luassa, or occating design, and annual state bone, hollow, and perforated through both condyles. The shelves above contained various trifles, clay ornaments and offerings, and little Hindu idols brought from the Hurdwar fair. Facing the altar is a bench and chair, and on one side a huge tambourine, with two carved iron drumsticks. The bench was full of mysterious implements, bells handsomely carved with idols, censers with juniper ashes, the dorge which the priest holds in his hand during service, ashes, the dorge which the priest holds in his hand during service, and verious weeks weeks! and various water vessels; on the stool or chair was a large platter, with a brass egg-cup inserted in it. Of these the human thigh-bone with a brass egg. cup inserted in it. Of these the human thigh-bone is by much the most curious; it is very often that of a Lama, and the longer they are the more value is put upon them. As, however, the Sikkim Lamas are burned, these relies are generally procured from Tibet, where the corpses are said to be cut in pieces and thrown to the kites, or thrown into the water. The Lama was consecrated to the kites, or thrown into the water. The Lama was consecrated at Chungachelling, one of the oldest Sikkim convents (three centuries), and unfortunately was not an educated or intelligent fellow. Two boys usually reside in the temple, and their beds were given up to us, which, being only rough planks laid on the floor, proved clean in one sense; but contrasted badly with the springy couch of bamboo the Lepcha makes in your tent, and which renders carrying a mattress or aught but blankets superfluous.

"May 24th.—We were awakened this morning by the discordant orisons of the Lama: these commenced at sunrise by the boys coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for coming in an additional complex coming in an additional complex coming in an additional complex coming in a complex coming coming in and beating the great tambourine close to our ears for several minutes; then blowing the conch shells, and finally the thigh-bone, each as long. Shortly the Lama entered, clad in scarlet, shorn and barefooted, with a small red silk cap. He walked along, slowly muttering and groaning his prayer to the end of the apartment, whence he took a small red bag in which were a house held lond dear he control to the contro of the apartment, whence he took a small red bag in which were a brass bell and dorge. Sitting down he commenced matins before the chair with the brass cup, which he filled with water and placed again in the platter,—took off his beads and continued counting them or beating the bell, uttering the most dismal prayers in a very deprecatory tone, of which 'Maliva oh Maliva,' was the burthen. After various disposals of the water-jugs, cups, and platter, which were filled and refilled, rice added and sprinkled about, a large bell was violently rung for some minutes, himself snapping his fingers and uttering most unearthly sounds. Having put away those instruments, incense was brought, of charcoal with juniper sprigs. This was muffled about, and put through many evolutions, and finally, with the water, thrown out of the window, when to our great relief the morning service was concluded, for the noises were quite intolerable.'' rable."

• There are upwards of twenty Lama establishments in Sikkim, numbering 800 monks. Many of these are of excellent masonry. Chinese in architecture, gorgeously decorated, and, for so poor a country, richly endowed. During my more recent travels in Sikkim I have visited many, been an inmate in the monasteries, and met with the greatest kindness and hospitality from the good fathers. As the first European who has ever lived with the monks, this was the less to be expected. Dr. Campbell, who afterwards joined me, and in whose delightful society I visited others, records the same opinion of these good-humoured people.

He pays the following tribute to the character of the Lepchas, one of the aboriginal tribes:—

"It is always interesting to roam with an aboriginal, and especially a mountain people, through their thinly inhabited valleys, over these grand mountains, and to dwell alone with them in these forests, however gloomy and forbidding. No thinking man can do so without learning much, though slender be the resources at his command for communion. A more interesting and attractive companion in this respect than the Lepcha I never lived with; cheerful, kind, and patient with a master he is attached to; rude but not savage, ignorant and yet intelligent; with the simple resource of a plain knife he makes his house and furnishes yours, with a speed, alacrity, and ingenuity that steal away that well-known long hour, when the weary pilgrim frets for his couch. In all my dealings with them they have proved scrupulously honest. Except for drunkenness and carelessness, I never had to complain of any of the merry troop, some of whom, bare-headed and bare-legged, with absolutely nothing but a cotton garment and long knife, followed me for three months (on a recent occasion, from the scorching plains to the everlasting snows); ever foremost in the forest or bleak mountain, and ever ready to help, to carry, to encamp, collect, or cook, they cheer on the traveller by their unostentatious zeal in his service; and are spurs to his progress, for who would not go forwards where such followers are behind?"

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

MONDAY, October 29, 1849.

Ir any one nation has more than another a direct interest in abstaining from war herself and preventing war betwixt other nations, it is England; her enormous debt and heavy taxation, the dependence of a large portion of her population upon commerce, her numerous colonies, dispersed over both hemispheres, and her vast possessions in the East, which a war in Europe might place in jeopardy, are all substantial pledges given to the world of the sincerity of her desire for peace. Yet, strange to say, there are Englishmen who profess to believe that our Government are ever upon the watch for a pretext to commence hostilities, and that it is necessary to bind them to forbearance by a stringent vow of abstinence, like that imposed upon themselves by men whose self-command is too feeble without it to restrain them from excess in strong drink.

The recent misunderstanding betwixt the Courts of St. Petersburg and Constantinople, upon the subject of the extradition of the Hungarian insurgents who have taken refuge in the Turkish territories,—men whose characters, acts, and aims disentitle them to any extraordinary sympathy,—whilst it has excited apprehensions of a war in which England would probably be forced to take part, has given an impulse to the anti-war movement in this country, the leaders of which have, however, been betrayed into what is termed a false position.

That the Governments of Russia and Austria are not justified in demanding the surrender of the refugees at Widdin, by virtue of special engagements on the part of the Porte, has not yet been demonstrated. That the Government of the Sultan would, in the eyes of the world, violate the laws of humanity by delivering up to certain death these unfortunate men, who have thrown themselves upon Ottoman hospitality, no one can doubt. Under these circumstances, a compromise, short of unlimited compliance on the part of the Sultan, which would leave intact the honour of either party, cannot be difficult. The incident is invested with too little political dignity to become, without aggravation, a casus belli. The interposition of other powers could soothe and banish feelings of irritation on the part of the disappointed state, and could proffer frank and disinterested advice, in firm but friendly language. This is the kind of arbitration which has, of late years, been constantly employed by the great European powers with general success; but upon this occasion, the peace party appear disposed to obstruct this wholesome intervention, and to desire an appeal to the arbitrement of force. Their inconsistency in this respect has not been prominently noticed by the journals which have commented upon their proceedings; whereas it tends to expose the folly and futility of the whole scheme of anti-war agitation.

At the public meeting convened at the London Tavern, on the 8th of October, to consider the matter of the loan proposed to be raised by the Austrian Government, to meet an expenditure caused chiefly by the Hungarian insurrection, Mr. Cobden, as a peace-congress leader, attacked this loan, not because it was for war purposes (for it cannot be termed a war loan); his resolution dissuaded lenders from trusting Austria with their money because she could offer no valid security! It was scarcely worth while to call a public meeting for such a trivial object as this, and Mr. Cobden got into a stiff slough of inconsistency in venturing, as a strenuous free-trader, to interfere with the employment of capital. The inference, therefore, is, that the real aim of the meeting or of the speakers was different from the ostensible one.

In the course of the discussion the conduct of the Austrian Government in the Hungarian insurrection, and that of the Emperor of Russia in demanding the extradition of the refugees at Widdin, were stigmatized in terms which might lead one to suppose that the advocates of peace meant, in the words of Cicero, though in another sense, that "the laurel must give way to the tongue," but that the sentiments expressed by Mr. Cobden and his confederates exempt them from so humiliating a suspicion. Their sentence is, like Moloch's, "for open war."

Lord Dudley Stuart considered that the Sultan should resist the demands of Russia by force, and he called upon the British Government "to give to Turkey all the support in its power in resisting the demands made upon her. He could not believe," he said, "that the Government of this country would shrink from giving most energetic support to the Sultan in this matter; and when the Czar found that the Government of this country, supported by the people, were determined, if need be, to resist his force by force, he would not be in a hurry to encounter even a single squadron of the ships of Great Britain; he would retire from his demands; the unfortunate refugees would be saved; the independence of Turkey would be maintained, and the honour of England would be preserved." This, it is said, elicited "loud cheers" from the meeting. Mr. Cobden "could not help expressing his cordial concurrence in what had fallen from his noble friend (Lord D. Stuart) in reference to the present affairs of Turkey and Russia;" adding that we might hermetically seal the ports of Russia; that, "as England and Russia could not come into collision by land, the only question was, what naval force would be required by England to blockade Petersburg, Archangel, Odessa, and Riga for six months of the year, and the frost would keep up the blockade for the other six months." This, again, was hailed by the crowd of votaries of peace with tumultuous cheering!

More bellicose speeches we have rarely read, or more calculated to rouse a warlike spirit throughout the nation. They breathe a war-whoop. Nothing is hinted at about arbitration, or peaceful mediation; there is a direct invocation of force; we are to blockade the ports of Russia with our fleets, prepared, of course, if need be, to fight: and this suggestion comes from a man who has been wearying Parliament and the nation during a whole year with adjurations to disarm, to dismantle our dockyards, to disband our soldiers and seamen, and (as he told the people of Manchester in the beginning of this year) to save ten millions a year by relying upon the forbearance of other nations, and "trusting to Providence."

What do we infer from this inconsistent course on the part of Mr. Cobden and his followers? That they are knaves, propounding a doctrine which they know to be false, with some covert design of their own? Certainly not. They are only enthusiasts, the dupes of an illusion, striving to reduce to practice a theory of which their own conduct proves, to all but themselves, the utter impracticability.

ONE of the legacies which, it appears from the papers brought by the last mail, Sir Charles Napier intends to bequeath to the Indian army is the scheme of a Register, wherein the characters and qualifications of officers are to be recorded, in order that the Commander-in-Chief may be able to judge of their claims and fitness for the staff, and other departments of the public service. A suspicion had crept abroad that the reports from commanders of corps, whence this Register is to be compiled, were to be "secret and confidential;" but the Englishman, which seems to have been instructed upon the subject, denies that there is any secrecy in the matter, and states that officers are not to be debarred from knowing what their "figure" is. According to this authority, the returns which are to be transmitted to head-quarters will embrace the nature and length of the services of each officer, his general qualifications, including his merits as a linguist; how long he has served with his regiment, or with local or irregular corps, or on staff or civil employ; his absences on sick or private leave; the number of campaigns and actions he has been engaged in, the wounds he may have received, and the distinctions he may have acquired. The strictly military qualifications are to be denoted by figures, 4 denoting the highest degree of efficiency, and zero the lowest.

A scheme of this kind, which is not new in the public service at home, has its disadvantages as well as its advantages. If such a record could be rendered strictly accurate and impartial, it would be valuable; and with reference to the mere statistics,-length of service, absences, actions, wounds, decorations, &c.,—there is no reason why it should not be so; but the difficulty is to secure impartiality and accuracy in the most important feature of the record, namely, an estimate of general and military qualifications. Is the return of the commanding officer to be final upon this point? Or is the individual to be permitted to question the appreciation of his military talents and qualifications, and to assert his claim to a higher number? Will not a knowledge of the grade assigned to each officer in the Register,—which must transpire if the record be open to the inspection of the individuals concerned,-sow jealousies and engender bickerings in corps,-inspiring No. 4 with inordinate hopes and expectations, and dispiriting the unfortunate cipher? These are considerations which should be weighed with a degree of care and deliberation proportioned to the possible effects of such a measure upon a very sensitive body of men.

A Mofussil journal, commenting playfully upon the scheme, supposes that, in India, the characters of everybody in the service, civil and military, are familiar to everybody; that officers in the Indian army know when each came out, how much each is in debt, and to whom, whether he is married and how many children he has got; and thence infers that, as far as statistics go, a Register is surperfluous. But upon the more vital point, the qualifications, the writer observes: "Suppose the Commanderin-Chief should ask some notorious gambler, in command of a regiment, what was his opinion of the officers under him: why the most meritorious person in his eyes would be the subaltern who, after receiving his pay, has no objection to go to his quarters, take a hand at cards, and lose and pay his ten or fifteen gold mohurs like a man." No one will assert that such a case is impossible, or, perhaps, very

Upon the whole, then, this scheme, so far as regards the registering of graduated qualifications, ought, in our opinion, to be most warily carried into execution. Viewed theoretically, it seems to realize that most desirable of objects, the distributing of rewards according to merit; but there is othing more hazardous, in such cases, than a blind pursuit of theory.

WE understand that a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce at Manchester, in favour of Mr. Bourne's scheme of Indian river navigation, has been forwarded to the East-India House, accompanied by a letter from Mr. Fairbairn, the engineer, addressed to the Chamber, in reply to a request for his opinion, in which he approves of the undertaking. A memorial from the Commercial Association of that town, to the same effect, was soon to follow. Memorials have likewise been prepared at Aberdeen (signed by twenty or thirty of the most influential merchants and shipowners, headed by the Lord Provost) and at Greenock. The subject, we further learn, is engaging the attention of the India and China Association at Liverpool.

We are told that, A.D. 1346, Mohammed III. projected a plan for the encouragement of husbandry in India; that he appointed an inspector for the regulation of all that related to the art; that he divided the country into districts of sixty miles square, and appointed deputies to each division, who were answerable for its cultivation and improvement, and that seventy lakhs of rupees were issued out of the imperial treasury for the carrying out of the work; that his immediate successor, Feroze III., who founded Ferozepore, diverted the course of one of the tributaries of the Sutlej for the purpose of affording facilities for irrigation to the province of Sirhind, and employed fifty thousand labourers on the work.

The Madras Government have just published a very valuable paper by General Cullen, Resident at Travancore, on the effects of vegetation on the humidity of the climate; the amount of rain which falls at different localities in the same season, and at different seasons in the same locality; and the amount of water that is discharged from the ground,—affected, as these appear to be, by the state of vegetation.

The Poornockundrodoy affirms the existence, in Burdwan, of a Brahman who can devour any number of rupees, and disgorge them whenever he likes.

Quantity is one thing, and quality another. "Give me," says Sadi, "one Arab steed, rather than a stableful of asses."

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM-NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The Report of the Committee on the Contract Packet Service contains the details of the various contracts entered into by the Government with the three leading ocean steam-navigation companies, viz., the Peninsular and Oriental Company, the Royal West India Mail Steam-Packet Company, and the Cunard Halifax and Boston Company.

The duty originally performed by the Company now known as the Peninsular and Oriental Company was the conveyance of the mails to Vigo, Oporto, Lisbon, Cadiz, and Gibraltar, the contract for which was entered into on the 22nd of August, 1837. The second branch of the service performed by this Company is the monthly conveyance of the mails between England, Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria. This contract was entered into in 1840. The vessels employed were to be of not less than 400-horse power, and capable of carrying four of the heaviest guns used in the navy. The terms were 37,000l. for the first year, 35,000L for the second year, and a subsequent diminution of 1,000 a year down to 32,000%. A further reduction of 3,500% a year was also made on the abandonment of a portion of the service, consisting of a fortnightly mail to Corfu. This contract was for five years, but it continued up to 1849. A new advertisement was then issued. In reply, two tenders were received -one from the Peninsular and Oriental, and the other from the India and Australia Company. The Peninsular and Oriental tender was to perform the service for 27,500l. a year, with reductions of 500l. a year so long as the contract might continue, the vessels to be two of 450 and one of 250 horse power. The India and Australia tender was for 25,650l., with two vessels of 400-horse power and one of 250. The Peninsular and Oriental Company pointed out that the contract should not lightly be removed from a Company that had embarked so much capital and had performed past services so satisfactorily, and at the same time they offered to concede to the Government all profits above 10 per cent. The Admiralty, however, found upon an examination of the books, which they made with the concurrence of the Directors, that no advantage to the Government was likely to arise from this, the shareholders having never received a dividend of 10 per cent., and there being no prospect of such a division. The Admiralty then made an offer to the Peninsular Company founded on the mileage rate paid to them for the Lisbon line. This was declined, but the Company subsequently signified they would be willing to take 24,000l. for the first year, with a diminution of 500l. for each subsequent year. The India and Australia Company also made an amended offer, and the Government, finding the existence of competition, resolved to advertise again. In reply, the Peninsular Company sent in a tender higher than their offer by private contract. It was for 26,750l., diminishing 500l. for the first four years. But the India and Australia Company's tender was for 18,450L, and the Treasury directed it to be accepted. Although, however, they were allowed till the last moment for raising their capital, they were unable to do so, and the former private offer of the Peninsular Company was then agreed to. This contract will expire in 1853, upon twelve months' notice.

The third contract of the Company is for the line commencing at Suez and terminating at Hong-kong. This commenced in January, 1845, and is for seven years. The allowance is 160,000l. per annum, 90,000l. of which is paid by the Government, and 70,000l. by the East-India Company. The requisite vessels are three of 500-horse power, two of 400, and two of 250. The contract is stated to have been well performed, no avoidable breaches having taken place, and no serious complaints having reached the Admiralty, except a memorial of the merchants of Hong-kong regarding late arrivals, which is still under investigation, the recurrence of the evil having, meanwhile, been in some degree provided against by the appointment of a special agent at Singapore.

The following table will show the total service now performed by the Peninsular and Oriental Company: -

MISCELLANEOUS.

TRADE WITH INDIA. - The usual comparative statement issued by the East-India and China Association of the number of British ships, with their tonnage, which have entered inwards and cleared outwards, from and to places within the limits of the East-India Company's Charter, from the 1st of January to the 30th of September in the years 1848 and 1849, shows a total decrease of 7 in the number of the vessels entered inwards, though the tonnage presents a slight increase; the great deficiency is in the port of Liverpool, where the entries were 166 ships, 75,463 tons, for 1848, and 144 ships, 67,876 tons, for 1849; a decrease of 22 ships, 7,387 tons. The entries at the port of London were 450 ships, 208.561 tons, in 1848, and 464 ships, 222,550 tons, in 1849; an increase of 14 ships. 13,989 Bristol and Hull show an increase of 6 vessels, 2,896 tons, the gross numbers being, for the respective years, 18 ships, 6,338 tons, against 24 ships, 9,234 tons. The Clyde and other ports present a decrease of 5 ships, 3,157 tons, the comparison being between 38 ships, 15,344 tons, in 1848, and 33 ships, 12,187 tons, in 1849. The increase in entries inwards occurred in vessels from Calcutta and New South Wales, and the decrease in vessels from Bombay and the Philippine Islands. The clearances outwards present a gross increase, for the period, of 80 ships, 35,456 tons, the number for 1848 being 739 ships, 314,949 tons; and for 1849, 819 ships, 380,405 tons. The increase for London is 24 ships, 11,005 tons; a difference between 405 ships, 199,384 tons, for 1848, and 429 ships, 210,389 tons, for 1849. The increase for Liverpool is 30 ships, 22,238 tons, the difference between 191 ships, 84,785 tons, for 1818, and 221 ships, 107,023 tons, for The increase for the Clyde and other ports is 25 ships, 2,310 tons, the difference between 131 ships, 51,870 tons, for 1848, and 156 ships, 57,180 tons, for 1849. The Bristol and Hull return shows the difference between 12 ships, 5.910 tons, for 1848, and 13 ships, 5,813 tons, for 1849. The clearances outwards have chiefly been to Calcutta, New South Wales, and the South Seas. The increase in Calcutta is 36 ships, 15,935 tons, and in New South Wales 44 ships, 24,959 tons.

THE AFFAIR AT MACAO. - The following letter has been addressed to Lord Palmerston by the Peace Congress Committee of London, relative to the dispute now pending between the British and Portuguese Governments, on the subject of the forcible release of Mr. Summers at Macao : - " Peace Congress Committee, 15, New Broad Street, Sept. 29, 1849.-My Lord, We have learnt with deep regret that a misunderstanding has arisen between the British and Portuguese Governments, in consequence of the death of a Portuguese soldier, killed at Macao by a party of English marines who were engaged in forci-bly releasing a British subject from confinement. Whilst this bly releasing a British subject from confinement. transaction justly demands the most searching investigation, we beg to express our earnest hope that it will not be permitted for one moment to disturb the friendly relations of the two countries, and that, should any obstacle arise to prevent its amicable adjustment to the entire satisaction of both parties by ordinary diplomatic negotiation, your Lordship will at once exert your high influence to secure the settlement of the dispute by friendly negotiation."

† The cost of coals, wages, and working expenses generally in the India and China seas is at least double the cost in the Mediterranean and Atlantic.

This is the maximum rate, and the payment diminishes £500 every year

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE. - An intimation has been given by Lord Grey to parties interested in emigration to the Cape of Good Hope, that the plan of sending convicts to that colony has been withdrawn.

SOUTH-AFRICAN COTTON .- The Manchester Guardian states that the Commercial Association had received from Port Nata a consignment of thirty-seven bales of cotton, the growth of that colony; two, raised from Sea Island seed, were of a very superior quality, and fetched 13d, per lb. The bulk of the cotton was indigenous to the country; the staple is fully as long as the New Orleans, and it is of good quality. Some is considered worth 61d. to 61d. per lb.

COTTON FROM INDIA .- The Indian cotton ex-George Buckham, consigned to Mr. Hugh Fleming, of this town, by the East-India Company, met with so brisk a demand that only 100, out of the 670 bales of which the cargo consisted, remained unsold. The great bulk of the cotton from Broach sold at 51d. per lb.; some parcels brought as much as 5½d. The lowest qualities—we believe, the cotton from Kandeish—sold for 4½d. The cotton has been sold for general consumption. It is considered to be of fair average quality. The sample is fair, both as to length and fineness; and although not so clean as usual, it is of a clear, bright colour. - Munchester Guardian.

THE MARQUESS OF DALHOUSIE. - A portrait of this nobleman, by Richmond and Robinson, presenting a most accurate likeness, has been published by Hogarth.

CURRY AS IN INDIA. - Messrs. Payne and Son, of 324, Regentstreet, have recently succeeded in manufacturing an excellent curry powder; the almost insurmountable difficulty of introducing the flavour of the green fruits and roots of India has been entirely overcome. This condiment is the best we have ever met with in England, and must be esteemed a boon by those who have resided in the east. Messrs. Payne have also just introduced a picquant novelty, which they call " Indian Curry Sauce." It is intended to supply in a measure the place of a curry for those who cannot succeed in making one. As a sauce it is a great improvement to, and peculiarly adapted for steaks, chops, game, and hashes. Both kinds of condiments referred to, deserve our unqualified recommendation.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS .- La Belle Alliance has been engaged for the freight of stores to Calcutta; the Ostrich, for ditto to Madras; and the Hindostan, for ditto to Bombay.

Bibliographical Index to the Historians of Muhammedan India. By H. M. Ellior, Esq. In Four Vols. Vol. I. General Histories. Calcutta, 1849.

We have already slightly noticed (p. 471) this very valuable work, which was undertaken by the author preparatory to the execution of a grand design, that of lithographing a uniform edition of the native historians of India. Want of funds to complete so expensive an undertaking has caused it to be laid aside for the present; meanwhile, Mr. (now Sir Henry) Elliot has compiled what he modestly terms an Index of the various MSS., their titles, authors, localities, &c., accompanied by extracts from some of the MSS., in the original, with translations, summaries of the contents of others, critical remarks, and copious refethe MSS. have been given. He has likewise added occasional biographical sketches of some of the most distinguished personages.

Sir Henry has not betrayed the ordinary weakness of authors, in exaggerating the value of the work which has cost him so much labour. He confesses that the intrinsic value of these native histories is small; they can hardly claim a higher rank than that of annals:-

"They comprise, for the most part, nothing but a mere narration of events, conducted with reference to chronological sequence, without speculation on causes or effects; without a reflection or suggestion which is not of the most puerile and contemptible kind; and tion which is not of the most puerile and contemptible kind; and without any observations calculated to interrupt the monotony of successive conspiracies, revolts, intrigues, murders, and fratricides, so common in Asiatic monarchies, and to which India unhappily forms no exception. If the artificial definition of Dionysius is correct, that 'History is Philosophy teaching by examples, 'then there is no native Indian historian; and few have even approached to so high a standard. Of examples, and very bad ones, we have ample store; though even in them the radical truth is obscured by the hereditary. official, and sectarian prepossessions of the narrator; hereditary, official, and sectarian prepossessions of the narrator; but of philosophy, which deduces conclusions calculated to benefit us by the lessons and experience of the past, and offers sage counsel the of the ressons and experience or the past, and offers sage counsel for the future, we search in vain for any sign or symptom. Of domestic history also we have in our Indian annalists absolutely nothing, and the same may be remarked of nearly all Mubammedan historians, except Ibn Kaldún. By them society is never contemplated either in its constituent elements of the constituent elements. plated either in its constituent elements or mutual relations; in its established classes or popular institutions; in its private recesses or habitual intercourses. In Indian histories, there is little which enahabitual intercourses. In Indian instories, there is little which enables us to penetrate below the glittering surface, and observe the practical operation of a despotic government and rigorous and sanguinary laws, or the effect upon the great body of the nation of these injurious influences and agencies.

44 But though the intrinsic value of these works may be small, they will still yield much that is worth observation to any one who will attentively examine them. They will serve to dispel the mists of ignorance by which the knowledge of India is too much obseured, and show that the history of the Muhammedan period remains yet to be written. They will make our native subjects more sensible of the immense advantages accruing to them under the mildness and equity of our rule. If instruction were sought for from them, we should be spared the rash declarations respecting Muhammedan India, which are frequently made by persons not otherwise ignorant. Characters now renowned only for the splendour of their achieve-ments and a succession of victories, would, when we withdraw the well of flattery, and divest them of rhetorical flourishes, be set forth in a truer light, and probably be held up to the execuation of man-kind."

The number of works recorded in the four volumes (the last volume consisting entirely of original extracts) is 231. general histories (to which the first volume, now before us, is devoted) amount to 67; the particular histories, to 67; the histories of the House of Timur, to 97.

The resources which this work will afford to Oriental students, and which they alone can duly appreciate, are great. We hope it is but a step towards a similar undertaking upon a still larger scale. A copious Bibliographical Index of Oriental MSS. upon all subjects, indicating their authors, their contents, and the libraries where they are deposited, would be an inestimable Free-Trade a Bunya's Owl; to which is added, a Literal Version of the Original Hindee Satire of Meerza Rufee-oos-Souda. W. H. Allen and Co.

THE story of the Bunya's Owl, as related by the poet Souda, is this: -A Delhi bunya, or dealer, had long dunned in vain a sharp-witted debtor, who hit upon an expedient to get out of the bunya's books. He called upon him with an owl, which he represented to be a goshawk falcon, a "bird of birds,"—a present for a king. The bunya, having a commission to buy a hawk for a great ameer, thought the opportunity an excellent one to get his bill paid; and being assured by the debtor that the bird was not an unclean animal, that it fed not on flesh, but on bread, milk, and rice, he strikes a bargain, whereby the debt of Rs. 200 is extinguished, and the cunning debtor gets Rs. 100 cash in hand. The simple bunya runs chuckling with his prize to his wife, who, better versed in ornithology, calls him a blockhead, and tells him

> That is no falcon, but an owl, Of habit, as of omen, foul.

This tale, which the Hindu poet applies satirically to "a pedant, prig, and pettifogger" of his own time, is by his translator employed to expose the theory of free-trade, by adopting which, he supposes, Sir Robert Peel, the bunya, has mistaken an owl for a falcon.

We believe this to be the first instance of the successful adaptation of Hindu poetry to the purposes of European satire.

The Revelations of an Orderly, being an Attempt to expose the Abuses of Administration by the Relation of Every-day Occurrences in the Mofussil Courts. By PANCHEOURER KHAN. Madden.

THESE "Revelations," as they are termed, were originally published in the Benares Recorder, an Indian newspaper which has recently expired for want of support. The writer professes to state facts which had come under his own observation, in the course of a long experience in different Government departments, with the view of exposing abuses in the subordinate administration of the Mofussil Courts, and the arts employed by natives to "throw dust into the eyes" of their European superiors. He relates the incidents in the avowedly fictitious character of "an Orderly."

We have no doubt that, amidst much exaggeration and caricature, there is some truth in the pictures he has drawn of the characters that flourish in these Courts, and in his representations of the success with which native villany poisons the very fountains of justice. Unhappily, India is not the only country where law is perverted into an instrument of oppression; a recent case in our Palace Court would, without much dressing up, form a parallel to some of the most spicy chapters of the "Orderly."

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

THE PILOT STATION FOR THE RIVER HOOGHLY IN THE SOUTH-WEST MONSOON.

DIRECTIONS for APPROACHING the PILOT STA-TION for the RIVER HOOGHLY during the S.W. MONSOON.

Experience of the New Pilot Station off the South Channel having established that it can be made by vessels from False Point with the greatest facility, and that pilots can also be readily supplied, and the same causes existing which originally rendered necessary the removal of the Pilot Station from off Point Palmyras to a position about fifteen miles S.W. by W. of the Outer Floating Light in lat. 20° 56 N., long. 88° 03′ E., and in from 17 to 22° fathoms water, Notice is hereby given, that this latter station will in future be continued during the S.W. Monsoon, viz., from the 15th March to the 15th September.

No difficulty can possibly be felt in passing from False Point to the present station, if common attention be paid to the lead and the following directions, prepared by Capt. Lloyd, late Officiating Marine Surveyor General, after a careful survey of the ground between the two points:—

"False Point Light House is in lat. 90° 194′ N. and long. 86° 47′ E., and the

"False Point Light House is in lat. 20° 19½ N. and long. 86° 47′ E., and the South Channel Buoy in lat. 20° 59′ N. and long. 88° 4′ E., and bears from the lighthouse N. 61° E. true, or N.E. by E. ½ E. by compass, distant 83 miles, and is laid in 15° Channel Buoy in lat. 20° 50° N. E. by E. ½ E. by compass, distant 83 miles, and South Channel Buoy in lat. 20° 59° N. and long. 80° 47′ E., and the South Channel Buoy in lat. 20° 59° N. and long. 80° 4° E., and bears from the lighthouse N. 61° E. true, or N.E. by E. ½ E. by compass, distant 83 miles, and is laid in 12 fathoms.

"A bank of soundings extends from off Point Palmyras in a direction towards the tail of the Western Sea Reef, and the nature of the bottom (as distinguished from that of the Hooghly deposit, which is sand and mud, with shining specks) is a gravelly substance composed of sand, shells, and small pebbles discharged from the 'Kunka,' and other rivers near Point Palmyras, the lighter material of which, being carried farther out, is deposited, and forms what is called the 'Pilot's Ridge,' which, in crossing to the N.Wd., shows a littless water than on either side. In coming from seaward, you shoal rather suddenly from 28 to 23 fathoms, upon its eastern edge. It is composed of a shelly sand, or minute gravel, of a reddish or rusty brown colour.

"The best guide, therefore, to enable a vessel to direct her course from False Point to the pilot vessels at the present station, will be to run down the edge of the 'Pilot's Ridge,' which can readily be done by making the Light House, and bringing it to bear about W.S.W. or S.W. by W., distant by computation from 10 to 15 miles, then steering to the E.N.Ed., and having gradually increased the depth of water to 23 fathoms upon the eastern edge of the ridge, regulate the course to keep between it and 27 fathoms, when, by attention to the lead and nature of the soundings, course, and distance run from the light house, it is almost impossible to miss the pilot vessels if the above limits are kept within, either by getting too far to windward or falling to leeward, for the soundings increase or rapidly to seaward from the present station, that 28 fathoms will not be more than 3 or 4 miles to the southward of it, and 23 fathoms will not be more than 3 or 4 miles to the southward of it, and 23 fathoms will not be more than 3 or 4 miles t olive-coloured mud, with occasionally a few bits of broken shells mixed with it."

Vessels approaching the station during the day are required to show the usual signal for a pilot, and by night to give as early and as much warming as possible by firing guns, burning blue lights, and by exhibiting two lights in a vertical position, where best seen; but commanders are strictly enjoined to avoid as much as possible making the station during the night.

Ships have been lost from running for the station in dark, or threatening, or actualty bad weather. In such weather, the pilot vessels cannot be made out, and if fallen in with, cannot board the inward-bound vessel, nor could the pilot take her in, if he was on board. No advantage, then, is gained by attempting toget a pilot in such weather, while the danger is imminent. It is strongly recommended, therefore, to commanders, under such circumstances, to put their ships under snug canvas while well out in deep water, and keep to sea.

By order of the Superintendent of Marine,

By order of the Superintendent of Marine,

JAS. SUTHERLAND, Secretary.

Fort William, 18th August, 1848.

- * The only alteration made in the above admirable directions of Capt. Lloyd, is that of substituting the expression" present station" for "proposed new sta-tion," which, as more than five years have elapsed since the change so indicated was adopted, might mislead.—J. S.
- † The light vessels are directed, when another vessel is approaching during the night, to show a light at the gaff end, to mark the way they are riding.

***O** To the First Part of this Dictionary, the preceding editions of which have met with general approbation, as well in Europe as in India, the author has by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, been enabled to make such extensive additions, that the number of words and phrases, now given and explained, exceeds by many thousands that contained in any other Hindustani and English Dictionary extant. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskiri, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages; and much attention has been paid to the insertion of the names of Plants, as well as of other natural productions, with the technical terms at present adopted for them in Europe.

LIFE INSURANCE.

The Directors recommend attention to the fact, that this Company has never deviated from those permanent principles on which it was originally established, guaranteed by a large real, and accessible, Capital.

They are not unmindful of the different modes of Life Insurance that have been adopted of late years, in order to attract the favour and attention of the public, on the principle of appropriating a share of future profits to all persons assured. Such Societies, however, being associations for mutual benefit, are necessarily attended with all the disadvantages of mutual risk and liability incidental to their formation; and however desirable it may be for individuals insuring their Lives for the benefit of their own families, or immediate nominees, to speculate on the advantages of Mutual Assurance and Partnership, those who effect Life Insurances in the capacity of Trustees, or otherwise, in the performance of a specific duty, for the consequences of which they are, or may hereafter be, held responsible, may find that an uncertain and indefinite engagement is not only unsuited, but repugnant, to the object they have in view.

tain and indefinite engagement is not only unsuited, but repugnant, to the object they have in view.

As many Persons have been deterred from offering themselves for Insurance, considering that on account of some ailment or other peculiarity of Health or Constitution, their Lives would not be accepted, the Directors give notice, that they receive Proposals on Lives so affected, upon an unreserved and faithful statement of the particular circumstances of the case, and under the professional advice of their Medical Officer.

Special Insurances of this class, if approved, will be subject to such extra Premium as may appear to the Directors apportioned to the Risk to be undertaken by the Office.

Policies for the whole Term of Life will be purchased on Terms to be taken by the Office.

Policies for the whole Term of Life will be purchased on Terms to be agreed on with the Parties interested, should they be desirous of surrendering them to the Company; or a Loan may be obtained thereon, in proportion to the value of the Policy.

LIFE INSURANCES, for short and limited periods, may be effected at reduced rates, and with the least practicable delay.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Bombay mail, although its arrival follows so close upon that of the Calcutta mail, only four days intervening, puts us in possession of nearly a month's intelligence from Bombay, and a fortnight's from Calcutta. speaking, this copious supply adds little to our stock of news, except a confirmation of the statement in our last Summary, that peace and quiet reign throughout India. Of domestic and local incidents, however, there is no dearth.

The Mopla affair, of which some fuller particulars are given in another column, was, as reported in our last issue, terminated by the death of the insurgents, who, like frenzied enthusiasts, preferred being bayoneted to surrendering. It appears from the official report made by Major Dennis, of her Majesty's 94th regiment, in command of a detachment of parties from that corps and the 39th regiment of Madras Native Infantry, that they came up with the Moplas, who had taken post in a pagoda near Teermanam Coonettoo, and, on the approach of the troops. the desperate men rushed out upon the detachment. armed with matchlocks, spears, swords, and war knives. and, notwithstanding the disparity of numbers, a sanguinary conflict ensued, ending, as we said, in the destruction of the 64 Moplas, with comparatively few casualties on the part of the troops. Three European soldiers were killed,-the Moplas directing their attack chiefly against this portion of the detachment,—and about a dozen men were wounded. The wounds of Major Dennis and Lieutenant Vaughan, of the 94th, were slight. It appears that these fanatics formed part of a mischievous band, who, some time since, attacked a Bombay officer on his way to the Nielgherries, and severely maltreated him.

The great topic of this mail is the heavy fall of rain with which the western and southern parts of India have been visited, and which have suffered greatly. The season may be said to have been one of almost unexampled severity, extending over an unusually long space of time. "Certainly," observes the Bombay Courier, "there has been none such in Western India for the last two-and-thirty years." The rains began at Bombay with a heavy fall on the 1st September, when 5 inches were measured in six hours, and the total fall for the season has been 118 inches. On the 17th the fall was general throughout the country. At Compta (on the coast) a tremendous hurricane accompanied the rain, beginning on the 16th of September and lasting until the evening of the 18th, committing great havoc, and destroying eighteen out of twenty-three native pattimars in the harbour. The storm was felt at Hydrabad (in Scinde), Cambay, and Malligaum, on the same day, the rains occasioning dreadful damage, causing the rivers to rise, and damaging many of the crops. At Surat, on the 18th ult., the rise of the river first began to occasion alarm. and on the following day it burst everywhere into the town, rising at one time 20 feet above the highest high-water mark. The cut intended to lead the waters of the Taptee by a direct course to the sea, and so save the city from a flood, was not able to accomplish the object. The loss of property occasioned by this calamity has been very great. At Goozerat the rains poured incressantly during the 17th, 18th, and 19th, and the Nizam's dominions had been deluged by the overflow of the swollen rivers. The September burst of storm seems to have extended itself all over the hills to the north, east, and south of Bombay—to have been experienced to a moderate extent at Madras, and more severely at Calcutta.

But the severest and the most remarkable calamity inflicted by the storm and rain was at Mooltan, where they effected what it cost the British army severe toil and heavy loss to accomplish. It would appear that the burst of storm, which occasioned the flooding of the rivers of the Punjab, occurred when the weather was open and fine over the greater part of India. On the 28th August, the celebrated fortress of Mooltan was converted by the rains and floods into a mass of ruins. Owing, it is supposed, to some neglect of the people in charge of the bund up the river, the waters broke through and deluged the whole surrounding country; the water which surrounds the fort forced its way through the counterscarp into the ditch; a tremendous rush of water suddenly brought down the outer wall and pendalls of the men. In a few hours the whole of the outer wall was flat, and the water undermining the towers, they and the guns on them were all hurled into the ditch. Next day (26th August) the second principal wall fell in in several places, the citadel wall and several of the domes having before come down.

At Shahpoor, a mishap occurred very similar to that which befel Mooltan. The British cantonment has been "swept clean away" by the Jelum.

The effects of the season had begun to show themselves among the troops in the Punjab as well as in Scinde, where (in Upper Scinde) the Indus had attained an unusual height. A considerable amount of sickness prevailed at Peshawur, Attock, and Wuzeerabad, at which latter place, on the 13th August, upwards of two dozen Europeans were struck down with apoplexy. Sickness had broken out at Mooltan on the subsidence of the waters, almost all the Europeans being laid up with fever.

That dreadful scourge of the East, and which has recently been permitted to lay only a lenient hand upon the British islands,—the cholera morbus,—has had many victims in Western India; amongst them are the old Mahjee, the last representative of the Holkars, who died at Indore, on the 9th September, and Dajee Kristna, the Dewan of Kolapore, on the 11th. During the month of September, according to the Bombay Times, upwards of 700 persons had been cut off in Bombay by this epidemic.

Letters from Lahore state that all was tranquil in that capital, and that the expectation of field operations in the next cold season had subsided; though the mountain train of artillery in that place was ready, as well as that at Ferozepore, and some artillery had been practising mountain warfare in the neighbourhood of Kussolie. A fort named Shumkurghur, eighteen miles from Peshawur, which commands the approach from Cabul, was to be reinforced, in order that we might be prepared for any inroad of marauders during the winter.

The Mofussilite mentions that Sir H. Lawrence had postponed his visit to Cashmere; Goolab Sing, it is said, would shortly come to Jummoo, and Sir Henry would probably meet him there.

The Delhi Gazette was informed that the ruler of Herat, Yar Mahomed Khan, had arrived at Cabul, across the Western Hazareh mountains, summoned by Dost Mahomed Khan to consult on the best means of relieving himself, by the recapture of Peshawur, of the great expense incurred in maintaining the Peshawur chiefs, their families and adherents, who, accompanying Dost Mahomed in his ignominious flight through the Khaiber, have since remained dependent on his bounty. The information is, however, not credited.

A letter from Lucknow, of the 12th September, represents that everything is in a wretched state in Oude; "all the troops, and even the King's relations, are months in arrears; the King has only left his palace once for many months. There is little chance of the country improving under the present misrule. A change must take place shortly, or we may expect a mutiny among the troops, which will compet the interference of the British Government." Nor are affairs much better in the dominions of the Nizam, who, it appears, has determined to be his own minister. The Madras Spectator, of September 19, says—

"Hyderabad letters inform us that General Fraser waited on the Nizam recently, with a translation of the instructions received by him from the Supreme Government, in answer to his communication touching the dismissal of Shums-ool-Omrah. The conference is said to have been prolonged, but strictly private, so that, although much is rumoured of its purport, nothing certain can be known beyond what is to be gathered from the fact of Rajah Ram Bux's re-appointment, either actual or contemplated, to the office of peishkar. Report adds, and with every appearance of probability, that the Resident urged on his Highness the nomination of a dewan, but was met by a declaration that dewans had occasioned the embarrassments of Government, over whose affairs the Nizam himself intended to preside. As no minister has been named, we presume that his Highness adheres to this resolve."

The Hyderabad correspondent of the Englishman furnishes an outline of the measures adopted by the Nizam to remedy his financial difficulties. The plan amounts simply to this, to sell jaghires as far as possible, and supply the remaining deficits by direct spoliation, upon the principle which Napoleon adopted towards his contractors.

It is still affirmed that Sir Charles Napier was to leave Simla about the 20th October for the frontier, to Peshawur on a tour of inspection—travelling, it is said, "in very light marching order." The Governor-General would descend the hills, and move, with greater state, in the track of the Commander-in-Chief, about the 10th of November. Lord Viscount Gough is reported to have declined an invitation from the élite of Simla to an entertainment, proposed by a deputation, "upon a principle and for motives which he thought it unnecessary to enter upon; and begged that the deputation would inform the gentlemen who had now come forward upon the eve of his departure how greatly he regretted being unable to accept the honour they wished to do him."

The programme for the annual relief of the army had not yet been made public. The Bombay papers state that the authorities are waiting for a new general scheme of distribution, which is expected from Simla, and which will embrace the armies of all three Presidencies. It was generally understood at Calcutta that an order had arrived from home for bestowing a donation of six months' batta on the Army of the Punjab, in lieu of all claims for prizemoney, including, it is said, that of Mooltan, which would go to form part of the general fund.

The presidential intelligence supplies but few topics of a strictly local character. The police commissioners had closed their inquiry and sent in a report, the nature of which had not transpired. According to the Hurkaru, that investigation will be the forerunner of many others, "as it is currently reported that, in several departments of the Government service, similar but less public inquiries have been ordered." Amongst the drafts of Acts published in the Calcutta Gazette, are two worthy of notice; one securing the estates of intestates against malversation by the ecclesiastical registrars at the presidencies; another, to enable a judge to superadd a fine to the other punishments of theft, as a means of reimbursing the owner of the property stolen.

At Bombay, the Governor had returned from Panwell. The Commander-in-Chief was still in the Deccan, and it was expected he would visit Sattara, Belgaum, and other stationa, before returning to Bombay. The Bishop had again arrived at the presidency, after a somewhat long absence, during which he visited Ahmednuggur, Sattara, Poonah, and other places: at Sattara he consecrated a new church and burying-ground, and at Poonah he held a Confirmation, administering that rite to twenty persons. Sir E. Perry had intimated his intention of proceeding to Scinde and the North-West Provinces.

Our law intelligence under the Bombay head contains a report of the proceedings in the case of Mr. Richmond, which will be read with feelings of sorrow. The example of a merchant of respectable station, sentenced by the Insolvent Court, to which he applied for relief, to imprisonment for fraud, in the character of a trustee, is a melancholy one; but the sentence will have a wholesome influence. The firmness of the Chief Justice, in applying to Mr. Richmond's case the penal clause of the Act, does him honour.

The accounts from Ceylon, which are to the 17th September, furnish few topics calling for remark. Declarations were getting up by the friends of Lord Torrington, who seems to be in rather better odour with the European community, although the party adverse to him is strong. There had been a movement amongst the natives for the re-establishment of the ancient Gansabes—village courts of temperance. The whole island had been benefited by the rains; the coming crop, if not seriously affected by the blight, was expected to reach 400,000 cwts.

Intelligence from Borneo gives the result of the expedition against the Sarebas and Sakharran pirates. About 90 prahus were captured or destroyed, and from 600 to 1,800 Dyaks were killed. On the British side two whites were wounded, and four or five natives killed. The force consisted of her Majesty's ships Albatross and Royalist, the Company's steamer Nemesis, and the Ranee, steam-tender to the Meander, with Rajah Brooke's fleet of 50 to 60 prahus, averaging 30 men each. The Sarebas were the worst pirates on the coast, and their power is now considered to be annihilated.

CALCUTTA POLICE INQUIRY.

At the last public sitting of the Commissioners of Police Inquiry, on the 4th September, they examined Mr. McCann, the deputy superintendent of the Calcutta police (respecting whose conduct much had been said in the course of the investigation), with reference entirely to the statements publicly made by others respecting him. We subjoin some portions of his examination as showing more palpably than any other evidence the state of the police in the very metropolis of British India:—

Mr Colvin (to Mr. McCann).—You received a warrant in February, 1846, from the late Mr. C. K. Robison, the magistrate, for the apprehension of one Sibeliunder Mullick, who was charged with having forged the name of Smith, Huffnagle, and Balfour, to a cheque on the treasurer of the Bank of Bengal, for

Rs. 2,000, and uttered it at the bank?

Mr. McCann.—1 did. It was delivered into the hands of Gunga Ram at the suggestion of Mr. Robison. It was subsequently taken out of Gunga Ram's hands, and transferred to a deputy superintendent. I believe it was the late Mr. Daunt to whom I transferred it. Knowing that Sibchunder Mullick lived in the northern division, I made it over to Mr. Daunt, who was the deputy superintendent of that division.

was the deputy superintendent of that division.

Mr. Colvin.—What became of the warrant after this transfer?

Mr. McCann.—Mr. Daunt reported to me that Sibchunder was not in Calcutta; on which I took the warrant from him, and gave it back to Gunga Ram, with instructions to make a strict search for Sibchunder, and to serve it on him the moment he found him. Gunga Ram never returned the warrant to me after I delivered it to him the second time. Nor could he execute it. Up to the latest day I believed that Sibchunder was not in Calcutta.

Mr. Colvin.—But we have it upon the authority of respectable inhabitants of the town, who have been examined by us, that Sibchunder Mullick had been going about publicly in Calcutta since the issue of the warrant. Indeed, Bissumber Law himself, a clerk in the police office, has said as much to us. Were you, the deputy superintendent of police, ignorant of Sibchunder's presence in Calcutta, when it was so notorious to others in the town?

Mr. Mc Cann.—I know nothing of Sibchunder's having been in Calcutta. Up to the latest day I understood he was at Benares. If I had known anything of his being in Calcutta, I should have had him apprehended under the warrant I brought to the police.

Mr. Colvin.—You were aware, of course, that the prosecution against Sibchunder Mullick was on the part of the Bank of Bengal?

Mr. Mc Cann. - Most certainly I was.

Mr. Colvin.—Do you suppose that Gunga Ram, in violation of his duty, forbore executing the warrant although Sibchunder was in Calcutta, and that he deceived you in representing him to have left Calcutta? One of the two statements before us must be false—either that of certain respectable native inhabitants of the town, or the report of Gunga Ram to you?

Mr. McCann.-I do not suppose that Gunga Ram deceived me. I had every reason to believe that he would not fail to execute the warrant, if he could find Sibchunder.

Mr. Colvin. — Did you never know that Sibchunder came to the police in January last—did you never hear that he had come?

Mr. Mc Cann.—Never. The first time I knew of it was from the report I read in the Englishman of one of the investigations held by the commissioners.

Mr. Colvin.-We have received two statements to the effect that you did hear of it. They are a written and an oral statement of Major Birch's, and an oral statement of Mr. Strettell's. Major Birch and Mr. Strettell do not agree with each other in certain respects; but they agree with each other in representing that you knew of Sibchunder's presence at the police in January Major Birch, in his written statement, says - "Mr. McCann did state to me that Mr. Robison's warrant was in existence, but that it was not to be found, and that he believed it had been given to one inspector Lee, who had died, but the warrant had not been forthcoming among his papers. I beg here to state that the senior and junior magistrates under the police system have never exercised any control whatever over the executive portion of it." When Major Birch was examined by us inperson, we asked him—"Did you ever apply to the superintendent, or deputy superintendent, or any other member of the police, to know whether a warrant had been issued against Sibchunder Mullick, and at whose instance?"—and Major Birch's answer was-" I did. I spoke to Mr. McCann about it and he told me he knew nothing about it-or rather that he will not knew what had become of it. I have a distinct recollection that he said it had been given to an inspector of the name of Lee, who is now dead." The statement of Mr. Strettell was, that, after Major Birch had discharged Sibchunder, he met Mr. McCann and told him what had been done, and that Mr. McCann replied—" I am sorry for this, as the warrant is not yet recalled. Major Birch will get into a scrape for this."

Mr. Mc Cann. -- I never had any communication with Major Birch, direct or indirect, with regard to Sibchunder's arrest or discharge. I knew nothing of Sibchunder's having been in the police office or released, until I read, in Commercolly, the newspaper reports of the police investigations. About Mr. Strettell, I recollect his coming down to my office and asking me if there was a warrant out against Sibchunder. He asked me if it was in force. I said "certainly." As he was an attorney, and not knowing what his object was in questioning me, I told him nothing more. He immediately went upstairs.

Mr. Colvin.—Then you mean to say you never had any such conversation with Mr. Strettell as he relates?

Mr. Mc Cann. I have we recollection of any such conversation.

Mr. Colvin (to Major Birch).—Do you recollect the time when, and the place where, you spoke to Mr. McCann?

Major Birch.—I spoke to him in my office in the police. sent for him into my office, and told him to stay the execution against Sibchunder, in consequence of Mr. Strettell's application, after he was discharged. I even think I spoke to him in the presence of Mr. Strettell.

Mr. Colvin.-Did Mr. McCann make no intimation to you, that the prosecution against Sibchunder was the prosecution of the Bank of Bengal?

Major Birch .- None whatever.

Mr. Colvin.—You fully and distinctly remember, that there was such a conversation between you and Mr. McCann on the subject of this case, as you have related.

Major Birch .- Most fully and distinctly. I am at a loss to conceive how the conversation can have escaped Mr. McCann's My account of it seems to me to carry an appearmemory. ance of truth upon the very face of it. I stated, on a former occasion, that Mr. McCann named Lee to me as the inspector to whom he had ultimately transferred the warrant, adding that Mr. McCann informed me that Lee had since died. The moment I stated this, I asked Mr. McCann, who was present, to say whether such a person as Lee ever was inspector of the police, and whether he was dead. Mr. McCann replied in the affirmative to both questions. Now, I had no personal knowledge of either of these facts, and could not have McCann in connection with this case. I have said that Mr. Strettell was present when I spoke to Mr. McCann. I am not positive, but I have a strong impression that he was. He must have been, for it was on his own application that I ordered Mr. McCann to stay the execution of the warrant.

Mr. Colvin. - Do you remember on what day it was that the conversation between Mr. McCann and yourself took place, to which your verbal and written statements, just read by me, refer? Major Birch. - I believe it took place the day on which, Sibchunder having been discharged by me, Mr. Strettell applied that the execution of the warrant issued against his client be staid. I believe I told Mr. McCann the same day, to stay the execution of the warrant.

Mr. Colvin (to Mr. McCann).—Have you anything to add upon this subject?

Mr. McCann.—I have nothing to add.
Mr. Colvin.—Was there such a men as Lee ever an inspector of police?

Mr. Mc Cann. - Yes, there was; but he did not belong to the northern division, in which Sibchunder resided, and where the warrant was to be executed. He belonged to the Mangoe-lane section, in the middle division.

Mr. Colvin.—We have found in the office certain records shewing that you transacted business in this office on the 15th of January, 1849, the day when Sibchunder was discharged by Major Birch.

Mr. Mc Cann. - No doubt I did. I was never a day absent, except on leave.

Mr. Colvin. — Do you think it possible that a party against whom you had a warrant; which ought to have been executed the moment he was seen, would have ventured openly into the police-office, and walked as openly upstairs, if he thought for a moment you would execute that warrant upon him ?- Can you, who have been an officer of this police for thirty years, think that this was at all likely—at all possible?

Mr. Mc Cann. - There are two gates to the police, and two staircases.

Mr. Dampier. - You had better reconsider your answer. What you have said is no answerall

Mr. McCann.-I don't think the man would have appeared at the police-office, unless he was sure he would be discharged when he came.

Mr. Colvin. - But the object of the discharge was to obtain liberty to go abroad again, free from the risk of apprehension. You say, however, that the warrant remained in your hands good for the purposes of execution, and that you fully intended to execute it, the moment you saw Sibchunder. The discharge by Major Birch, therefore, was merely nominal. It did not relieve Sibchunder from the liability of being arrested under the warrant. What then do you suppose gould be a labeliance of the liability of the control of the liability of the warrant. warrant. What, then, do you suppose, could have induced Sibchunder to obtain the nominal discharge, when he might still have been taken up, under the warrant, any time after-wards? We can only test the truth of your statement by probabilities; and we frankly tell you that your statement will not bear that test. The improbability is glaring. It stares one in the face

Mr. McCann.—I have been long enough..... The parties that Major Birch's discharge was no discharge. The parties that Major Birch's discharge was not the prosecutors. would have been executed. I fully intended that it should He; and I had every confidence in the proper discharge of his duty by Gunga Ram, who held the warrant; and am convinced he did not deceive me in reporting that Sibchunder was not in Calcutta.

Mr. Colvin.—All this but adds to the excessive improbability I have just been referring to. But to proceed. We have been informed in the course of this inquiry, that there have been no accounts kept here of property received by you as deputy superintendent of police, beyond a single receipt book for articles returned, commencing from May, 1816; and that the key of the police chest was exclusively in your keeping, except during one month, when you were sick, partly at home and partly on the the river, and when Mr. Maher, your son in-law, had charge of it. Have you any remark to make on this?

Mr. Mc Cann .- I kept no account of, and gave no receipts for, the property I received. The subordinate police officers who brought articles to me, put them in a parcel, on which they wrote the names of the parties to whom they had belonged, the names of the officers detaining them, a list of the contents, and the date, and put them into the chest, where they remained until claimed by parties who had a right to them.

Mr. Colvin.—How comes it there is no receipt book before

May, 1846?
Mr. McCann.—I think a writer of the name of Tulloo kept a book, but there was no regular book kept. The practice was to grant a receipt upon the back of the petitions for property. I believe the practice of keeping a receipt book such as that commencing May, 1846, was introduced by my instructions.

Mr. Colvin.- Was it you or Captain Hicks that desired section books should be kept in which property received at the section-houses, should be entered? Mr. Mc Cann - I believe it was Captain Hicks.

Mr. Colvin.—The only sources of information that we can find respecting the property that came into the police from time to time, are some section lists of articles received in the section-houses, a list of articles sold in the police, a list of articles still in the police-chest, and a list of articles delivered to claimants. There is no list, or registry, or record of any kind, to enable any body to say what articles were deposited at the police; so that, if any property, received at the section houses, appears in neither the list of sales, nor the list of the police-chest contents, nor the list of returned goods, it is impossible to determine upon whom the responsibility is to be fixed. Now, these are official memoranda, furnished to us by the chief magistrate's accountant, containing extracts from the book of section F., middle division, which show that certain property was brought into the police, but not accounted for in the books of the office.

(Extract from the book of Section F. Middle division, read : first tem, "Aug. 22, 1846.—Rs. 300 in cash, belonging to Burgee Raur, deposited with Mr. McCaun by Inspector Barton, of Hummaum Gully Thannah.")

Mr. Colvin.-Look at the first item in the first memo. That item does not appear in the list of sales, -it does not appear in the list of refunds—and it does not appear in the list of the police-chest contents. What has become of the Rs. 800 mentioned in it as having been delivered by Inspector Barton to

Mr. McCann. - If Inspector Barton did deliver the amount to me, it must have been in the police-chest, and accounted for.

Mr. Colvin. - But Rs. 54 was all the cash that was found in the chest.

Mr. Mc Cann .- I can only repeat, that if Mr. Barton gave the money to me, it must have been in the police-chest, and accounted for.

Mr. Colvin. - But this is no answer. It only comes to thisthat if the money is in the chest, it is in the chest; but if it is not, who is the party that must be made responsible for the deficit? The absence of any receipts from you, makes it impossible for us to say who it was that dealt with any particular missing property. Here, for instance, is an entry in the section-book, charging you with Rs. 300. You cannot yourself say, with any certainty, whether the money was, or was not, delivered to you in fact; and there is no conclusive proof, one way or the other, by which we can be guided.

Mr. McCann.—I never gave a receipt for what I received; but I was all the time led to believe that the inspectors, who delivered property to me, preserved a memo, whereby to check such delivery. As to Rs. 54 only being found in the police-chest, the Rs. 300, mentioned in Mr. Swinden's memo, may have been paid into the police treasury.

Mr. Colvin.—This Rs. 300 is entered in the section-book as paid to you on August 22nd, 1846. You now say it may have been paid into the police treasury.

been paid into the police treasury subsequently. But here is a memo. of payments into the police treasury on April 30th, 1847:—
"Entered in sale-book.

"To miscellaneous cash, found on gamblers, bribes given to police officers, sale of unclaimed coats, cash found on prisoners not afterwards claimed, and loose cash found in treasury without labels.

Paid into the police treasury, April 30th, 1847 214 2 4 So that the aggregate amount paid into the police treasury, nine months after August 1846, was far short of Rs. 300.

Mr. Mc Cann. - Of course, then, the Rs. 200 could not have been paid into the Treasury up to April, 1847. But if an inspector had property to deliver to me, he would have delivered it through the deputy superintendent of his division—not to me direct.

Mr. Colvin. - I observe another entry of a cow belonging to a deceased woman, whose property came into the police, being made over to you.

Mr. Mc Cann. - To me, sir? I have no recollection whatever of the beast.

Mr. Colvin (to Mr. McCannah).—Do you own the cow, Mr. McCannalı?

Mr. Mc Cannah,-Not I, sir.

Mr. Colvin (to Mr. McCannah).—Can you throw some further light upon the system of accounts that has been in existence with respect to public property coming into the police?

Mr. McCannah.—The section books containing entries of property received in the section were kept by the native officers of each section. There was a book kept by the inspectors of each section, but that was only an occurrence-book-not a book containing such entries as the native officers made in their own books. The books of the native officers were considered as private records for the information of the jemadar of the section; and neither the inspectors nor the deputy superintendent examined them.

Mr. Colvin. - This is quite new, and shews the system to have been still more defective than I had hitherto believed it to be. Why were the books of the native officers considered private? Why were they not treated as public records? Is this the first time you have heard of Rs. 300, belonging to a deceased woman, having been entered in the books of one of your own sections as delivered to Mr. McCann? Why really, if there was no regular registry kept by a responsible officer, of what was received in each section house, and Mr. M'Cann gave no receipts for what was deposited in the police, what system of check is there, in the name of common sense, by which a man can trace any particular property to any particular officer or officers, or discover the mode in which it has been dealt with. Mr. McCann is charged in the section book with Rs. 300; he has no recol-, lection of having received the money, but refers us to the police chest. We have heard a good deal about this same chest, but cannot get to the bottom of it. In this case, however, it is clear the money was not found there, nor does it appear to have been refunded to any claimant. What, then, has become of it?—and who is it that must be made answerable for the deficit? We cannot ascertain; for Mr. McCann. who never mone for this sum of money, cannot tell; and for all I know, Inspector Barton may repudiate the "private entry" of the mative officer of the section, and deny all knowledge or recolrelection of the aubject too.

Mr. Mc Cannah. -- If the money was ever paid to Mr. Mc Cann at all, it must have been paid to him through me. But I know nothing of any such payment. Mr. Barton never delivered the money into my hands; and it never passed through me. I have no knowledge of the entry respecting it, in the native section book, nor of any entry of that kind in other books.

Mr. Mc Cann; - I always understood that there was a regular memo, kept at the section-house by the inspectors of the pro-perty they received and delivered. Any petition that was presented to me for property I referred to the deputy superintendent of the division for report.

Mr. Colvin. - You talk about having always understood. Pray do not tell us what you understood to be the case. the deputy superintendent of the police, must and ought to have known whether a regular registry of articles received at the section-house was kept by a responishle officer there or not. You are not a man that does not understand business, and cannot but see that the system that has been going on under you with respect to these accounts is one that may be laughed at. Now, tell me, did you or did you not, make it a part of your duty to satisfy yourself that such a register, as I have mentioned, was kept up?

Mr. Mc Cann. - I always understood it was.

Mr. Colvin .- Upon what did that understanding rest?

Mr. Mc Cann .- I thought it the duty of the deputy superintendent of the division to keep such a registry.

Mr. Colvin (to Inspector Barton) .- I direct your attention to the first item entered in the extract from a book of section F., furnished to us by the chief magistrate's accountant, and ask you to state what you know of the Rs. 300 mentioned there as having been delivered by you to Mr. McCann?

Mr. Barton,-I do not remember having delivered this sum to Mr. McCann.

Mr. Colvin. - Then how came that entry there? There is no room for suspecting that it was fraudulently inserted; for we sent for all the section-books of a sudden, and Mr. McCannali immediately went down, and brought away at once all that he could collect. Can you account for the existence of the entry?

Mr. Barton.-I think I can safely say I did not deliver this money to Mr. McCann, or receive it myself. I was not in the division in 1846. I went there in May 1847, or thereabouts.

Mr Colvin. - Suppose you had paid the money to Mr. McCann, what proof would you now have had that Mr. McCann received it from you? How could you have proved the pay. ment now?

Mr. Barton.-I would have had no proof. I never got a receipt from Mr. McCann for what I gave him, and I never saw any police officer receive any receipt for property he delivered into the police. The section books were brought by inspectors every Monday morning, but they were not countersigned so as show whether property mentioned in them was deposited in the police.

Mr. Colvin .- Inspector King has told us that he brought the property of one Mr. Dixon, deceased, into the police in Aug. 1846, among which were 35 sovereigns, 5 half-sovereigns, and 6 rupees, in a bag, which he put upon your table, and went away; he also said he brought a quadrant. A label was put upon the bag of sovereigns five days afterwards, when the contents consisted of only 17 sovereigns, 5 half-sovereigns, and 6 rupees. We asked Mr. McCannah whether he knew anything about the matter, and he told us, that he did see Mr. King bring a quantity of sovereigns into the police in August, 1846, and that, judging from their bulk, he believed there were about 30 sovereigns-for he did not count them. Five days afterwards, 18 sovereigns, according to Mr. King's account, or 14 sovereigns, according to Mr. McCan-nali's, had disappeared from the bag. What became of them? nah's, had disappeared from the bag. What became of them?

Mr. McCann.—I believe certain demands against the estate of the deceased were paid out of the sovereigns brought intothe police. The bills are in the police chest, and will speak for themselves.

A batch of documents was here produced from Mr. McCann's office. One of these papers showed that a bill for 6 sovereigns due by Mr. Dixon to one Mrs. Wilson, for board and lodging, was paid, but not within five days after the deposit made in the police, but nine months after. Mrs. Wilson, it appeared, had demanded her, money from Mr. McCann shortly after Mr. Dixon's death, and received a promise of payment, but not the money, which was paid May, 1847, when she renewed her appliention by letter.

Mis. Wilson's bill was also in duced, and there appeared this memo. across it, "Paid, May, 1847."

Mr. Co'tin.—It is clear from this, that the amount of the bill was not paid until nine months after the delivery of the sovereigns into your office.

Mr. Mc Cannah.—I fixed the label on the bag of sovereigns long after the bag was brought into the office, and antedated the date of the original entry. I am not quire sure of this, but I have a slight recollection that I did so.

Mr. Colvin.—Shall we say a slight recollection, or no recollection whatever?

Mr. Mc Cannah. - I have some knowledge that I did what I state. It is so long ago, that I have no distinct recollection.

Mr. Colvin .- This is only the result of a system which makes it impossible for us to say whether the money was safely kept or -Well, what became of the other sovereigns? Admitting that there were 30, instead of 35, there still remain 7 to be accounted for.

Mr. Mc Cannah. - I know nothing about the rest.

Mr. Colvin .- What became of the quadrant, the property of Mr. Dixon, also delivered into Mr. McCann's room by Mr.

King?

Mr. McCannah .- I put it upon a shelf in Mr. McCann's room, and saw it there until a month and a half, or two months before Mr. McCann went away on sick-leave this last time; but after that, and when I took an inventory of the stock, I did not find it.

Mr. Colvin.-What do you say, Mr. McCann?

Mr. Mc Cann .- I have no recollection whatever of the quadrant.

Mr. Colein .- No! Why, Mr. McCannah says he left it on a shelf in your room when it came to the police, and that he saw it there until about two months before your departure from Calcutta on sick-leave, a period of very neary three years!

Mr. McCann. - All I can say is, I have no recollection about

Mr. Colvin.-We have heard from Mr. McCannah and Mr. Farrell, during the course of this inquiry, that you gave the former a gold Trichinopoly chain and a silver watch, and the latter a gold Trichinopoly chain-both watch and chains being the property of a deceased mariner named Carter. Mr. McCannah also produced the following memo., written by yourself:—
"Estate Carter, deceased. "Effects sold 7th May, 1846. See book .- Two gold Trichinopoly chains with Messrs. McCannah and Farrell, and a silver open-faced watch, No. 6,475, maker Lee, London." Now, what did you give away these articles for?

Mr. Mc Cann. - For public purposes.

Mr. Colvin. - Pray, Mr. McCann, remember you are speaking to persons of common sense, and do not insult them by saving that you gave a pair of Trichinopoly chains to two of your efficers for public purposes?

Mr. Mc Cann .- I lent the watches for public purposes, and I had no idea but that the chains were attached to the watches. I gave the chains that the watches might be hung by them.

Mr. Colvin .- But Mr. Farrell had no watch given to him. What public purpose was the Trichinopoly chain to serve in his

(Mr. McCann makes no reply.)

Mr. Colvin .- Now about the mint blanks. I will read a statement made to us by Mrs. Purney, Mr. Farrell's reply, and a note from Lieut. - Colonel Forbes, on the subject. (Read.)

Mr. Mc Cann. - I admit having given Mr. Farrell the blanks to keep.

Mr. Colvin .- On what authority did you do that?

Mr. Mc Cann .- By Capt. Hicks's orders. Capt. Hicks I believe gave those orders in consideration of Mr. Farrell having taken some trouble in the case. This must have been so, I think.

Mr. Colvin .- Thinking won't do. Remember you are making a statement of the utmost importance to a public officer, and be cautious in what you say. Do you distinctly remember having received the orders from Capt Hicks?

Mr. Mc Cann .- I must have spoken to Capt. Hicks, and got his authority to give the blanks to Mr. Farrell, before I gave them up.

Mr. Colvin.-My next question to you will be as to a clock stolen from the native chapel in South Colingah-street. Mr. McCannah, at one of our last sittings, stated that Mr. Farrell had received the loan of a clock from you, in the same way that he (Mr. McCannah) had received a watch from you, for use in his station-house, and that the clook bore the name of some Baptist mission church on the dial. Mr. Farrell denied receiving the clock from you, either as a loan or a present, but said that Mr. Shircore, who had bought the clock at Tulloh and Co.'s, had made a present of it to him out of your room. Mr. Law, who has made some further inquiry into this matter, has submitted to us the following memorandum. (Read.) Did you, or did you not, give that clock to Mr. Farrell?

Mr. Mc Cann.—I never gave it to Mr. Farrell. I had nothing to do with it, after I had sent the case up to the magistrate.

Mr. Colvin. - But Mr. McCannah says you did give it to Mr. Farrell after the dismissal of the charge by the magistrate.

Mr. McCann.-I do not support that statement.

Mr. Farrell. - I reported to Mr. McCann that Mr. Shircore had given the clock to me, being unwilling to take it himself.

Mr. Coloin (to Mr. McCann). - What did you do with the clock? Here was a clock belonging to a church, and said to have been stolen by parties who were discharged by the magistrate for want of evidence: the immediate purchaser, for reasons assigned, declined asserting his claims: it is clear the clock ought, under such circumstances, to have been sent to the church, but, according to Mr. McCannah, you lent it to Mr. Farrell, and according to Mr. Farrell, you allowed him to take it out of your room, as a gift from Mr. Shircore.

Mr. Mc Cann. - I did neither, and I do not recollect that Mr. Farrell ever reported to me, as he says he did, that Mr. Shir-core had made him a present of it.

Mr. Colvin.—I will read a statement on the subject forwarded by the Rev. Mr. Wenger. (Read.)

Mr. McCann.—I repeat that I did not give or lend that clock to Mr. Farrell.

Mr. Farrell.—Was not the clock in Mr. McCann's room for six months after the investigation? Mr. McCannah can say that it was; and if it was, does Mr. McCann mean to say I could take it out of his room without his knowledge?

Mr. Mc Cannah .- It was for twenty days in Mr. Mc Cann's room after the investigation, not six months.

Mr. Colvin. - What have you to say to this, Mr. McCann? Mr. McCannah says the clock was in your room twenty days after Mr. Robison had dismissed the case, and yet you say you had nothing to do with it after the dismissal?

Mr. Mc Cann.-I can only repeat, that I had nothing to do with the clock after the investigation by the magistrate.

Mr. Colvin (to Mr. Farrell) .- Well, then you, Mr. Farrell, who expressed so much regret at the church having failed to recover its own through Mr. Robison, did you consider it the best mode of giving effect to your regret, by taking away the clock afterwards to your own house for your own use?

Mr. Farrell.—I did not take the clock. I beg to remove that impression from your mind. I did not take the clock to my own house.

Mr. Colvin.—Then how came it there? Did it travel to your house? But perhaps you mean you received it.

Mr. Farrell.-Yes, I did, as a present from Mr. Shircore, the last purchaser.

Mr. Colvin.—But having expressed your opinion so emphatically to Mr. Wenger, that his was a clear case, and having stated to him your regret that the magistrate had not thought it right to put him in possession of it, do you not think it would have been more consistent, when Mr. Shircore gave the clock to you, to have restored it to Mr. Wenger, instead of receiving it for yourself?

Mr. Farrell.-Mr. Shircore offered the clock to me, and, satisfied that he had become legally possessed of it, I received it. I perceive that my answers here are taken with apparent doubt; but I mean to lay a statement before the public before long, which will speak for itself.

Mr. Farrell (to Mr. McCann).-Could I have taken the clock out of your room without your permission?

Mr. Mc Cann. - You could.

Mr. Colvin (to Mr. McCann). - You have stated that you received Rs. 1,350 from Baboo Mutty Loll Seal, for the purchase of the site of the Puttledangali thannah. Can you state the precise date on which you received the money?

Mr. McCann.—It must have been in January, 1846, or ebruary, 1846; I do not remember the exact date. I sent the February, 1846; I do not remember the exact date. money to the police treasury, and the label must have gone with it. I believe that I sent the money up with its label just as I received it.

Mr. Harwood.-No rupees came up to our office in respect of the Puttledangah thannah. Bank-notes came up, under an envelope, without any label attached.

Mr. Colvin. - Did the numbers of the notes correspond with the numbers contained in the memorandum given in by Mutty Loll Seal as of the notes he paid for the site of the Puttledangah thannah?

Mr. Harwood.—They did not—I am sure they did not. numbers of the notes sent up to our office were different.

(Here the report in the Hurkaru, Sept. 5, breaks off.)

EXTRA ALLOWANCES TO NATIVE TROOPS.

Considerable misapprehension exists as to the nature of the increased allowances which the native troops in the Punjab have been and are drawing. We have been at considerable pains to procure correct information on the subject, and the result of our inquiries is as follows.

We must go back, a few years, to the time when Sir Charles Napier added Scinde to the British dominions in the East; at which the native troops in Scinde, when serving in the field, were allowed, in addition to pay and full batta, what are known in the service as "money rations,"—that is, the money value (whatever it might chance to be) of a native soldier's daily ration. When Scinde became a British province, Lord Ellenborough,-reasonably, according to European ideas, but most unjustly, according to the bigoted and short-seeing apprehension of the native soldiers, -put a stop to these "money rations;" and it was this act which, as is well known, produced the mutinous conduct by which certain Bengal regiments disgraced themselves in 1343-44. When the troops had returned to their duty, Lord Ellenborough fixed the Scinde allowances as follows: - Under all circumstances, in cantonments or in the field, the men were to draw full batta; in cantonments, should the cost of food rise above a certain standard, they were to receive compensation in money; in the field, or marching, they were still to enjoy the "money rations." Things remained thus until August, 1845, when Lord Hardinge, simultaneously with other advantages granted to the native army, revised the Scinde allowances, and placed them on the following liberal (or as many military men think absurdly extravagant) scale :-

	aba ara	•	Je d	ma	•	H	avil lars	-	Na	ick	s .	20	of ear	rs'	16	of year	rs'	Se u 16	nde year	B,
In canton- ments}

The following table shows the rates of monthly pay which the corresponding ranks are entitled to in the provinces:—

		u ba	:	Jema- dars.		H	lavi lare	l- •	Naicks.			Sepoya of 20 years' service.			Sepoys of 16 years' service.			under 16 years'
In canton- ments } In the field .	67 82	0	0	24 32	8	0	14 19	0	0	1 3	0	0	9	0 8	0	8	0 8	0	7	0 8	0

Let it be observed, from the two foregoing tables, that the pay of a sepoy, under 16 years' service, serving in the field in Scinde, or merely marching from one post to another, is made equal to that of the non-commissioned officer (naick) serving in a cantonment in India; and that the pay of the latter is less by two rupees than that of the 20 years' sepoy in Scinde, which is equal again to a havildar's pay in these provinces.

After the battle of Sobraon, when the victorious army crossed the Sutlej, Lord Hardinge was so ill-advised (as we have always maintained) as to place the entire native portion of it upon these extravagant Scinde allowances. Doubtless, many excuses are to be made for a step so fraught, as it has since turned out, with inconvenience. Four of the severest battles which the Indian army had ever been engaged in had just been fought, and there was no prognosticating how much further resistance we might encounter; every means were clearly to be taken to encourage and conciliate the native soldiery, who formed so large and important a portion of the army; and no means of accomplishing the desired end could be devised so efficacious as increasing their pay. Besides, at the time Lord Hardinge's order was issued, a march to Lahore, and a speedy retreat across the Sutlej was all that was anticipated; so that the increase of pay seemed likely to be very temporary. But then came the arrangement that a garrison, of which native troops were to form a large part, should remain at Lahore, until at least the end of the year; and the last thing, of course, to be thought of, was to reduce the pay of troops about to be employed on a service so delicate, and requiring such perfect contentment on the part of the men with the Government they served. So the garrison of Lahore was continued on Scinde field allowances. At the end of 1846, the garrison of Lahore was relieved, and so much reduction was effected as that the relieving regiments were placed on Scinde cantonment allowances, as long as not actually marching or in the field. The Scinde cantonment allowances were continued to the succeeding garrison, with the like privilege of drawing Scinde field allowances, if called into the field, or required to quit their cantonmeuts. The same allowances were extended, by General Orders of the 19th November, 1849, to every regiment or detachment composing the Sutlej; and these Punjib," from the moment of its passing the Sutlej; and these nublicly recalled. We have not been able to ascertain exactly what portion of their allowances it was, the retrenchment of which occasioned the late outbreak in the 13th and 22nd regts. N.I. at Rawul Pindee. The Delhi Gazette affirms that those regiments refused their pay because the Scinde field allowance of Rs. 1. 8. per man was withheld. We should like to know, however, for what month the pay way tendered them at the reduced rate? The regiments in question have certainly been sent to canton at Rawul Pindee, and from the date from which they were permitted to discharge their marching establishments (if, indeed, they have been yet permitted), have not the slightest claim to the Scinde field allowances. Have they not, however, been retrenched the field allowance for a period when they were actually in the field, or at all events were required to retain their field establishments? The guilt or otherwise of the men, and the incapacity and folly or otherwise of Government and its advisers, must be very much determined according as this question shall be answered.

It is evident that not only must the Scinde field allowances be withdrawn eventually from the native troops in the Punjab, but they must be placed in every respect on the same footing with the troops in these provinces as regards pay. To say nothing of the enormous extra expenditure, it is highly impolitic to have two rates of pay current in the army. Moreover, the longer the Punjab troops are allowed to retain their over-grown allowances, the less willingly will they and the army generally part with them.—Englishman, Aug. 22.

A Peshawur letter, of the 26th ult, furnishes the following item:—"Yesterday evening and the evening before that, the 31st and 70th regts, paraded, in presence of Sir H. Dundas, to hear the order twice read, regarding Scinde allowances. The Scinde Field allowance is stopped from the 31st May last, although carriage has actually been kept up by those corps till August, owing to the obscurity of the meaning of the orders received. After the orders were read each evening, the Brigadier exercised the two regiments in brigade together. The Bombay troops, and the first cavalry parade to-morrow evening, to hear the same orders read. From the order it appears as if Government intended shortly to stop all extra allowances in the Punjaub, as it states that, though the troops have no more right to Scinde allowance than those in the provinces, it will be continued to them for a short time.— Delhi Gazette, Sept. 5.

THE NEW MUNICIPAL ACT FOR INDIA.

The draft of an Act has just been published for the establishment of municipal institutions throughout India beyond the limit of the presidency towns. The preamble declares that the first Act of the kind, Act 10 of 1812, for making better provision for the repairing, cleansing, lighting, draining or watching of any public streets, roads, or drains, has proved ineffectual, and is therefore repealed. That Act provided that whenever it appeared to the Governor that two-thirds of the householders of any town were desirous of making that provision, the Governor should establish a municipal committee, to whom these duties should be entrusted. Mr. Amos, who drew up the Act, is said to have taken no little credit to himself for having made it so tight that the Supreme Court could not drive the thin end of its wedge into it, and render it nugatory. But never was the vanity of human wishes more signally exemplified. In the very first instance in which a municipal committee was established under that Act, the Supreme Court at once upset the coach, and the Act became a dead letter. The great majority of the inhabitants importuned the magistrate for the establishment of the committee, and on his representation that two-thirds of the householders desired thus to make better provision for these objects, the Government of Bengal set up a municipal committee; the committee assessed the houses and levied a rate; but the patriots in the town refused to pay it, and when their property was seized, according to law, by the magistrate, brought an action against him in the Supreme Court, where he was fined Rs. 50 for a trespass, and condemned to pay nearly a hundred times that sum in costs. Of course, the occupation of that committee ceased from that instant, and the attempt to promote the health and convenience of the town, through the medium of a municipality, and a rate, was completely defeated. Mr. Bethune has now given us the draft of another Act, for the same beneficent purpose, and we sincerely hope he will be more successful than his predecessor in barring the interference of the Supreme Court, and preventing the Act being strangled in its cradle.

The Act is much more democratic than the last, but whether it will be more popular remains to be seen. The first commissioners are to be nominated by Government, and they are to draw up rules for the election of their successors by the rate-payers. The constitution of the committee is, therefore, to be essentially republican. The first commissioners are also to be charged with the duty of drawing up a municipal constitution, and submitting it for the approbation of Government. They are likewise to be armed with more extensive and more stringent powers. The making as well as repairing of roads is committed to them; they are to prevent nuisances, and to make arrangements for improving the town and suburbs. They will ikewise be at liberty to impose reasonable penalties, not exceeding Rs. 50, for the breach of any rule made by them, or, in the case of a continued nuisance, to impose a fine of Rs. 5 a day.— Friend of India.

THE RESOURCES OF THE PUNJAB.

We have recently heard sufficient to prove to us that the Marquess of Dalhousie had ample grounds for the inference made by him, it being, as lately mentioned, the Governor-General's earnest desire to enter at once on works of irrigation that "will readily supply the means of developing the resources of the soil," or at least in that portion of the Punjab comprised within the great triangle, of which the foot of the Himalayas, the Jelum, and the Beas, form the sides, and the junction of the Chenab with the Sutlej the southern spex. That triangle alone embraces, we are informed on data in which we are inclined to place considerable confidence, an area of between 24,000 and 25,000 square miles. Within this triangle are united, in a singular degree (we speak on the authority of keen observers who have made it their business to examine the country carefully), the essentials of productiveness; the soil is good, the face of the country is suited to cultivation, the supply of water is even now considerable, and the industrial tendencies of the agricultural population are such as are rarely to be found even within our own provinces. Considerable, however, as is the present supply of water, it is by no means adequate to the irrigation of the whole surface of the country, especially a large proportion, consisting either of hard clay or pure sand, which requires an abundant supply of moisture, for want of which it is now lying absolutely waste. The quantity of land at present cultivated it is, as yet, of course, impossible to ascertain with any degree of correctness; but more general estimate fixes that portion now under the plough, and the quantity that might be brought under cultivation, by extended irrigation, at about two-thirds of the whole surface, or somewhere about sixteen millions of acres. As to the feasibility of executing the plans which are, we are told, under consideration. the existence of one or two canals, and the remains of several others, constructed probably in the time of Jehangeer, who made Lahore his capital, prove beyond a doubt, that there will be no serious obstacles to encounter, while the fall of the country and the rate of the current of the rivers will certainly afford excellent data as to the velocity that may be requisite for the canal streams. We do not know what is the best rate for uniting all the advantages required, but as the triangle, of which we are writing, is not so great in its perpendicular height as the one along which the Ganges Canal is to flow, and the declination of the country must be pretty much the same, we presume they will be found to exist in the Punjab in the same degree as the Doab: and we believe that it is not surpassed in any part of the world. works for obtaining the requisite supply of water from the several rivers are not likely either to be more difficult than those constructed at the head of the Jumna for the use of the east and west Jumna canals, while we suspect the Hurdwar inlets are likely to be more costly and more difficult of construction than any in the Punjab; where, moreover, the supply of water from the three rivers Jelum, Ravee, and Chenab, which now, comparatively speaking, run to waste, is likely to be fully adequate to the demand. The Ravee is, we believe, the only one of these three important streams that has been examined with any thing like accuracy, but very fair deductions may be drawn from that measurement as to the others. The examination of the Sutlej, too, by Major Baker, as recorded in his published proceedings, while engaged in examining the feasibility of a canal between the Sutlej and Jumna, will be useful in confirming the accuracy of those deductions. He tells us that the first-named river discharged, in the neighbourhood of Roopur, 5,400 cubic feet per second. The quantity of water once ascertained, it is a mere matter of calculation how much land that water will irrigate. while the experience obtained in the construction of canals, in our own immediate neighbourhood, will enable the engineer officers, entrusted with these important works, to calculate the outlay to a nicety. The profits, too, afforded by our own canals, are such as to afford a fair criterion of what may be expected in the Punjab, where the capabilities are shown to be still greater than with us. Every thing, in fact, tends to prove that the Governor-General has the most reasonable expectation of success in his present undertaking, and we trust that nothing may occur to interrupt his present intention.—Delhi Gaz., Aug. 8.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LATE DR. R. M. THOMSON.—The mural tablet, subscribed for by the friends of the late Dr. R. M. Thomson, has been put up in St. Thomas's Church, Free School-street, Calcutta.

THE REV. T. BOAZ has obtained the designation of dector of laws from the Aberdeen University.

Col. Brooke, C.B., commanding the artillery at Umbalish, has been appointed to a command at Dum-Dum.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—We are sorry to hear that during the squally weather of Sunday, an accident occurred on the river which ended in the death of two officers of the steamer Oriental. Mr. Spittal, the third mate; and Mr. Gilbart, the fourth, went out early in the morning for a cruise, in a yacht called the Rattlesnake. When off Budge Budge the boat was capsized and the two gentlemen were drowned. Every exertion has been made to recover the bodies, but up to the time at which we received our information without success.—Harkara, Sept. 18.

The Asiatic Society.—The Calcutta Star publishes a report of the proceedings of the Asiatic Society, from which it appears that that body is in debt to the extent of Rs. 2,500, and that the monthly expenditure exceeded the income by Rs. 150 a month. Reductions to the extent of about Rs. 300 a month were presposed and agreed to, which will leave a surplus in the hands of the treasurer of nearly Rs. 150 a month. The Society, it appears, has now only 137 paying members.

Kumaon Teas.—The Delhi Gazette states that at the recent Kumaon Teas.—The Delhi Gazette states that at the recent sale of Kumaon teas, the maximum prices obtained for black tea were still seven rupees per seer, the minimum Rs. 2.14 as., and the general average Rs. 4-14 as.; in green teas the maximum was six rupees per seer, the minimum Rs. 3-2 as., and the general average Rs. 4-7; a considerable quantity of the common kind (Bohea) was purchased by the Bhoteeas at 2 rupees a sere.

Administration of the Estates of Intestates. - A draft of an act has been published, making new provisions for regulating the administration of the estates of British subjects, dying intestate in the presidencies of Fort St. George and Bombay, whereby it is enacted that, Act No. VII. 1849, shall be extended to those presidencies, subject to the alterations hereafter contained; that the Administrator-general at Fort St. George and Bombay, respectively, shall not cease to be Ecclesiastical Registrar of the Supreme Court there, and the two offices of Ecclesiastical Registrar and Administrator-general may be held at Fort St. George and Bombay, respectively, by the same person; and it is declared to be a misdemeanour, and punishable by fine and imprisonment, for any administrator general, in any of the presidencies of Fort William in Bengal, Fort St. George and Bombay, to trade or traffic for his own benefit of any other person or persons whomsoever, unless so far as appears to him expedient for the due management of the estates administered by him, and for the sole benefit of the several pe soms entitled to the proceeds of such estates respectively.

TRAVELS IN TIBET. - Lieut. Henry Strachey, recently attached to the Tibet mission, has, we hear, succeeded in penetrating, under disguise, from Ludakh, through the Chinese territories, to Niti in Gurhwal, accompanied throughout his adventurous journey by one Bootees only. Those who know the ineffable filth of the race can alone appreciate the amount of such a sacrifice to the cause of geographical science!-let alone all considerations of the other necessaries of life to the civilized man. But the Bootea never washes from birth to death, though living amongst the crystal fountains of India and China, on the common principle that the most abundant blessings are the least set store by. We cannot but add, that with this experience of the habits and language of the people, this enterprising traveller would be a very proper person to explore the sources of the Ganges, of which, with an apathy and indolence quite Indian, but not very English, we are still ignorant, and with every probability that we shall know the sources of the Nile in the heart of Africa sooner than those of a river which cannot be more than a few days' journey beyond our frontier. Nor is it a very creditable circumstance to the successors of Rennell, that the identity of the Sanpo and the Brahmaputra, fiercely denied by the German literati, should be still a problem; and one, we humbly submit, the solution of which could not be entrusted to abler hands than Lieutenant Strachey's. Even the Chinese appear to be not insensible to the interest of such discoveries, and to us it is really wonderful that years are allowed to roll on and leave our knowledge on these points pretty much what it was at the epoch of the battle of Plassy.—Delhi Gazette.

SIR C. NAPIER AND COURTS MARTIAL -At a general court martial assembled at Cawnpore, on the 10th of August, 1849, private Bartholomew Buckley, of the 1st European Bengal fusiliers, was arraigned on the charges of quitting guard without leave, insubordination to his sergeant, and disrespect to his commanding officer, proved guilty of all the charges, and sentenced to imprisonment for one year, and to be kept in solitary confinement for twenty-eight days, is the third, fifth, and seventh months, respectively, of such imprisonment. The commander-in-chief confirmed: the sentence, adding—"I limit each portion of solitary confinement to fourteen days, in lieu of twenty-eight days. A court martial should not call upon an adjutant for the character of a prisoner, when there are officers of his company, which officers ought to know the characters of their men better than the adjutant."

MORTALITY AMONGST THE TROOPS AT PESHAWUR. Delhi Gazette states that the mortality among the troops stationed at Peshawur averages two per diem, chiefly among the Europeans. As Peshawur is always represented as a healthy station, we presume the sickness is produced by some local or temporary cause, which it may be in the power of Government to obviate. It is evident that as the Punjab has now been incorporated with the British dominions, Peshawur must be considered our principal frontier station, and any extra expense which may be required to make the barracks perfectly salubrious will be amply repaid in the end by the economy of life among the soldiery.

ROUGH USAGE OF GODS.—A letter from Benares states that the crops in that district had suffered very severely from want of rain. During the drought the Mahadeos enshrined in the temples of Bisheshur Nath, and Kedar Nath, were taken off their pedestals, and immersed in ponds filled with Ganges water; and their godships were threatened with all kinds of contumely, unless they caused rain to pour down plentifully. The Mahomedans assembled in large numbers in the Emambarah, near the celebrated hath of Bhyro, headed by the Shahzadas and Nawabs, and called loudly for the aid of the Prophet. Rain has since fallen, and each party, of course, claims the credit. - Mofussilite.

Moolras.-The commutation of the sentence passed upon the ex-Dewan of Moultan to "transportation beyond the seas" is thus commented upon by the Friend of India: "It is difficult to coincide in the justice of this sentence. To an Asiatic of high rank, banishment from the continent of India is regarded as the climax of all evils. It is viewed with much greater terror than that with which a Roman senator would have viewed an order for his removal to the "other world," of Britain, viz. as a punishment aggravated by its degrading character and the mysterious horror which enveloped it. His family and female relations are left without the protection of their head, and, therefore, in native estimation, without protection of any kind. But worse than all, his and their caste is violated, and their religious prejudices are wounded in the tenderest point. Suppose a sentence of death passed upon an English delinquent were, at the will of the Home Secretary, commuted for a punishment which involved abandonment of his creed, would such a mitigation be received as a token of mercy? Yet wherein would this differ from the doom now passed upon Moolraj, a Rajpoot, a man of the highest warrior caste? We have never failed to attack the absurd system of caste, and we are confident we shall not be suspected of a partiality for its rules, when we say that it is unjustifiable to infringe them by violence. The real force of the penalty falls upon the innocent, for all the members of Moolraj's family, to the most distant branch and the remotest generation are tainted, and can never again recover their standing among their own people, thus forfeited by no fault of their own. These considerations are of far more importance to Moolraj than the death to which he knew his rebellion rendered him liable, and which no native of India

CAPTAIN JOHN TURTON, 3RD Not.

At a general court-martial assembled at Juliundur, on August 20, 1819, Capt. J. Turton, of 3rd regt. N. I., was arraigned on the following charge: - For having, on April 20, 1849, quitted his regt. in camp at Boodee-kot, without leave, and in direct disregard of his commanding officer's orders, and proceeded to Hosheyarpore.

Finding.—Guilty, Sentence.—To be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances, for the period of (3) three months.

(Signed) C. J. Napier, Gen. C .- in-C. Head-Quarters, Sept. 6, 1849.

LIEUT. GEORGE JOHN ASHTON, H.M.'S 53RD FOOT.

Head Quarters, Simla, Sept. 5, 1849 -At a general courtmartial assembled at Rawul Pindee, on Tuesday, Aug. 14, 1849, Lieut. G. J. Ashton, H. M.'s 53rd foot, was arraigned on the following charge :-

For scandalous conduct in the following instances:

1st .- In having, at Rawul Pindee, on the afternoon of June 1, 1849, been in a state of intexication in the quarters occupied by himself and other officers of H.M.'s 53rd reg.

2nd - In having on that occasion violently assaulted and repeatedly struck Lieut. W. H. Grubbe, of H.M.'s 53rd reg.

Finding. - Guilty.

Sentence .- To be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) C. J. NAPIER, General, C .- in . C.

Head-Quarters, 30th August, 1819.

Recommendation.—The court beg leave to recommend the prisoner, Lieut. G. J. Ashton of H.M.'s 53rd reg., to the merciful consideration of His Excellency the Commander-in-

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief .- There are few things that are more painful than to refuse mercy; but it is my duty to support discipline in the vast army of India, and discipline cannot be upheld if officers, who are by law the judges that try private soldiers for drunkenness, set an example of the crime! This Lieut. A-bton has done; and though it is by far the worst part of the delinquent's conduct, it is not all. The being intoxicated after dinner, however unbecoming and disgraceful it is to the character of a well-bred gentleman, may still have the pretext of conviviality, for a thoughtless, but culpable, excess in a young man. This, however, is not the crime of the prisoner. His has been deliberate drunkenness; a glaring disregard of decency in the broad face of day; an act destructive to all society, all discipline, all moral feelings, and calculated to make the uniform of a British officer a byeword and a shame!

The court has recommended Lieut. Ashton to mercy, but it has offered no reason for this recommendation. The above are mine for refusing a recommendation which has no apparent foundation; and, therefore, while it adds much to the pain of performing a distressing duty, cannot divert me from the paramount object of a Commander-in-Chief,—namely, that of supporting the integrity of military discipline, and the high character of British officers. I will not pardon Lieut. Ashton.

Lieut. Ashton is to be struck off the strength H.M.'s 53rd regt., from the date of the publication of this order at headquarters.

LIEUT. HENRY FRANCIS HASTINGS PARKER, H.M.'S 53RD FOOT-

Head Quarters, Simla, Sept. 5, 1849 .- At a general courtmartial assembled at Rawul Pindee, on Saturday, Aug. 18, 1849, Lieut, H. F. II. Parker, of H.M.'s 53rd foot, was arraigned on the following charge :-

For highly unbecoming conduct, in the following instances:-1st. - In having, at Rawul Pindee, on June 27, 1849, without provocation, made use of grossly insulting language to Assist.-Surg. G. K. Hardie, M. D., of the same regt. to the effect that if he did not mind his own business, he would use personal violence towards him.

2nd. - In having, at Rawul Pindee, on the same day, when urged by several brother-officers to apologize to Doctor Hardie for the offensive language referred to in the first instance, unwarrantably refused to do so, and added that Doctor Hardie was a damned coward; "that he, Lieut. Parker, had long wished for an opportunity of getting hold of him, and was glad he had now succeeded," or words to that effect.

3rd .- In having, at Rawul Pindee, on the fallowing day, without provocation, made use of grossly offensive and insulting language to Doctor Hardie, by calling him "a damned coward, a damned blackguard, and a damned brute."

Finding .- Guilty.

Sentence. - To be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.

Head-Quarters, August 30, 1819.

Lieut. Parker is to be struck off the strength of H. M.'s 53rd regt. from the date of the publication of this order at headquarters.

MARKETS.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 22.—The import market was closing rather heavily. This may be accounted for by the fact that goods purchased shortly before the vacation cannot be placed en route for the upper previnces until its termination, and the knowledge of heavy imports during the past fortnight of goods which are likely to be offered for sale when business commences, added to the probability of stocks being further increased by fresh arrivals in the interim, deter dealers from being active in their operations. A fair amount of business has, nevertheless, been done in grey shirtings and Manchester cloths. Some particular kinds of Scotch fabrics sell well, while others are difficult of sale. The higher numbers of mule twists are still in excellent request, with an upward tendency in price; the lower numbers are neglected, and have declined in value. Metals continue dull; copper has slightly improved; all kinds of iron are depressed, and lower in value; spelter may be quoted at 7-6 to 7-8; sheet lead has fallen to 7-3.

MADRAS.

AFFRAY WITH THE MOPLAS.

THE Madras Spectator publishes the following letter, dated Cannanore, 7th September, detailing the particulars of the Mopla outbreak:—

"The usual equanimity of this dull station has been most rudely broken, and the good folks stirred into a state of great excitement, by some events in South Malahar. It appears that several gang-robberies have of late taken place in that district, marked by more than ordinary atrocity, and some Moplas, brought to trial by the magistrate for this heinous offence, were, by one of the quibbles of the law, acquitted, much to the disgust of the magistrate. This impunity seems to have emboldened them greatly, and their religious passions, moreover, having been excited by a priest, supposed also to be connected with the robberies, a party of them, originally estimated at about thirty, most wantonly murdered seven or eight Hindoos, Nairs, and Teers, and took possession of the small pagoda of Munjerry, situated on the top of a low hill, a few hundred yards from the cutcherry. Here they found one unfortunate brahmin, whom they sacrificed on the altar. Intelligence of these doings having been forwarded to the collector, Mr. Conolly, he sent instructions to Capt. Watt, of the 43rd Light N.I. commanding a detachment of that regiment at Malliapooram, to proceed against these fanatics, and a reinforcement was also sent from Calicut, under Mr. Burn, of the same regiment. Mr. Collett, the collector's assistant, went also to the spot to aid the military. Capt. Watt marched to Munjerry, which is only a few miles from Malliapooram, and on approaching the pagoda, detached Mr. Wyse, with about forty men, a little in advance, to try and allure the Moplas out of the pagoda. They required but little enticing, for on seeing the sepoys advancing towards the pagoda, a party of fifteen rushed down the hill, sword in hand, with loud cries and gesticulations. A few of the sepoys stood firm with Mr. Wyse, who cut down one or two of the Moplas with his own hand, but was almost immediately laid low and cut to pieces. A jemader and four sepoys shared the same fate, killing among them three more Moplas. The rest of the detachment then bolted at full speed, and, shameful to relate, communicated the panic to the main body of sepoys, who refused to obey their officers' orders, and by no threat or inducement could be led on against the victorious fanatics, who accordingly returned rejoicing to their stronghold. The sepoys were then moved into the cutcherry, and it was resolved to remain there; Capt. Watt hoping to bring the men to a sense of their duty shortly. Meanwhile, despatches were sent off to the collector, who immediately wrote here for some European troops, and also to Palghat for a detachment of the 39th N.I. Accordingly, two companies of the 94th regiment, viz., the grenadier and No. 1 company, under the command of Major Dennis, with Capt. Mercer, Lieuts. Vaughan, Walton, Lewis, and Ensign Wyatt, with Dr. Penny of the 43rd, in medical charge, started on the 31st ult., in great glee, for the holy war, as the men called it; the band accompanying them part of the way: our gollant old General Lovell rode out a few miles with them. Capt. Wilson and Lieut. James, of the 43rd, were alsoordered off forthwith to Calicut. Poor Mr. Wyse! He was much regretted by his own officers and by all who knew him, for a gallant blithe hearted Scot. It does not appear that his party were loaded; and I hear they had orders to take the Moplas slive. Under these circumstances, I perhaps might be tempted to excuse the advanced party of sepoys, who were disheartened by the immediate loss of their European officer and the jemadar, for being put to confusion by a set of determined ruffians, armed to the tceth, and resolved to die; but that the main body, who had not been engaged, should have behaved so badly, has surprised and grieved all, and has brought the whole sepoy army into discredit More particulars on this head I could not give. in this district. The officers of the regiment are distressed beyond measure at this untoward event. Major Millar, indeed, with praiseworthy motives, applied to the general for leave to proceed to Munjerry, and induce the men to retrieve their fame before the arrival of the Europeans; but it appears he did not leave Cannanore. The Moplas daily sent out a foraging party, killed a cow or two for provisions; they had abundance of rice, it was said, and returned unharmed to the pagoda. They daily sent taunting messages to the sepoys to come out and meet them on the plain (about 50 Moplas, for their numbers had increased, to about 140 sepoys!), and threatened, if they did not do so, to come out on the lst instant, and attack the cutcherry. The sepoys sent them back a polite answer, begging them to defer their visit for a day or two, till some European friends of theirs arrived. The Moplas also sent a message to the tabsildar that they were out of betelleaf, and unless they got some immediately they would come and burn down the cutcherry. The tahsildar, on consulting the authorities, found it advisable to comply with their indent, and accordingly sent them a cooly-load of betel-leaf. On the 2nd two companies of the 39th N.I. arrived, but I understand, at the collector's request, no attack was attempted pending the arrival of the Europeans. The detachment of the 94th arrived on that day, at the back water near Calicut, and the grenadier company, with Major Dennis and Lieuts. Vaughan and Lewis, were shipped off immediately in boats, to proceed by water to Arriacode, the other company marching to Calicut. The late heavy rains had swelled the river much, and there was consequently great delay, and the men were exposed to the full inclemency of a Malabar monsoon all that night, and the greater part of next day; and on arrival at Arriacode marched on to-Munjerry, where they arrived that evening. On the 4th it was discovered that the Moplas had vacated the pagoda. Intelligence of their movements, however, was speedily obtained, and the Europeans, with 200 sepoys, followed them, and came up with them at Argeeddipooram, where they had taken possession of another pagoda. They did not, however, wait to be attacked, but rushed to meet our men, directing their attention exclusively to the Europeans. A short but desperate struggle took place, which ended in the death of the whole party of Moplas, sixtyone in number. On our side, two Europeans were killed, and Mr. Vaughan, four soldiers, and one seppy wounded—one of the soldiers mortally it is feared. The major escaped with some contusions. It was impossible, if indeed it had been desirable, to take any of them alive. They fought like demons resolved to die, but the bayonet was found in our gallant fellows' hands a better weapon than their long knives and swords. The sepoy was wounded by a knife hurled at him by a man lying on the

Another letter states that, in the first affair, "one of the rebels aimed a heavy cut at a havildar, which precipitated him into a nullah, by the margin of the ascent up to the hill. On this, Ensign Wyse cut down the rebel who had struck the havildar, after which he helped the latter out of the nullah. Notwithstanding this gallant conduct, however, the sepoys, instead of standing by and discharging their duty, precipitately retreated on observing a further handful of insurgents, about ten in number, and with only knives in their hands, rushing towards them. This of course caused confusion and disorder among the reserve and rear body, and poor Ensign Wyse was left to the mercy of the infuriated rabble, one of whom, taking advantage of a fall he had sustained in turning to call up the fugitive sepoys, inflicted a terrible gash upon him, which extended from the right side of the neck, a little above the shoulder-blade, up to the nose. The rascals then brutally backed him about the person, and they also cut down four of the sepoys. During the flight of the sepoys, the rabble succeeded in wrenching off Wyse's sword, by cutting his right wrist, and then carried the sword up to their stronghold as the trophy of their prowess. It is averred that, had not poor Ensign Wyse slipped his foot and fallen, he would have cut down some half-a-dozen more of the insurgents, and that, had the advanced party of sepoys stood boldly, and charged with their bayonets, the Moplas might have been repulsed without the least difficulty. The shameful conduct of the sepoys has made all our blood boil."

MISCELLANEOUS.

BARRISTERS IN THE SUDR ADAMILUT. - A very important change has just been made in the practice of the Sudr Adawlut at this presidency. The Court have admitted barristers to plead orally before it, and on Monday next a case will be heard, in which Mr. T. S. Smyth appears on the part of the plaintiff, and Mr. J. B. Norton for the defendant. The course hitherto adopted has been to confine the management of causes to a select number of vakeels, without reference to the legal knowledge of the parties engaged, and to the exclusion of the properly educated practitioners of the bar. - Athenaum, Sept. 8.

SHIPMENT OF COOLIES FROM PONDICHERRY -- A paragraph in yesterday's United Service Gazette has drawn our attention to a subject of some importance, connected with the welfare of the natives of these provinces. We allude to that wherein he speaks of the departure of a vessel from Pondicherry, bound for Bourbon, with 500 coolies on board. The parties in question must obviously have been drawn from the Company's territory, and even had this shipment stood alone of its kind, it would have well merited particular remark. That emigration, while prohibited at Madras, where every precaution was taken to ensure its voluntary character, and to secure proper accommodation, food, &c. for the emigrants, in ships of a suitable class, should nevertheless be found going on, surreptitiously as we may style it, from the port of Pondicherry, where no manner of securities exist against crimping, crowding in small vessels, ill-feeding, and otherwise mis-using, the unfortunate coolies, is a matter far too serious to escape animadversion. Even despite every care that could be taken, we must all recollect what happened at Calcutta, and how much greater does not the risk of cruel treatment become, in such a case as that of coolies shipped from Pondicherry !- Spectator, Aug. 15.

THE NACIONE PRETENDER.—The pretender to the throne of Nagpore has arrived at Hyderabad, and been delivered over from the custody of the contingent troops to that of the Nizam's military authorities. In his highness's presence he denied that he was an impostor, and referred plausibly to events and cir-cumstances to prove his identity. The Nizam ordered the sum of Rs. 100 to be given to him; and that he should be guarded carefully .- Athenœum.

REV. MR. MAHON. - We regret to hear that the Rev. Mr. Mahon met with a severe accident the other evening. Whilst driving along the Mount-road, his carriage came in contact with another vehicle. The shock threw him from his seat, and the wheels went over his arm, breaking the small bones, and inflicting other considerable injuries, though fortunately none of a dangerous character. - Athenœum.

THE SHIP PHIEBE, Capt. Hodder, and Mr. D. Dunbar, owner, of Limehouse, was totally wrecked on the coast near Eskapelly, on the Shallinger Sand, on August 25. She went ashore while on her way from Coringa to Madras, whence she was to have sailed for the Mauritius. The crew and passengers were saved with the exception of one seaman, John Johnstone, who was drowned by one of the upsets of the boat on the surf.

Two of the passengers, Mrs. Warde and infant, suffered considerable personal inconvenience; they were landed a day after the wreck, after being immersed by the serf breaking over the stern of the boat. Mrs. Warde is relict of the late Lieut. Warde, Bengal army, who was killed in the battle of Chillianwallah.

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUT, W. H. F. PARTRIDGE, 14TH N.I.

At a General Court Martial held at Bangalore, on Tuesday, Aug. 23, 1849, W. H. F. Partridge, lieut. in the 14th reg. N.I. was arraigned on the following charge, viz. :-

Charge. - For having at Bangalore, on the morning of Wednesday, Aug. 15, 1849, when commanding the fort main guard, been drunk on duty under arms.

Finding.—Guilty.
Sentence.—To be cashiered.

I approve and confirm the sentence of the Court. (Signed) G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lieut. Gen.

C.-in-C. Bangalore, Aug. 29, 1849.

Recommendation of the Court .- In consideration of the deep contrition expressed by the prisoner in his defence, and relying upon his promise of future amendment, the Court begs most respectfully to recommend the prisoner to the merciful consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Remarks .- The sufeguard and the lives of hundreds -- nay, thousands, of their comrades, are in the keeping of officers and soldiers on duty, and drunkenness under such circumstances becomes a crime of the first magnitude, doubly inexcusable on the part of an officer. Therefore, much as I should wish to attend to the recommendation of the Court in favour of Lieut. Partridge, I feel it would be inconsistent with the wellbeing of the service to do so.

The Court have recommended the prisoner to mercy on account of deep contrition expressed in his defence, and a presumed reliance on his future amendment. As there were no stronger grounds for consideration, I was willing to ascertain how far, from past conduct, these were to be depended on. I find Lieut. Partridge is an officer of between six and seven years' standing, that it is not the first time he has been brought to notice for a similar offence, and that his general habits are such as to afford no reasonable expectation of improvement.

The recommendation of the Court has compelled me to bring these facts prominently forward, and also to declare that, while I have the honour to command the Madras army, nothing short of the most extenuatory circumstances will ever induce me to pardon the crime of drunkenness on duty.

(Signed) G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lieut. Gen. C .- in-C. Lieut. Partridge is to be struck off the strength of the army from the date of the publication of this order at Bangalore.

DESTRUCTION OF THE FORT OF MOOLTAN.

" Mooltan, Aug. 18.

"We have been visited here by one of the heaviest falls of rain remembered by the Mooltanese. The results have been melancholy; the town and fort, shattered by shot, and shaken by the terrific explosion of the 30th of December, 1848, have been greatly cut up, walls undermined, and several unhappy people buried under the ruins. The domes of the citadel are so unsafe, buried under the ruins. that the officers and Europeans are moving into tents, four of The men in the Kunner Kot are also. them having fallen in. moved into tents, as the ditch, being full of water, melts the mud wall, and it has slid down bodily in several places, as has also the counterscarp; and the inner brick wall is expected to go in a few days. The destruction to the fort has been very great, and we are at present on an island, all around being flooded. The 4th Rifles' lines are drowned, and under water, and the men are pitched on a small rising ground near the cavalry. 10 this morning we were all startled by what at first was thought to be an earthquake, but it was soon discovered that the enormous dome of the beautiful shrine of Bhawul Huk (injured by our shot), had fallen in, with a noise like thunder: fortunately the fakeers were all at a distance—it is now a perfect heap of ruins. Another fall of rain will lay the famous fort of Mooltan flat: being built on an old site, perfectly honeycombed in all directions, it is dangerous to ride about, the earth everywhere giving way. A major of artillery and his horse were nearly swallowed up in one of these immense fissures, and several small treasures have been discovered to the prize agent by the ground opening.

Mooltan, like Surat, seems this season destined to be the victim alternately of fire and water—of the British Artillery and the Naiads. What Whish was so long in effecting, and then and the Naiads. performed but imperfectly, the waters of the Chenab have accomplished noiselessly and without difficulty. On the 23rd ult. the river, breaking through all restraint, came pouring into the ditch, when the greater part of the bastions, a large por-tion of the wall, and the whole of the counterscarp, tumbled in. The fausse-braye was immediately filled with water, and nearly the whole of the huts in the Sepoy lines fell down. Two companies of the 9th Native Infantry have lost all their musical instruments, arms, and accountements. The Vizierabad Eedgah, where the Rifles were quartered, came tumbling about their ears, and compelled them to seek refuge in the On the fort, the only place for miles around not under water. evening of the 24th the flood at last made its way into the citadel and rendered Mooltan nearly as unsafe a place of residence as it was in December, though from a totally different cause. The horses of the artillery had escaped drowning by swimming and wading to an elevation some way off; and for miles around the whole country was one magnificent lake, studded with innumerable islands, on which the people and their live stock sought refuge, boats and rafts being the only means of communication. Serious apprehensions began to be enter-tained that if the waters of the flood did not subside immedistely, the severest privations might be apprehended, if fearful sickness did not ensue. We trust that some careful chronicler will be found to give us all particulars of the rise, duration, subsidence, and influence of this most memorable flood, and to determine whether, within the period referred to by history or tradition, any similar phenomenon was ever known to have occurred. The fact of stately structures being built within the reach of the overflowing water, and of these having remained for a long lapse of time uninjured, indicates that floods of this sort are of very rare occurrence. The swallow never builds on the sash window or opening casement, and mankind erect no structures where there remains any chance of their being washed away. A large overflow of water was said to have occurred some fourteen years ago, occasioned by the bursting of a bund, which continued ever after to be carefully attended to by Moolraj. There seems no reason to suppose that any such catastrophe was ever known in Mooltan as the present.

A letter from another officer at Mooltan says: " A change has come o'er the state of the weather the last few days. On the afternoon of the 16th August, after a roasting day, a large collection of heavy clouds was observed coming up from the south-east, and from four o'clock until the next morning we had an enormous fall of rain. I am told three inches fell during the night, which caused sad havoc amongst the mud edifices; and the celebrated domes could not stand it, for about midnight an awful crash, something like a clap of thunder, was heard, and this turned out to be no less than three of the highest domes in the fort coming down at once; a fourth followed shortly after. A sepoy of the 9th, who had taken shelter under some ruins, was nearly killed by a wall falling on him. A native was killed in the fort by a mud wall embankment falling on him. The fort, which is full of immense chasms, seems to have been built very badly, on the ruins of an old fort. The buildings are in a dangerous state, and if we have such another allowance of heavy wet, no doubt many more domes will give in. The four domes which fell contained grain belonging to the commissariat department; the next dome to the one that fell was occupied by the guard, but luckily that escaped. On the morning of the 17th August, the immense dome, &c. of the celebrated mosque 'Bawal Huk' fell in, with a tremendous crash; from the noise, dust, and smoke which arose immediately after the fall, it had the appearance of an explosion by gunpowder. You may judge the ss we are in when the brigade orders of yesterday directed a committee to assemble to report on the injuries done to the fort by the late heavy rains; also on the state of the lines of the 4th regt. N.I. Rifles, and 'the domes and other buildings in the fort not being considered secure during wet weather; com-manding officers are requested to take measures for pitching tents for the reception of their men with as little delay as possible.' Also, 'in consequence of the dangerous state of some of the buildings in the fort, the firing of the gun is for a few days suspended."

LAW.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS COURT, SEPT. 3.

In re Thomas Robert Richmond. - This insolvent was opposed by Mr. Howard on behalf of Major Dalzell, whose claim upon the schedule was Rs. 1,20,000. The circumstances under which the debt was contracted (the learned counsel said) were of a fraudulent nature, and never contemplated by the Major. In the end of 1844 Col. Pew (a gentleman of immense speculations) was the owner of 300 shares in the bank of Western India; of these 130 were standing in the name of the insolvent, and the remainder in that of his nephew, Mr. Sylvester Richmond. Col. Pew borrowed from Major Dalzell Rs. 1,20,000, on the security of these shares, which were left in the hands of Mr. Richmond, as the trustee of Major Dalzell, and a deed of trust was executed between them. The deed was dated January 1st, 1845. A similar instrument was executed between Mr. Sylvester Richmond and the Major, with the only difference of the altered name and number of shares. This loan was to be repaid in three years, and became due January 1st. 1848. It was stipulated between the parties, that if Col. Pew should find it requisite to dispose of the shares so bound as security, it should be competent to him to do so, upon the substitution of other security, subject to the approval of Major Dalzell. Mr. Richmond then agreed to deposit the shares in the bank of Western India, and wrote to Major Dalzell, telling him that he had done so; that " the scrip certificates, as desired, are all lodged in the bank." In the month of May following, the Bank of Western India was changed into the Oriental Bank, and the scrip of the old bank changed for new and different certificates. When the loan became repayable, the deed was renewed upon the same security, for which Mr. Richmond executed a fresh deed of trust. dated January 1st, 1848. At the very time of the execution of this trust deed by Mr. Richmond, he had not in his possession one single share of those for which he was trustee. He had pledged them without the knowledge of Major Dalzell, and, as he said, on behalf of Col. Pew, but, as it turned out, for his own use. Mentioning the transaction in his schedule, he put down Major Dalzell a creditor for Rs. 1,20,000, and said, "This amount is on account of Col. P. L. Pew. On my return from England, at the end of the year 1847, I found heavy payments to make; price of shares dull; so made use of scrip of Col. Pew, pledged to this gentleman, and lying in my hands, credited to the Colonel; after which, further depression of shares, &c., prevented my redeeming them." It is not said that he took any pains to obtain any other security for Major Dalzell, and it is not even pretended that Major Dalzell knew any thing at all of the transaction. When he first petitioned for relief from the court, Sir W. Yardley, who presided, demanded a more explicit account of the transaction, and in his amended schedule a few more lines were added; he said that "the scrip was signed for transfor; this, however, was never required to be done." He added, that "the scrip remained in his book-case," while, in his letter of 21st January, 1845, he said that they had been deposited in the bank. He also says, "he never took any account of the numbers of the scrip, but kept a memorandum of the number of shares in his possession." Mr. Richmond was a large holder of shares of that bank, and did not keep those shares, of which he was especial trustee, distinct from the others, but kept them all mixed together. This (Mr. Howard added) was one of the grossest breaches of trust imaginable. The insolvent had solemnly declared himself the trustee of a gentleman's property, and had neverthenothing about the misappropriation of the money. He had been in possession of vast amounts of property belonging to different people, and yet had not even kept any account of the property so entrusted to him. He had pledged these shares and made them away otherwise, but could not tell where each particular person's property was gone to. It was as base and unprincipled a breach of trust as any mercantile man could be guilty of. Endeavours had been made to trace the property, but without effect. His examination before the master however, of importance, as showing the nature of his trans-actions and accounts. The learned counsel then strenuously called upon his lordship to put into effect the 51st clause of the act, assuring him that, if he declined to do so, this case would be taken as a precedent in the bazaar that a man might, with impunity, make away with things in his trust, without being being required to render a satisfactory account to the owners of that property. A case more imperatively de-manding the enforcement of the penal clauses of the act, had, he said, never been brought before their lordships.

Mr. Crawford then addressed the court for the insolvent. He alluded to the former examination of the insolvent before Sir W. Yardly. Notes taken at the former examination, were read aloud by the Judge.

Mr. Crawford said that there were other explanatory facts and matters which then came out. It appeared that, notwithstanding the great losses sustained by Major Dalzell and others, through the insolvent, during the last few years, not one single rupee had been appropriated to his own private advantage.

Mr. Richmond was indeed, as he described himself to be, to all intents and purposes, an insolvent, his liabilities were eight lacs and upwards. Out of that 70,000 or 80,000 were to be deducted on one account alone, and other credits, &c., would reduce the amount to Rs. 2,00,000. The insolvent had also debts due to him to the amount of Rs. 4,44,451, of which Rs. 1,90,000 were considered bad, Rs. 1,28,575 good; and the remainder doubtful. The insolvent's opponents have made out more than a legal breach of trust. If the management of these immense funds has so turned out, that a total loss is the consequence, it has not been proved,-it has not been even insinuated, that the insolvent himself benefited one rupee. The greatest imputation against his character as a merchant is, that he has not properly kept those books and memoranda, which would have enabled his creditors to trace their property. For this he expresses his deep contrition and regret With respect to his moral character and reputation, there is not the slightest reflection cast upon it by these transactions. Col. Pew was a man of immense wealth, and was engaged in enormous speculations; he was, in fact, the greatest speculator of modern times in India. He was a shareholder in many Companies, and held two or three times the number of shares (in the names of others) that any single man was entitled to hold. Mr. Richmond had in his possession . large number of this gentleman's shares, with strict injunctions not to sell one, but, if necessary, to pledge them for the purpose of raising money on them as required. From these enormous speculations, enormous embarrassments arose. Col. Pew lost largely. The shares of the Ganges Steam Navigation Company of which he was a principal shareholder, fell ruinously; the sugar estate melted; the Benares Bank turned out disastrously; every estate menen; the Benares Bank turned out disastiously; every transaction proved a loss to him. Mr. Richmond has stated in his schedule, that at the time the shares were pledged by him, the Colonel had the money, and he (Richmond) had the ability and control over shares, to enable him to make good the sum borrowed by Col. Pew, whenever it should be required by Major Dalzell. A breach of trust may be light and trivial, or it may be fraudulent and criminal, and that in several degrees; and if the circumstances attending this breach were such, that he had a conviction on his mind that the repayment of the money was as perfectly secure as it was before the shares were pledged, this was his most thorough conviction, that the moment he was told that it was necessary for him to pay to Major Dalzelll Rs. 20,000, it would be immediately forthcoming, and paid at once. Under these circumstances, considering that, if Colonel Pew's great wealth had seduced the insolvent into these faulty transactions, if nothing had previously occurred to give Mr. Richmond the right to predict the colonel's insolvency.—if it happened that, as usual, these embarrassments came upon the man suddenly and at once,—then that the portion of the 51st clause on which they rely is inapplicable to Mr. Richmond. It does not appear that Mr. Richmond has appropriated a single rupee to himself.

Sir E. Perry.-I may safely observe that I have never approached a case in this court with equal reluctance. The duties thrown upon a judge under the statute are very painful, and are unlike those devolving upon a penal judge in other There, a jury sits to decide upon the guilt or otherwise of those brought before the court, and the judge, in passing sentence, feels himself as merely the organ of the law, and is not acting upon his own discretion or conviction as to guilt or innocence. In this court no such assistance is available, and if he is asked in court to put the penal clauses into effect against an insolvent, he must depend upon himself alone for the justice and correctness of the sentence. As so many of the mercantile community are in court to day, I shall take the opportunity to point out a fact that should, I believe, be more generally know than it now is. It is impossible that judges of this court, who administer the Insolvent Act, can do justice to the commercial interests of the community unless some assistance to do so is given them. The Act gives the judge power to imprison upon proof of offences of the first class, without the same having been asked for by the creditors; but as regards the second class of offences, such as have been proved in this case, the court is only empowered to act when put in motion by the opposing creditors. Every one acquainted with the working of these courts can see that it is essential to the interests of commerce that there should be an enforcement of these clauses, and the court is only empowered to do so when moved to do so by the creditors; and we know that creditors seldom oppose an insolvent unless to establish truly their claims upon his estate; and they will not come forward on ordinary occasions when these frauds are committed. In my opinion, the only effect the Act can have, under these circumstances, will be to damage the commercial interests of the community, by a general demoraliza-

It is, as I said before, a most painful duty for a judge of this court to perform, and that without the assistance or interference of a jury. We are possessed of only the ordinary motives actuating mankind, and are reluctant to be severe, unless strenuously called on to be so. I make these remarks because I commenced by saying how painful and unpleasant our duty was. In our small community the character of every individual is more or less known to us all; and I am bound to state that up to the time of the laying of the present charges against Mr. Richmond, I always supposed him to be one of the most respectable gentlemen of the community, and always held the highest opigentlemen of the commonly, and always area to a more or mions of his worth and honesty. To-day a most serious charge is established against him in court; he is charged with having fraudulently contracted a debt to Major Dulzell,—fraudulently and by breach of trust. As to the latter charge, no one can for a moment doubt its having been clearly and incontrovertibly established. The other and more important question is, whether the debt was contracted fraudulently, and I am bound to say, looking at the evidence, the greater part of which came from Mr. Richmond himself, that it has been proved that a downright fraud was committed by the insolvent upon Major Dalzell. If the case were before me to sum up to a jury who were to decide upon the case, I should tell them that Colonel Pew and Mr. Richmond were concerned as principal and agent in business of a very great extent, and that Mr. Richmond, as agent, had the conducting of these transactions as related to Bombay, and of course made an agency of so much power a thing beneficial to his own interests. Colonel Pew had pre-vailed upon a friend, Major Dalzell, to lend him a large amount of money, and it was agreed that Mr. Richmond should pay the interest yearly to Major Dalzell, and some shares belonging to Colonel Pew were given over as security, and were left in the hands of Mr. Richmond, as Major Dalzell's trustee. I should then point out that the only connection between Mr. Richmond and the Major was the declaration of trust executed by Mr. Richmond, and the letter which has been read; and I should then ask them whether this gentleman, Mr. Richmond, having executed this solemn declaration of trust, finding himself pressed for money, committed a fraud in pledging the shares of which he was the trustee? I should also point out to them, that, in considering the question of fraud, notice must be had to the particular duties belonging to the commercial man, distinct from other classes of The nature of an offence of this kind committed by a soldier, unacquainted with monetary affairs, must be considered in a different light when committed by one acquainted with the duties and interests of the merchant. We have to consider whether Mr. Richmond, in pledging these shares, did or did not commit a breach of those commercial duties which are recognized by the whole mercantile community. These duties and their performance are, as has been observed, the innermost principles of the merchant; and when we see how much depends upon this point, it is easily seen that this principle is in fact the basis of all commerce. When, then, these duties and Mr. Richmond's position were pointed out to a jury, and they were shewn Major Daizell resting in perfect dependence upon Mr. Richmond's trust, no jury could fail in coming to the conclusion which, I regret to say, I have come to. It is necessary, however, to listen to the arguments which have been adduced in extenuation. It has been said that he did not appropriate a single rupee of all this money to his own use. I am bound to say that this in my opinion affords no extenuation at all. It would perhaps have been a more vulgar fraud if he had done so, but when a merchant is conducting such a business as he did, and reaps the usual mercantile benefits from that business, the using of the money would be likely to turn out more beneficial to him than it would be to abstract it. It is said also that the certainty of Mr. Richmond of Colonel Pew's solvency completely removes from him any moral imputation of fraud or dishonesty. Here again the duties of a merchant suggest themselves. When we see a merchant like Colonel Pew speculating to so gigantic an extent as he did, the ordinary idea would be that these large transactions were of a dangerous nature, and to have pledged these shares appears to me to be one of the most reckless acts I have heard of in Bombay. Another case of a similar nature has been alluded to, but as it has not been investigated, we shall not take it into account. On all these grounds, it is my painful duty to state what I think is the least period of imprisonment which can in this case be awarded on the suit of Major Dalzell only. As to the other part of the charge, that will be investigated in due time. and punishment, if necessary, awarded. As to this part of the charge, the charge of Major Dalzell, I am of opinion that the smallest punishment I can, in justice to his creditors, award, is that when the final sentence is pronounced, it shall be ordered that the insolvent be not discharged Major Dalzell's suit, until, on that suit alone, he has undergone twelve months' imprison-

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Aug. 24 reached Bombay by the Victoria, Sept. 29th

SERJEANT BENNET.—The following letter was sent from the Commander in-Chief of India to Colour-Serjeant Bennet on his having been the first to mount the breach at Moolran:—

MOOLTAN PRIZE MONEY. A letter from Mooltan states, that the ransom of the town of Mooltan has been entirely abandoned. "The prize agents now say the Government must pay it, but I am afraid there is little chance of that: the Court of Directors are too pucka to do anything of the kind; for they won't even give batta unless they are in a measure compelled to do so. The ransom might have been in the prize agent's hands long ago, if they had only gone the right way to work about it. Fancy refusing 15 lacs!

AUDITORS OF JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.—The Bombay Times states authoritatively, that a plan for appointing public auditors of all joint-stock accounts, is now before the Legislative Council of India, in order to prevent the possibility of all underhand dealing on the part of the directors of those institutions.

Source of the Nile.—A report was current at Zanzibar that the traveller, Dr. Biaoblotsky, had discovered the source of the river Nile.

LORD F. FITZCLARENCE, a young Major-General, is stated by the papers as likely to be appointed Commander-in-Chief of Bombay.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR, Family, and Staff, arrived at the presidency from Dapooree on the morning of Wednesday last the 12th September, and have taken up their residence at Malabar Point.

THE BISHOP OF BOMBAY has returned to the presidency. We regret to hear that his lordship finds it necessary to quit India for Europe for a couple of years to recruit his health, which has latterly began to fail him.

GANG OF FORGERS. - A regular gang of forgers has been discovered in the Bazar, who, like the celebrated Bunder Gang, have been in the habit of keeping regular books for the entry of their transactions, and to have carried on their infamous practices with the coolness and deliberation which might be expected from an honest partnership, established for legitimate commercial gains! A member of this flagitious confederation has "peached" upon his fellows; and some disclosures may now be expected, which will rival in interest those made in Calcutta before the Police Commissioners. We believe the existence of the gang has long been suspected in the Bazar: to many, no doubt, its operations have been fully known. Doongersey Nursey, one of the prisoners, was tried for forgery and conspiracy at the last Criminal Sessions, but discharged by direction of the Judge, on the ground that there was no official translation of the document alleged to have theen forged .- Telegraph, Sept. 17.

AHMEDABAD. - The Bombay Telegraph and Courier publishes some intelligence from Ahmedabad, by which it appears that a serious dispute has arisen in that city, through the determination expressed by the Magistrate to slay all such dogs as have no responsible owners. The Hindoos have determined that not one dor shall be slain, and have presented a petition to the Magistrate, signed by 8,000 persons, to rescind his obnoxious order. Mr. Bettington very properly intimated that he could not allow the dogs to endanger the lives of the poorer inhabitants, even though they themselves might have the folly to demand it. The mandate is therefore to be carried into execution, and the Magistrate has ordered the police corps to patrol the streets during the night, and prevent any disturbance on the part of the remonstrants.

"CALCUTTA, May 20, 1849. -- Serjeant-Major Bennet. -- When, in 1847, I presented the fusiliers with their new colours, I said that the men of our days were as good as those of former days. I was right; and Mooltan has proved every word! In former times Serjeant-Major Graham (if my memory serves me correctly), of the 1st Europeans, planted the old colours on the breach of Ahmedabad. He did a gallant action; and when you planted the British standard on the breach of Mooltan, your deed was as brave as his, and as renowned! The officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, of the 1st Europeans, in both presidencies, have sustained, and even, if possible, surpassed, by their valour in the present days, the glories of the past! Tell your comrades that I rejoiced when I heard of the fame which you have all gained for those new colours that I had the honour of presenting to the regiment in Scinde.-I remain, your sincere well-wisher, C. J. Napier, Commander-in-Chief. P.S.—I should have written to you long since, but delayed it till my arrival in India.'

THE ORIENTAL BANK .- The ordinary annual meeting of the Oriental Bank in Bombay was held on the 15th Sept.; and although it was expected that a large attendance of shareholders would have been present, we were sorry to observe that only a very small number assembled at the hour for business. The directors took occasion to revert to the position of the bank, and in doing so, to assure the shareholders that considerable progress had been made in recovering the balances on overdue bills and credits resulting from the crisis of 1847-48; and that the provision made from current profits had up to this time proved sufficient to meet all ascertained losses: also that the business of the bank is in a very bealthy state, and the reserved fund of 112,000l. (or Rs 11,20,000), still remains untouched as at last annual balance. It was further remarked by the directors in their address, that the liability of Col. Pew, Mr. Richmond, and others, and the presumed loss by those transactions were grossly exaggerated; and in evidence thereof, a statement of those accounts was laid before the shareholders, from which it appears that the amount due by Col. Pew is under four lacs of rupees (in place of ten lacs, as stated in the newspapers), and that the security held by the bank will in all probability fully cover the debt; while the sum due by Mr. Richmond (magnified into four and a half lacs of rupees) is no more than Rs. 12,000; and that the same was written off to profit and loss in September, 1848. At the suggestion of the directors, an add tional audit of local assets was resolved on, and two shareholders were named by the meeting for that duty. Mr. Henry Young, our respected collector of customs, was appointed a director in the room of Mr. Grant, who went out by rotation; and as no other native gentleman was put forward in the room of Juggonath Sunkersett, Esq., whose time had also expired, that gentleman was re-elected.—Bombay Times.

SCINDE CAMEL CORPS. - The order for the disbandment of this corps has been cancelled, and the regiment is to be turned over to Bengal for service in the Punjab.

MARRIAGE IN INDIA .- In the case of Maclean v. Cristall, which in an action of crim. con. brought by Captain A. N. Maclean, 8th Bombay N I., a question arose as to the validity of his marriage with his wife, which took place at Surat, the plaintiff being of full age, she under age (but having her father's consent). both being members of the Church of England, and the ceremony was performed according to the rites of that church by Mr. Fyvie, a gentleman who had not been ordained episcopally, but belonged to a sect called Congregationists or Independents; and in the register of the marriage he described himself as "a minister of the gospel and a missionary." No person in holy orders was present at the marriage. There was at that time a small military force at Surat. Previously to the marriage, there had been a Protestant church erected at Surat, to which a chaplain of the Company, regularly ordained, had been regularly appointed to do duty. The last chaplain previously to the marriage, had been the Rev. R. G. Keays, who left the appointment in 1831. The nearest clergymen at the time of the marriage were then residing at Ahmedabad, Poona, and Bombay; though there was a Roman Catholic chapel at Surat, and priests living there. Mr. Jackson was, immediately after the marriage, appointed chaplain at Surat; he was a clergyman of the Company's service, and was of the Church of England, After the marriage, the parties cohabited as man and wife, and were received as such by their relations and friends. The judges of the Supreme Court took time to consider the point, after argument, and decided that the marriage was valid.

-We very much LIEUTENANT-COLONEL H. HAVELOCK, C.B.regret to learn that Lieutenant Colonel H. Havelock, C.B., Deputy Adjutant-General of the Queen's Troops, has been suffering of late so much from sickness that his medical advisers have pronounced an immediate return to Europe indispensable. This gallant, able, and most amiable officer has been engaged in almost every campaign in India, Scinde and Coorg excepted, since 1827. He was a captain in the Burmese war in 1827, a major during the first Affghan war, when he was present at the capture of Ghuzni and fall of Caboul in 1839. He was lieutenantcolonel with the 13th during the various conflicts in which it was engaged in 1841, and was one of the heroes of Jellalabad, and the reputed writer of the admirable series of despatches which bore the signature of Sale. He was, for a time, Persian Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, was engaged in the Gwalior campaign, in the battles on the Sutlej, and for a time acted as adjutant-general of the Queen's troops in India. He advanced with the army under Lord Gough on Lahore in February, 1846, and in the close of that year was appointed deputy adjutant-general of Queen's troops at Bombay. During the absence of Lieut.-Col. Brook, he acted as Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief. The moment he had defined in the commander-in-Chief. ment he heard of his regiment being ordered on service, after the battle of Chillianwalla, he proceeded to join, and had reached as far as Meerut, when he was told his services were not required in the field. He returned to Bombay in May, but has never recovered from the fatigue his not very robust frame suffered from the journey, and the annoyance a sensitive mind naturally experienced from the most unbecoming character of Lord Gough's order on the occasion. He had refused to wield a servile pen in flattering the chief, and our Agamemnon persecuted the man who declined being the Homer of the China war. Lieut. Col. Havelock leaves India with the respect and affection of all who know him .- Bombay Times.

Lord Torrington's friends have been very busy getting up Lord Torrington's iriends have been very busy getting up "declarations" of various kinds, the justifiable inference from the whole of them being that Lord Torrington, with all the appliances at his command,—civil power and troops,—was not equal to the quelling of a couple of riots. This established, it at once involves an acknowledgment of his lordship's incapacity to govern. There has been a great movement amongst the natives in the re-establishment of the ancient Gansabes, -village courts, combining with them the principles of abstinence from alcoholic drinks, and from those vices to which they are most prone. We trust much good may result from this movement,-it looks promising. Active preparations are being made to get the road ordinance into operation, but the result is still doubtful. The once-vexed question of the use of honorifics amongst Singhalese Christians has been revived, leading to a scene of much indecency in a church where the bishop delivered an address through an interpreter. An attempt on the part of the Singhalese Episcopalians to deprive the Dutch Presbyterians of their church has been finally defeated, the Governor having decided the question in favour of the Dutch.

The following, from a correspondent at Maulmain, dated the 30th August, gives a brief account of an attack on the commissioner: -" Yesterday the whole town was thrown into high excitement by the daring attempt on the part of a Burmese to murder our respected commissioner. It is asserted that the fellow, dissatisfied with an order passed by the commissioner, determined to revenge himself, to ensure which, he called on Major Bogle with a petition and armed with a bludgeon. The petition was presented, and while the commissioner was engaged in perusing it, he was felled to the ground with a stunning blow, which was repeated again and again; this done, the ruffin ran off (leaving the commissioner for dead) to the house of Capt. Impey, to whom he surrendered himself, saying that he had killed the commissioner. Capt. Impey, as soon as he had ordered the man to be seized, hastened to the house of the commissioner, whom he found still senseless, but attended by Dr.
Morton. Thank God the wounds inflicted are not dangerous and the commissioner is recovering."—Cul. Hurkaru, Sept. 23.

CHINA.

THE ASSASSINATION OF THE GOVERNOR OF MACAO. Whatever may have been the original intention of the Viceroy of Canton, an open war is now all but unavoidable. He cannot blink the fact that a Chinese fortress was captured on the 25th, and upwards of seventy Chinamen slain; while it is notorious that the head of the Mandarin officer in command is blackening in the sun at Macao. Better a thousand times that the war be open and conducted upon the principles of modern warfare, than disguised and carried on by assassination and incendiarism. other Christian powers cannot take a share in the defence of Macao, they can at least compel the Chinese (so far as their forces are available) to conform to the usages of civilized warfare. Portugal has not the means to garrison the place, and keep a fleet in China for its defence, and it is doubtful how far the foreign vessels of war now in the roads will be available for protection. Even if they do agree to defend the city, it will be only a temporary defence. France, England, and America will not keep a squadron permanently before Macao; sooner or later they will be withdrawn, and the city left to the tender mercies of the Chinese. Concessions may be offered by the government, and this would be the easiest way of arranging the affair, but we fear the operations of the 25th and the slaughter of the Chinese, will bar any pacific settlement of existing difficulties. However, should the foreign ministers tender their services as mediators, it is possible that the further effusion of blood will be prevented at least for a time. Seu-if he does listen to proposals-will perhaps be unreasonable in his demands; but, if he is willing to agree to an arrangement, by which Macao is placed in precisely the same position with regard to China which she occupied before the arrival of Governor Amaral, the Portuguese will be fool hardy if they hesitate about closing with the terms. Failing all other arrangements, it is just possible that England may declare war against China and include Macao in the negociation for peace, but this is a chance which no prudent government will for an instant take into consideration, and the Macao rulers will err grievously if they do not accept any reasonable proposition for an immediate reconciliation with China. The danger is imminent and immediate-the chance of assistance slight and remote. This murder is disgraceful to China, but even supposing the nations of the west resolve upon punishing the perfidious race, the fate af Macao will be settled long before a single soldier can embark for its protection. People in Europe know little of the Chinese character; one writer follows another in the old beaten track, first entered upon by the Jesuits. Descriptions of character are given only applicable to the people of the north-and that two or three centuries ago, -but justice has never been done the people of the south,-for cunning, cruelty, dessimulation, and insolence, they have no compeers in the world's history. The murders of Kwangchu-kee (in December 1846) were planned and agreed upon by the elders of the confederated villages met in solemn conclave; Keying knew that these butcheries were determined upon, but that "enlightened statesman" gave no warning,—he knew that six unfortunate Englishmen were held prisoners by the villagers until their fate was decided upon, but he made no effort to save them. Seu was also aware that Governor Amaral was to be butchered by order of the vile populace of Canton (not the lower classes, but the gentry and elders), and he approved of the foul If such acts pass unpunished, and political quarrels are to be settled with the knife of the hired bravo, farewell to diplomacy in China. The representative of foreign powers must either bow submissively to the will of the Viceroy of Canton, or brook the stab of his hired ruffians .- Friend of China.

SMUGGLING.—The Chinese authorities at Canton have been adopting energetic measures to put a stop to smuggling, which is not confined to one class of foreigners or description of goods, and embraces alike exports and imports. Important seizures of contraband ginsing, the property of Americans, had been made, but to show equal rigour to other offenders, a formal application had been made to the British vice-consul by the Chinese, to seize a schooner with smuggled silks, teas, and other goods, belonging to a British subject. This the consul was obliged to do, under the treaty; and the schooner was seized. These proceedings had excited no little interest at Canton.

RETERICHMENT AT HONG-KONG. — Colonial retrenchment continues to engage the attention of Parliament, but in reducing the military establishment in Hong-Kong it appears to us as if the British Government were acting under an erroneous impression of the peculiar position of this colony, and the benefits the country derives from it. Hong-Kong is essentially a military possession; not one-fourth of the British merchants in China have branches in the island, and an expensive government is supported by a small European population. The civil establishment must either be reduced considerably, or Parliament continue its annual grant in aid of the revenue. We apprehend that the public money will not be voted another year for the support of colonial sinecurists; and, however much it may go against the grain, the Executive must either break up some offices entirely, or greatly reduce the pay of the public servants, or both. readily be proved by mathematical demonstration that the revenue of Hong-Kong can meet the expenditure of such an establishment as the colony requires, though it is unable to support idle and useless office-holders. In 1818 the revenue was 25,0911. the expenditure being 40,3551. showing a balance of 15,2641, on the wrong side of the account. This is but a small sum considering the magnitude of the trade which is protected by the colonisation of the island; but it is a large amount as compared with the population, and no scheme of taxation can squeeze it from this greatly overburdened possession. Reduction is inevitable, and with an abstract of last year's revenue and expenditure before us, and six years' experience to regulate our judgment, we will again point out reductions by which the public will not suffer, -on the contrary, benefit-it being well known that the less people have to do the less likely is it to be done well. The Governor of Hong-Kong draws 6,000l. a-year for himself, 300l. for a private secretary, and 500% a-year is paid for his dwelling-house. These items aggregate 6,900%. It will be said that he holds the triple appointments of Governor, Superintendent of Trade, and Minister Plenipotentiary, and that 2,0001. attaches to each of these offices. We do not deny the fact; neither do we inquire whether the service would be best performed by three competent persons or by one. But the whole amount is charged against the colony, and, if the colony must support itself, assuredly it is not expected to defray the expenses of British diplomacy or support a consular officer for the protection of British trade. Retrenchment should begin at Government-house, or else no more than 2,000%, of Mr. Bonham's allowances be charged in the colonial accounts. It may be objected that 2,0001. is not enough to support the representative of the Crown; but colonial governors err greatly in believing that they merely represent the Crown; in point of fact, they serve the colony, and until they are paid by the Crown, they will continue in the service of those who support them. The Crown refuses to pay its representative in Hong-Kong, and the public demur at supporting an ideal dignity at the cost of one-fourth of the revenue. Positively they have not the means, even had they the will, and they require a less expensive ruler. Now, this difficulty may be overcome very easily by an amalgamation of the two appointments of Governor and Commander of the Military Forces serving in China. The two offices are quite compatible; the double pay would be a handsome ac-knowledgment of the services of some war-tried soldier; and the colony would have a perfectly efficient ruler at an expense proportionate to the revenue. The pay of a general officer is somewhere about 2,000*l*.; add to this 2,000*l*. from the colony, and the appointment will be 500*l*. a year better than that of Governor of the Mauritius. This arrangement is fair and reasonable; the Governor would not be underpaid, and the colony would save 4,000/. in salary, 500/. in house-rent, and 300/. for a private secretary-in all 4,900l. a year. The Colonial Secretary's office, consisting of the secretary and four clerks, costs 3,200%. What these gentlemen have been doing for the last half-dozen years, is a mystery to the uninitiated. Any ready penman could do the whole work of the establishment and not be overtasked. In this department reductions may be made to the extent of 1,2001. or even more. In the colony of New Zealand a similar department only costs 1,2451, while the labours are many times greater than in Hong-Kong. A revenue of 25,0911. is collected at an expense of 1,869/. The Treasury should be abolished altogether. The Commissary-General has offered to undertake all the duties with the assistance of one clerk in addition to his own establishment. There is here a saving of 1,500%. The appointments of Surveyor-General and Colonial Engineer are both superfluous incumbrances. 2,364/. cuts heavily into a small revenue, and, now that the public roads and streets have been made, it is unfair to burden the colony with either. Allowing 5001. a-year for the supervision of roads and public works (which is amply sufficient), there is a further saving of 1,864/. The registration of deeds cannot require the services of a registrar; building has nearly ceased, and the 3751. allowed that officer is sheer waste of money. The judicial department will bear curtailment. The salaries are excessive; but the labour is also great. As vacancies occur they will readily be filled up at more reasonable rates, and a gradual reduction of 1,500/. may be effected without sacrificing the public interest. Strictly speaking, the residents at the five ports are bound in equity to defray part of the expense of the law courts; it is rather hard that it should be thrown entirely upon a few colonists .- Friend of China.

COCHIN CHINA.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE KING.

Thien Tri, son of the cruel Minh Mang, who died on the 3rd November, 1847, was buried with great pomp and ceremony. The coffin was a single piece of wood hollowed out, inclosed in another piece, both painted and varnished, and the lid closed it hermetically, so that the corpse could be kept a long time without being offensive. With the corpse were deposited in the coffin many things for the use of the deceased in the other world —his crown, tutbans, clothes, gold and silver, provisions, &c. When the body was deposited in the coffin, it was carried to a richly-ornamented house, made expressly for the purpose, and sundry buffaloes, swine, poultry, and other animals, were immolated, and meals were set out upon a table, made on pur-pose, near the coffin. The new king, son of the defunct, clothed in a mourning dress, came each day to prostrate himself before the body of his father, and to offer prayers to him. Every day, also, wax candles were lighted, or incense burned. or arcca nut, tobacco, &c., were prepared, and were all placed near the coffin. It was above all on the sacred days, declared such by the sorcerers of the kingdom,-amongst others, the 1st and 15th of each month,—that sacrifices were made with the greatest splendour. The body remained exposed thus in its lighted chamber until the 21st of the 9th moon, 1848 (21st June), a day indicated by the soothsayers and the astrologers as propitious to commence the funeral rites. Here nothing in regard to the sepulture of the dead is done by chance; it is necessary that the place of interment, the day, the hour in which a deceased person ought to be interred, should be indicated by the sorcerers and the astrologers, who choose the place by means of a compass, and read in the stars the propitious or unpropitious If all the formalities have not been fulfilled, and if what has been prescribed by the sorcerers has not been followed in everything, they predict to the children or parents of the deceased that they will have no more good fortune, but that all kinds of evils will unceasingly pursue them. It often happens that a deceased person is disinterred several times, in order to inter him in another spot, when a family sorcerer, to gain a little, throws them into a fright by announcing misfortunes, because their dead parent has not been interred in a proper spot.

On the 21st of the 5th moon, the coffin containing the body of the king was carried to a house built for the occasion near one of the gates of the city, not far from a stream. Upon the stream were collected all the vessels which were to act as a convoy. The rond which the corpse was to pass over, in order to arrive at the vessel, was covered with mats, carpets, and Indian tapestry of silk. The two banks of the river, on which the corpse was to be carried to the tomb, were also adorned with silks. An edict had commanded the mayors and old men of all the villages of the royal province to erect each an altur along the side of the river, to bring incense, to burn wax tapers, and, when the corpse passed before the altar, the mayor and the old men were to make three great cries.

Each bank of the river was also lined with soldiers. tomb is distant about a league from the city, but three days were allowed to arrive there, for they went very slowly, and they had three stations. At each station there was a very large altar, on which were burned wax tapers and perfumes; and the corpse rested there one day, in order to receive the sacrifices which were made to it. These sacrifices consisted of buffaloes, swine, and other animals, which were first strangled, and then offered entire. There were also prepared meats, betel-nut, tobacco, &c. When the offering was finished, the animals were divided and distributed to the mandarins and soldiers who accompanied the fune-The coffin remained then one day in a house placed near the gate of the city; and this day thirty-five large animals,oxen, buffaloes, and swine,-were sacrificed. On the next day they put themselves in motion to go to the boats. The coffin was carried by soldiers; at the rear came the new king, who conducted the mourning as chief of the family. He walked on foot, clothed in mourning robes,—that is, he wore a long dress of white cotton with large sleeves, upon his head he had a straw bonnet, and carried in his hand a stick of dry bambu. Then came the other children of the deceased king, and of his parents, wearing white dresses and white turbans, the mourning costume of these countries, and after them the attendants. When they had arrived at the river, the corpse was deposited in a magnificent bark, constructed expressly for it: no person went into this boat, the corpse was left by it itself, and the coffin conceal d in such a way that it could not be seen by any one. The journey upon the river then commenced. First was a boat, in which were the bonzes mounted upon a stage, which ten soldiers supported on their shoulders; and whether they went in a boat or whether they walked, the nonzes were upon this, and they prayed, they shouted, eulogizing the defunct; but all in a manner ridiculous, even in the eyes of reusible Pagans. . These poor bonzes were obliged to remain upon the stage during the whole journey, and they were not allowed to descend on any account; however pressing. Three other boats followed, which had also three other stages; upon one was displayed a large pisce of white damask, fastened upon a wooden frame, and on this damask were written a number of large superstitious characters. This is, according to the Pagans, the abode of one of the son of the defunct. On another stage were rice, fruits, and eth meats; and upon the last stage were pesched ocetain mon banks, whose duty is to chase away the demons who withen to come and seize the soul of the defunet, or at least wer in in any manner they could. These innividuals had their bodies painted different colours,—some white, others black, others red, grablue, violet, brown. They had wooden swords, lances, or other howied, they sung, danced, made a thousand contestions, shorts their wooden arms of the state of their wooden arms or fire-brands,-all with the purpose of frightening the demons. After these barques came the bons which bore the corpse, towed by another book; and after it cantil the boat of the new king, who was alone with his women. Alie boat was also towed. Then came boats bearing the princes and the mandarins. There were also boats in which were soldiers carrying fire-brands and torches, besides other boats in which the soldiers had arms, muskets, sabres, and lances. Thus the proceeded on the first, second, and third days, observing all thes has been said before, and scattering throughout a large quantity of gold and silver paper. They slept during the night in the boats. They also ate in the boats.

At last, on the 11th, they arrived near the tomb, built is a mountain very near the river. On one side of the mountain an edifice had been built of beautiful stone, enclosed by a wall. In this edifice are the apartments which must serve as a prison to the wives of the defunct who have no children. They are perpetually shut up there to guard the sepulchre, and prepare daily the food and the other things of which they think the deceased has need in the other life. In the mountain a deep cavera has been excavated, the entrance to which is in the edifice, and is formed of a large stone. It is in this cavern, which is extended to the middle of the mountain, in a place unknown to the publica that the corpse is deposited. This place is only made known to the persons strictly necessary, for they fear that, in case of war, the enemy will try to profane the remains of the defunct king, as has already happened in this country; and this is regarded one of the greatest of misfortunes. From the river to the tomb a floor has been made, covered with beautiful mats; and over this floor the coffin was borne and the whole of the convoy marched, who also carried all the boats and the stages with great pomp. At the precise hour indicated by the astrologers, the corpse was deposited in the cavern, and with it were interred much gold and silver, precious stones, and many other valuable objects, and then the cavern was closed. This done, three large piles were constructed within the compass of the walls. These piles were composed of boats, of stages, and of everything that had been used in the funeral; and, moreover, of all the objects which had been in use by the king during his lifetime,—of cliessmen, musical instruments, fans, boxes, parasols, mats, fillets, carriages, &c. &c., and likewise a horse and an elephant of wood and pasteboard. There was also burned separately a magnificent boat, all gilt, in which had been placed gold, silver, and precious stones. This was the boat which had gold, silver, and precious stones. This was the boat which had been used by the king during his life; and further, another very magnificent boat was burned, which had been built for the express purpose of carrying the corpse. The young king applied the fire. During all the time of the burning, the mountebanks, who before had been mounted upon a stage, and whose duty it was to chase away the devils, conducted themselves in a very singular manner. They danced, leapt, brandished their wooden singular manner. arms or fire-brands, they sung, they shouted, menacing the demons with all kinds of misfortunes, in order to prevent thems from entering the cave where the corpse of the king had been When all was consumed, the new king and the maninterred. darins quietly returned to the city. In this ceremony, however, several mandarins lost their rank, the least mistake about the ceremonial being most severely punished.

Some months after the funeral, at two different times, there were constructed in a forest, near a pagoda, two magnificent palaces of wood, with rich furnishings, in all things similar the palace which the defunct monarch had imbalited. Each palace was composed of twenty rooms, and the most scrupulous attention was given, in order that nothing might be wanting more cessary for a palace; and these palaces were burned with group pomp.—Journal of the Archipelago.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The journals of British India, brought by the last Mail, abound with antidotes to the cholera morbus, or remedies for that inscrutable disease. As the fungoid theory in this country has disappeared under the test of rigid investigation, we subjoin (under this, as the most appropriate, head of the Indian Mail) a report of three of the best authenticated of the Indian specifics.

Dr. W. G. Maxwell, surgeon, 3rd Light Cavalry, at Bowenpilly, in a letter addressed to the editor of the Madras Athemen (August 21), and "to all other editors throughout the world," announces the success which has attended his treatment of the disease with carbonate of sods, in the following form: "Carbonate of sods, one scruple; opium (common bazar) three grains; soap, ten grains; make a bolus, and give immediately, washing down with the following: carbonate of sods, two scruples; water, boiling, four ounces; to be drunk as hot as it possibly can. To children I gave, at first, the plain solution, and although some of them vomited a good deal, they all recovered. I now give it with the smodyne to children also from the \( \frac{1}{2} \) to \( \frac{1}{2} \), and so on, according to the age) of a grain of opium with soap."

Of the efficacy of this remedy Dr. Maxwell speaks with "unabated confidence."

Dr. John Scott, of Madras, in a letter addressed to the same Sournal (September 6), states a simple mode of treating the dis-case, which, he says, he has "practised for the last years with the greatest success." It is as follows: "When a patient suffering under the ordinary symptoms of cholera is to be treated, I place a large dose of calomel on his tongue, and wash it down with about a spoon-ful of fluid. To an adult I give 20 grs.; to a child a dose in proportion. If the first dose be rejected, I give a second, and this, with a large mustard poultice over the abdomen, kept on till it thoroughly redden the skin, is all I generally and it necessary to do. I generally interdict all fluids for the first hour or two, till the medicine has been absorbed. I then give cold water or soda water in abundance. A larger dose of calomel acts as a pure sedative, while it at the same time unlocks the biliary secretion, and by relieving the spasm of the capillaries promotes the restoration of animal heat to the surface. I would enter my strongest caveat against the administration of epium with it, the effect of which is to arrest instead of to promote the biliary secretions." Dr. Scott states that the result of a number of cases, since his arrival at Madras, had fully corroborated his system. He says: "I was asked by a servant of mine, on Sunday evening last, to visit his brother, who was ill of chohera-he resided in Chintadrapet. I found him in almost a moribund state, and manifesting the worst symptoms of the disease, under which he had laboured for five hours. I gave a large dose of calomel, and ordered a mustard sinapism to the abdomen. was immediately solicited to visit a number of people suffering from cholera in that horrible and disgusting locality. I pursued the same plan of treatment, which was, I have since ascertained, in every case successful."

The Bombay Times (August 25) publishes "an infallible cure, in the most desperate cases," of the disease, communicated in a letter from Mr. John Barker, of Smyrna, agent at Aleppo, to Lord Falkland, the Governor of Bombay, which his Lordship transmitted to the Medical Board. The treatment which, he says, had been applied in ninety cases without a single failure, is simply as follows: " As soon as possible after the reaching and diarrhoea commences, put the patient's legs up to the knees in water as hot as the hand can bear it: add thereto six or seven Let the legs be rubbed by two strong handsful of common salt. persons (each using both hands) for the period of half an hour, when the larger vein on the instep of each foot must be opened, and permitted to flow in the water from twelve to twenty minutes, according to the sex, age, and strength of the patient. During this time, fresh hot water must be used, every now and then, as the water in the pail cools. Natural animal heat all over the body, and consciousness, will soon after be restored; the patient will soon after speak, and ask for food; if a soldier, he will return to the parade in a few days, in perfect health. In some cases, the operation of bleeding as above will be repeated, and in a very rare case, the patient must be bled a third time. have said that the operation of bathing the feet and legs should commence as soon as possible; but as long as there is breath in the nostrils it must be adopted, for it has succeeded perfectly after six or eight, and even in one case after ten, hours had clapsed since the attack; and although I have had cases here of the worst kind, the patients always recovered their perfect health, and went about their usual occupations in the fields in two, or at most four days; in fact, the cure was perfected, in such cases, quite as soon as in those where more timely asssistance had been procured."

The benefits which attend printing, and the general diffusion of knowledge, by means of a periodical press, amongst the masses of the people, seem about to be appreciated by the natives of India, and may be expected soon to produce their sure results. We have collected the following announcements from recent Indian papers.

A new illustrated Bengali newspaper, styled Kowsloob Keeron, has just issued from the Sumachur Chandrica press, edited by Baboo Rajhurijun Mittre, author of the Kausto Koustab; it is a bi monthly publication, and the first number contains an elaborate account of the Pooranic theory of the earth. A scientific magazine, in Guzerattee, has just been started by the Parsees of Bombay. A mercantile gazette, called the Muhajun Durpun, printed in Bengalee, by some native merchant, containing notices of the arrival of goods, a price current, and a few remarks on mercantile affairs, is circulated in Bengal; and that such a production can find a sale among native merchants is no equivocal sign of improvement. Printed journals appear in all the presidencies to have nearly superseded the manuscript ukhbars, which were formerly so extensively circulated in the large native towns. Perhaps the most striking evidence of the effect already produced by the native press is to be found in the step taken by the Nuwab of the Carnatic, who has prohibited all good Mussalmans from reading the Jami-ool-Ukhbar, a native paper of an un-Mahomedan tendency.

The Journal of the Indian Archipelago for June contains a General Sketch of Sumatra, by the Editor, who mentions a circumstance which, in an ethnographical point of view, gives a peculiar interest to that island:—

peculiar interest to that island: "Asia has two great Peninsulas advancing into the southern ocean, the Indian terminating nearly in the same latitude where Sumatra begins, and the Indo-Chinese terminating in the Malayan above a degree more to the south, or about the latitude of the middle of Sumatra. The one lands-end, however, is about 3° to the westward of Achin, while the other is only separated from the coast of Kampar by a land-locked and calm strait thirty-five miles broad, covered with islets forming a series of stepping-stones, the widest interval between which is about four Whenever the inhabitants of the continent learned to use the rudest boat or raft, Sumatra became practically united to Asia at this point; but not until the art of navigation had made considerable progress in the Indian Peninsula,—not until its coasting trade had long flourished and extended, and its inhabitants reached the civilization which grows with such a trade, could it become connected with Sumatra, either by its navigators sailing round the Bay of Bengal, or boldly crossing the open The period, therefore, which separated the first colonization of Sumatra from Asia by the Malay Peninsula, from its first communication with the Indian Peninsula, was that which intervenes between the savage skill to make a cance and the civilized art of building a ship. What the condition of the Indian and Indo-Chinese people was before art was developed, we know from the numerous tribes that have remained from ancient times in every mountain range from the western chain of India to the eastern one of Anam, protected by the steeps and forests from the absorbing and exterminating powers of surrounding The fact which I wish to be kept in mind in our civilization. further inquiries is this,—that Sumatra, which must have been continually subject to the influence of Indian and Arab traders and emigrants from the time when the first voyage from Malabar or the Coromandel Coast, or from Ceylon, discovered its gold, camphor, and benjamin, has also, until now, during a period of about 2,000 years at least,* preserved remants of the aboriginal Indo-Chinese people, and, amongst its Hinduised tribes, unequivocal vestiges of the ante-Hindu condition. From this point of view we may distinguish five principal social stages, although a more enlarged view will comprise others.

"1st. The aboriginal, barbaric Indo-Chinese condition (the Polynesian condition has grown out of this, and in different places preserves more or less of its characteristica). Ex. The Abungs, and the southern tribes of P. Nias, who take human heads, and cannot marry till they have acquired one or more, like the Nagas of Assam; the Kukis, N.E. of Chittagong, &c. The Pagai, who, like the Nagas, &c., tatoo their bodies, adding fresh marks when they have killed an enemy, and, like the Mishmees, &c., expose their dead on stages till the flesh rots away from their bones, sacrifice fowls and hogs to avert calamities, &c. The Orang Engano are a cruel and barbarous race, divided into communities sometimes at war with each other, and when better known will probably furnish many traits of this ethnic stage.

* Large ships of the Coromandel Coast are described as crossing the Bay of Bengal to Sumatra (Chryse) by an Alexandrian author of the first century (Periplus, of the Erythræan Sea). They appear to have belonged to Masulfatam, the first port from Cape Comorin where vessels can lie safely; and to navigators of that port the discovery of Sumatra was probably due.

2nd. This condition, partially Hinduised, or a civilized condition, retaining some broad traits of the barbaric stage. Ex. The Batta', who preserve cannibalism, tatooing, shamanism, &c. One section of the Malay race, the Korinchi, still live in singlehoused communities in some places, like the Mishmees, Singhpoos, &c. On the other hand, the vestiges of Indian influence amongst the Battas are abundant, in their physical peculiarities, names of places and persons, titles and cognomens, days of the week, alphabet, architectural remains, &c.

"3rd. A higher civilization, produced either by a greater infusion of Indian influence, or, as seems probable, by a locality more favourable to the development of the Indo-Malay civilization. Ex. The Malays of Menangkabau. Not only are the ancient Indian influences still manifested in the same manner as with the Battas (excepting the calendar, which is now Mahamedan), and in a greater degree, but I think the very name of the people, and a peculiar mode of inheritance still prevalent to a considerable extent amongst them, enable us to determine from what part of the Indian Peninsula their civilization came. The females are considered the representatives of the family; they do not enter their husbands' suku or quarter of the clan (lara), but retain their own, and transmit it with their heritage to their children, the husband remaining a member of his own suku, his family (buaprut), which is represented by his sisters, considering their house as his proper domicile, and transmitting his heritage to their children, and not to his own. This extraordinary law of inheritance is the same as that of the higher families of Malayala, or Malaya (Malabar), and, there can be no doubt, has been introduced by Malayan or Malayalan colonists No rational explanation can be or emigrants. indigenous origin of such a custom amongst the Malays of Sumatra. † It arose amongst the Malayas of Malabar, from the circumstance of marriage being prohibited, or where customary never consummated, in the families of the chiefs. Sisters live in the same houses with their brothers, and manage their families, but the brothers' children do not represent their fathers. The children of the sisters, whose paternity is unknown or unrecognized, are the successors to the position and heritage of the family. I conceive, therefore, that adventurers belonging to noble Malaya families first discovered or settled on the western coast of Sumatra, and civilized the aborigines. The name Malaya was probably retained by all the families which these settlers founded by intermarriage with the women of the country; and hence, perhaps, the origin of the suku Malayu, several of which are found in the clans of Menangkabau. The first application of the general name Malaya to the coast and its inhabitants, and its extension to the people of the same race elsewhere, was, we may be sure, the act of the Malaya or Kling navigators and traders, and not of the aborigines, who always distinguish themselves by the names of the district which they inhabit. In the Maleala language, Malé signifies a mountain; Maleala, a mountain region or highland; and hence the name of themselves and their own mountainous country. discovered the mountainous west coast of Sumatra, they would naturally give the same name to it and its people when they found it had no native name, and that no national designation existed amongst its inhabitants. The Malayas probably introduced another peculiarity of Malayala into Menangkabau, - the custom of living in separate houses surrounded by plantations (desa, desam), instead of villages. The Malay dusun, which entirely resembles the Malaya desam, has doubtless derived its name from it also. The system of village government, prevailing in Menangkabau, was probably also amongst the reforms of the Indian settlers, as it strikingly resembles their own. the settlers were few, with reference to the number of the aborigines, we may gather from the facts that they adopted the vernacular of the latter, and produced no perceptible physical change in them.

"4th. The condition resulting from the uninterrupted conti-nuance of Indian influence. Ex. The Achinese.

" 5th. The condition resulting from the influence of intercourse with foreigners of different nations. Ex. The Malays of the seaports of Sumatra, and trading Malays in general."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

FRIDAY, November 2, 1849.

Our colonial possessions seem to be slowly, but surely, reaching a crisis in their fate which is pregnant with important consequences. There are no examples in history to justify the conclusion that, in the natural course of things, a colony, severed by a long geographical interval from the mother country, when it has arrived at a certain stage of maturity, - when it can protect itself, govern itself, and discharge its own expenditure out of its own local resources,-will claim a separation from the mother country, in order that its peculiar interests should not suffer by being mixed up with imperial interests; but such a conclusion is highly reasonable. A parent country and its colonies may not unaptly be likened to those polygastric animalcules which, naturalists tell us, propagate and multiply their species by detaching from the adult body portions intended to be distinct animalcules, when they have attained such a degree of maturity as to possess within themselves the organs requisite for independent existence. Signs, not to be mistaken, we think, are exhibited by some of our colonies, that they desire such a change, and it is wise not to shut our eyes against an event which it may be impossible to arrest, though we may retard it, and, meanwhile, provide against its evils, if any are to be apprehended.

We, of course, exclude the British possessions in India. from the category. These vast possessions are not colonies or settlements, nor is their administration of a colonial character. The crisis which they are approaching is a different one; the charter of the East-India Company is on the verge of expiring, and its renewal will not probably be granted without some struggle for changes. For the present we shall say no more upon this subject, than to express a hope that the misrepresentations which attended and disgraced the discussion of the existing charter, will in no shape be renewed. The commercial interest can desire no greater freedom of intercourse with India than they now enjoy; they have had time to reflect upon the folly of those who deluded them with vain hopes, and tempted many into speculations by which they have been ruined. But of this hereafter.

Recent accounts from the Canadas speak in no equivocal language of the separation of one or both of these provinces

* The names of the days of the week are the same, allowing for dialectic changes, amongst the Batta', Javanese, Balinese, and Siamese; and these identical names, with two exceptions, are used by the Telugus of the Indian Peninsula to this day. The exceptions are, Monday (Mongal Telugu, Angara Batta', Java, Anghkan Siam) and Thursday, which follows the Britasputi-bar of Bengal, &c. (Braspati Batt, Raspati Jav. Bal. Prahat Siam), and not the Guru of the Telugu. It is the name for Sunday that enables us decidedly to refer the whole to Southern India. In Northern India its Rubbar; in Telugu Anditya, Batt. Haditya, Jav. and Bal. Diti or Daitya Siam, Athit. As far as I am yet informed, Anditya is at present peculiar to the Telugu on the east coast, the Tamil being Nayar. But the Mahamedans of Southern India seem to have preserved it in Ayathwar, and those of N. India in Etwar. On the west coast, although Nayar, or Naeti, is the name in common use, Aditi is also sometimes used. Angara, again, does not appear to be anywhere current in India, but it is in Ceylon, where it is further distinguished by the use of Eric (from Surya?) and Sandu (Chandu), for Sunday and Monday. The Siamese Chan seems immediately referable to the Singalese name. The days are, in all these cases, named from the same objects,—the sun, moon, and five planets, or their agents; but, as these have several names in Sancrit, there was room for difference in choice in different parts of India. The Adityas are the gods, the children of Aditt. The Daityas were the children of Diti. The sun god (Ravi, Surya) is called Aditya form his mother.

† Their traditions on the subject are full of absurdities and physical imposibilities.

† Maleur, a highland town, or town of the highlanders or Male neonle.

† Maleur, a highland town, or town of the highlanders or Male people. Marco Polo describes the great city Malaiur on Bentan, which was the principal Malay settlement in the Johore Archipelago before Singapore was founded. The Malayu Kolon of Ptolemy, which Mr. Crawfurd conceives to have been Sumatra, must, we think, have been the town of Kulom, on the Maleala Coast, so often mentioned by ancient travellers and geographers, and which Edrisi calls Kulam Malay, or Male, 4.e. Kulam in the Male country.

from Great Britain. The proposition seems to be put forward in no unfriendly spirit, but in a calm, philosophical tone, as if the question were admitted to be only one of time, and that the point to be considered was whether the moment of time was not arrived. Annexation to the United States is the scheme of a party of malcontents; that of independence appears to be advocated by men of sober views, and of principles not intrinsically disloyal, who think that the interests of the mother country and those of Canada are, in some respects, antagonistical, and that each party should be at liberty to pursue its own.

In the Cape of Good Hope the convict question has stirred up a spirit of resistance which, it may be apprehended, if not soothed by treatment which the unaccommodating temper of the Colonial Secretary is not likely to employ with the requisite degree of skill and discretion, will lead to a desire of separation. The colony might provide for its own expenditure and its own defence, and the principle upon which the convicts have been forced upon it against its will, is that the mother country has discharged a colonial debt: an argument which may direct the thoughts of the colonists into the channel of separation, as a means whereby they would be released from the chance of incurring such a dangerous obligation in future.

The Australasian colonies are rapidly attaining the strength and proportions of a full-grown nation. Even South Australia, the finances of which were once in a state approaching bankruptcy, we are told, has now a revenue more than double its expenditure, out of which the colonists have applied large sums to the encouragement of immigration thither. In the Australasian colonies generally, the system of management at the Colonial Office is highly unpopular. From New South Wales, as well as from the Cape of Good Hope, memorials have been sent home, praying for the removal of the Colonial Secretary, the head and front of whose offending is merely a leaning towards imperial rather than colonial interests.

In the approaching session of Parliament, the Government will propose a system of self-administration for certain of the colonies, which, in proportion as it shall content the colonists, will approximate the colonies the nearer to independent action. A dependency, self-supporting, self-governing, located some thousands of miles from the seat of empire, would be dependent no longer than it chose to be so

Would the independence of these mature colonies be a real loss to the mother country? The question may be regarded in a political, commercial, and financial view. Politically, this country could only be injured by those colonies being transferred to a rival power, and the question assumes that condition to be excluded. Commercially, it can scarcely be doubted that both parties would be gainers. The age of restriction and protection has passed away; free trade has been or must be extended to our colonies; what matters, then, whether these countries are called our colonies or not? Financially, this country would be relieved from an enormous burthen of taxation, in the army, navy, and ordnance departments, incurred solely on account of the defence of her colonies, and the maintenance of her authority there.

The result is, that we may contemplate with equanimity the approach of that period which shall divorce us from a portion of our magnificent colonial empire. The prospect should teach us, however, to administer our authority over them, while it lasts, with mildness and justice. A harsh and selfish system would precipitate the separation, under hostile and repulsive feelings; kind and just treatment would prolong the union, and render its dissolution, when unavoidable, a subject of regret to both parties.

In our present issue we give an extract of the evidence taken by the Commissioners of Inquiry into the Calcutta police, purposely selecting that of the deputy-superintendent, who, indeed, appears to have been an embodiment, or a personification, of the executive police, which was, in a manner, represented by Mr. McCann. The notions we are accustomed to entertain of a police, from the accounts we have heard of the French system, and the knowledge we have of our own, are strangely contradicted by the picture given in this evidence.

He was first questioned as to the case of one Sibchunder Mullick, charged with forgery, for whose arrest Mr. McCann had a warrant, which changed hands in a very amusing manner, and during the time it was making its rounds from magistrate to superintendent, and from superintendent to inspector, the offender was at large, "publicly going about Calcutta," and he had even the confidence to come to the police. Mr. McCann knew nothing of all this. His simple answers remind one of the time when everybody in France knew that Napoleon was about to leave Elba, except the police; so that it became a standing joke, when a man appeared ignorant of what all the world knew, to say, "apparément vous étes de la police."

Then the custody of the money and other property in the charge of the police seems to have been under such slight checks, that we think it highly to the credit of the officers of that body that any of it was permitted to remain in the chest. "I kept no account of, and gave no receipts for, the property I received," says Mr. McCann; the "subordinate police officers, who brought articles to me, put them in a parcel, on which they wrote the names of the parties to whom they had belonged, the names of the officers detaining them, a list of the contents, and the date, and put them into the chest, where they remained until claimed by parties who had a right to them." It is, therefore, no wonder that sums disappeared no one knows how or where.

Generally, Mr. McCann's memory is at fault; he cannot remember; he has no recollection; but one matter is brought home so directly to him, that he cannot plead forgetfulness. A gold Trichinopoly chain and a silver watch came into the charge of the police, and these articles were given (or lent) by Mr. McCann to an inspector, Mr. Farrell, who was present before the Commissioners to vouch the fact. "Why did you give them?" is the question. "For public purposes," is the answer. "What public purpose was the chain to serve?" Mr. McCann "makes no reply." There is a similar story about a chapel clock, which likewise found its way, somehow, into the hands of the fortunate Mr. Farrell.

And this system, or rather want of system, seems to have been going on for years,—the Magistrates of Police receiving large salaries, and indolently suffering these men (for their neglect of strict supervision amounts to virtual permission) thus to abuse their trust!

The judges of the Supreme Court at Bombay have recently decided one of those nice questions of matrimonial law, to which the important judgment of the House of Lords, in the Queen v. Millis, has given rise. The validity of a marriage, solemnized by a person not in Holy Orders of the Church of England, between parties who were members of that Church, was questioned in an action for criminal conversation against the soducer of the wife. The judges determined, after some deliberation, that the marriage was valid; and their judgment will tend to dissipate, or mitigate, the alarm which is felt respecting the legality of uncanonical marriages in the East.

The argument against the validity of the marriage was, that the case of the Queen v. Milks had established that, by the common law of England, a valid marriage could only be solemnized, in the case of these parties, in the presence and by the intervention of a minister in Holy Orders. The Court decided that that portion of the common law which required the presence of an ordained minister at a marriage was never introduced, and did not now exist, in India; and it accordingly pronounced in favour of the marriage.

The effect of a contrary conclusion would, as Sir E. Perry observed, "be to pronounce a vast number of marriages that have taken place in India during the last 250 years invalid; to extend the stain of illegitimacy to many a pedigree hitherto deemed spotless, and, above all, to carry terror and dismay into numerous innocent and unsuspecting households."

The decision, however, rests upon the narrow basis of this single proposition, that the common law of England, as respects these contracts between Europeans, is not the law of India.

NATIVE OFFICERS IN THE INDIAN ARMY.—The system of native officers is a noxious excrescence, without a single advantage to recommend it, and it would be far more convenient to substitute a pension and dismissal for those who would under the present system attain those grades. It is not his fault, as belonging to the Bengal army, that makes the native officer a source of annoyance to his subordinates, and useless to his superiors. It is his fault as an Asiatic, and it arises from the peculiar domineering insolence and meanness of ideas which enters so largely into the oriental character.—Friend of India.

Mr. Little, the coroner of Singapore, after detailing several instances of appalling suicide amongst the Chinese settlers in that island, caused by opium-smoking, writes: "If the local authorities in Singapore would only lay before the Legislative Council of Bengal a plain statement of the evils resulting from the use of opium here, I feel sure that, for the sake of 7,500 dollars a month (the revenue obtained from the sale of the opium-farm last year), they would not by its encouragement physically deteriorate and demoralize so many thousands of the inhabitan's of this island."

Gambling amongst the Battas is carried to such a pitch of extravagance, that, when all their property has been lost, they will stake the liberty of their wives and their children, and lastly their own. Even when a Batta has lost his liberty, he will gamble away his food and, when he has an opportunity, the very clothes he receives as a slave.

It is related of the city of Pekin, one of the most populous cities in the world, that, though without sewers of any kind, no description of filth is allowed to offend the senses of the passengers in the streets. This remarkable cleanliness is, however, attributed to the scarcity of manure rather than the efficiency of the Chinese police. The same means of enriching the soil might be employed in this country, which would make the Chinese example, in this respect, not unworthy of the attention of our authorities.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER'S RETIREMENT. - The contingency of a new insurrection in the Punjab is at least matter of no unreasonable speculation; and the period seems hardly yet to have expired within which the developments of discontent or revenge might be fairly looked for. We have reason, however, to believe that Sir Charles Napier is neither blind to those liabilities, nor unwilling, in the interval, to devote himself to duties less imperative, though not less beneficial than those to which he was expressly called. No person knows better than himself the opportunities of organization and settlement which follow upon conquest, or the credit which is to be won in those fields of peace. But at the same time it is not to be denied, that although the actual exigency for which his intervention was bespoken no longer subsists, the stipulations on which it was lent remain vir-It is well known that uncontrolled freedom of tually in force. action in his legitimate sphere was made by him an indispensable condition of the compact in pursuance of which, at an advanced age, and under heavy responsibilities, he resumed the duties of his profession. As long as the fortunes of India were thought to be at stake this condition was likely to be observed, but now that the danger is past it is perhaps not wholly unnatural cont the dispositions which it induced should undergo a correspond-ing change. Sir Charles's services, whether for war or for peace, are given on conditions, and in the case of peace these conditions may appear less acceptable than in the case of war. Such a conclusion is much to be regretted, but the results, be they what they may, cannot be charged to Sir Charles Napier's decision. A reputation like his has its rights as well as its obligations, and he may reasonably desire to be released from a post of which the responsibility exceeds the authority, and in which the restraints imposed upon his action render it impossible to fulfil the expectations based upon his renown. - Times

The Isthmus of Panama.—For more than twenty years past, I have been questioned respecting the problem of the isthmus of Panama by societies that wished to employ their large pecuniary resources; but the simple advice I gave has never been followed. Every competent engineer knows that, under the tropics, even without corresponding observations, good barometrical measurements, may, by observing the hourly variations, obtain a certainty within seventy to ninety feet. It might be easy to establish, in a few months, two fixed barometrical stations at the two seas, and to compare between them and those of the fixed stations the transportable instruments employed in the provisional surveying.—Baron d'Humboldt.

THE RELIGION OF THE CHINESE, so far as it is understood, is a tolerably pure system of morality. It differs from the faith of most pagan nations in two special essentials,—human sacrifices are not presented to their gods, and immorality is not deified. Licentious they may be in practice, but their mythology is pure, and not chargeable with the national sensuality, "No Venus or Lukshmi occurs in the list of Chinese goddesses; no weeping for Thammuz, no exposure in the temple of Mylitta, or obscene rites of Durga puja have ever been required or sanctioned by Chinese priests; nor are nautch girls as in Indian Temples, or courtesans as in Corinth, kept in their sacred buildings." In preaching to the Athenians, the wicked absurdities of their mythology was a powerful lever in the hands of St. Paul, but even he could not upset the temples built to unknown gods. Refined and intellectual as they claimed to be, they were not shocked at the revolting and disgusting amours ascribed to their deities. The religion of the Chinese is purity itself as compared with that of the ancients; and when we consider that the gifted Paul preached with but indifferent success to the worshippers of corrupt deities, can we wonder that modern missionaries labour in vain among the disciples of the great Chinese moralist?—Friend of China.

To the North-Western provinces of British India, at least, cannot be applied the taunt, that we have done nothing, compared with the Mahomedan emperors, with respect to roads, bridges, and canals. Even here, in the very seat of their supremacy, we have hundreds of good district roads where one never existed before, besides the 400 miles of trunk road, which is better than a road of similar arters in Function. is better than any mail road of similar extent in Europe. The scientific survey alone of the North-West provinces is sufficient to proclaim our superiority; in which every field throughout an 1 area of 52,000 square miles is mapped and in every man's poss ssion. It altogether eclipses the boasted measurement of Akbar, and is as magnificent a monument of civilization as any country in the world can produce. - Sir H. Elliot.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards. CHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

**NONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

**** To the First Part of this Dictionary, the preceding editions of which have met with general approbation, as well in Europe as in India, the author has by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, been enabled to make nuch extensive additions, that the number of words and phrases, now given and explained, exceeds by many thousands that contained in any other Hindustani and English Dictionary extant. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper character, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages; and much attention has been paid to the insertion of the names of Plants, as well as of other natural productions, with the technical terms at present adopted for them in Europe.

The Second Part. Evallab and Hindustani is approximated.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the English words in most general use, as well as numerous phrases, with the corresponding Hindustani annexed; and so much additional matter has been now introduced, that although the work is printed in a smaller type, the present Edition comprises FOURTERN SMEETS MORE of letter-press than the last, and it is greatly reduced in price.

Also. 5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14c.

A GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhni,

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company :-

Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged.

Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney Calcutta. Madras, and Bombay.

A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

THE ANNUITIES offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of Interest obtainable on Colonial Investments. Annuitants also participate in the profits.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

IN ONE VOLUME, ROYAL SVO. PRICE £2. 12s. 6d.

IN ONE VOLUME, ROYAL 8VO. PRICE £2. 124. 6d.

*a** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—via. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one wolume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

"If condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable,—if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forbes's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patrons and students of Hindustani literature."—Friend of India, October 19, 1848.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

WE have again to announce the arrival of a mail which, freighted with the journals of the three Presidencies of India, and those of Ceylon and China, is, nevertheless, barren of incidents of political interest. "For once," says the Bombay Times, "we have a cold season opening upon us without even a rumour of a war." The Madras Athenæum apologizes for sending to Europe a Summary of five sheets instead of six, through "the impossibility of gleaning sufficient matter" to fill the customary space. The Calcutta editors, in a tone somewhat akin to lamentation, declare that they have nothing to record but "the monotonous chronicles of a country at peace in itself and with all around it." The prominence which was given to the Mopla affair at Malliaporam, is rightly regarded by the Hurkaru as the best illustration of the uneventful character of the present time; the noise it made served to show how profound was the stillness which it for a moment broke. From this state of things the friends of British India will derive joy and hope.

The event of most importance in this penury of intelligence is the arrest of those rebel Sikh sirdars, who, by an indiscreet indulgence, after their surrender, were suffered to be at large, upon the security of a kind of personal parole of honour, which they appear to have violated. Measures were thereupon promptly taken (in conformity with the intimation given to these chiefs when they received their qualified liberty) for arresting them, and on the 6th October, Sirdar Chutter Singh, and his four sons, were seized in the village of Attaree; Sirdar Lal Singh, his brother Mohtab Singh, and Sirdar Soorut Singh, were arrested at Umritser; and all are now in confinement at Lahore. The other traitor, Hakeem Rae, has probably shared the same fate. It was venturing too far, risking too much, to rely upon the word of these men; but as the trial of their trustworthiness has happily cost so little. their subjection in future to rigorous restraint will be the more justifiable, and will withdraw from them a sympathy which might otherwise have been dangerous.

The latest accounts from Peshawur report the opening of the passes from Affghanistan, and the commencement of commercial intercourse with that country. A kafila had arrived, the first of the season, an earnest that Dost Mahomed Khan was anxious to cultivate a profitable acquaintance with his powerful neighbour. Amusements were the order of the day at that station, where the sickness, caused by the hot weather, had greatly diminished. A letter from Peshawur, dated September 20, draws a most attractive picture of this station and the surrounding country.

"If you have ever ridden from Jumbooseer to Baroda, or from Baroda or Cambay to Kaira and Ahmedabad, you may, by comparison, form some conception of the fertility of this lovely valley. parison, form some conception of the fertility of this lovely valley. If you have never been in Guzerat, then I know not another district in the Bombay Presidency, except perhaps here and there patches along the principal rivers—as the Krishua or Godavery—that can be compared to what surrounds us here in every direction. When we reached Peshawur in March last, the whole valley was one green field of barley or bearded wheat—scarcely an acre of ground was uncultivated. In a few weeks these crops were removed into the stackyards, and for a short time in the end of May and beginning of June the ground appeared bare, brown, and burnt up; but gradually patch after patch of lively green began again to bedeck the landscape, and now I again, in smoking my cigar seated on the roof of my tackhana, look down on an almost unbroken tract of the richest crops, in which the whole of Shere Singh's army—horsemen, spearmen, pioneers and all—might have remained as effectually concealed as in the jungle in front of Russool. Indian corn in great quantities, bajree and jowarry in smaller quantities, various sorts of pulse, rice, cotton, and melon-beds, now cover the whole country; and the rich orchards—which have yielded a splendid harvest of mulberries, cherries, plums, the most luscious pomegranates, melons, peaches larger than cricket-balls, nectarines, figs, pears, and apples, and are still yielding in abundance the most delicious grapes, quinces, &c. &c., and with oranges and various sorts of winter fruits fast approaching to maturity,—stretch as far as the eye can reach in every direction before me."

The detachments on outpost duty at various places had been relieved; and everything seems settling down quietly in the southern districts beyond the Indus, Bunnoo, and the Derajat, the Mahomedan population of which districts remained faithful to us during the whole of the late Punjab campaign.

The devastation caused by the rains, which was the staple topic of our last Summary, appears to have been even upon a larger scale than we then anticipated. The torrents that fell in the hills from which the Jelum receives its waters, and in Cashmere, caused a very serious inundation in the plains below the Salt range. At Pind Dadun Khan a large quantity of salt, which had been stored for Government, was totally lost; at Shahpoor, a little further down, the cantonment of the Punjab infantry regiment located there was completely swept away, compelling the sepoys to encamp at a distance of five miles, while the bursting of the bunds, some eighty miles above Mooltan, caused the whole country in that neighbourhood to be flooded to an unexampled degree, the inundation extending into Sinde, the Indus at Bukkur rising to an unusual height.

An ugly rumour had found currency, having been mentioned in some of the journals, that a conspiracy had been formed in the 1st regiment of the Sikh frontier battalion to murder their officers. The Governor-General having ordered an inquiry, the result (which will be found recorded elsewhere) has been highly favourable to the corps, the Court declaring that, from the evidence given, and from the documents produced, "there did not at any time exist in the 1st regiment Sikh Local Infantry a spirit of disaffection either towards the State or towards their own officers."

Sir H. Lawrence had started from Lahore to Cashmere on the 19th September, for an interview with Maharaja Goolab Singh, to settle some boundary questions, and also on account of his health, which had suffered through application during the hot season. He was accompanied by Lieutenant Beecher, of the Engineers, and Dr. Cole. Several European visitors were already in Cashmere, and two, Lord Gifford and Major Fane, had returned to Bombay by Ladakh.

A report prevailed of the death of the Ameer of Bokhara, but it was not credited.

Much anxiety seems to be felt amongst the military in the Punjab and the old provinces, respecting the unusual delay of the customary relief. In connection with this subject, the movements of the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief, upon which the order is supposed in some degree to depend, are watched with curiosity and impatience. The Marquess of Dalhousie, according to the latest report of his intentions, would proceed early in November, vid Lahore and Mooltan, to Kurrachee, where he would embark for a cruise, which will, it is supposed, bring him to Bombay; the object of this voyage being, it is said, the re-establishment of his health. The visit of a Governor-General to Bombay would be a novelty. Sir C. Napier was to start from Simla upon his tour about the middle of October. It is still affirmed that he will return to Europe early next year,—the Mofussilite says "positively" in March. Lord Gough and his suite were to leave Simla on the 10th November, and proceed to England in the January steamer.

The native states of India present no unusual aspect. The affairs of Oude are becoming more and more disorganized, and it is the general belief that the British Government will, in conformity with an article in the treaty to that effect, assume, during the next season, the entire management of the country, paying over the surplus revenue into the treasury of the king. In the Deccan, the affairs of the Nizam are not satisfactory. His debt to the British Government remains unpaid, and no attempt is made to pay Another change of ministry had taken place, and Raja Ram Bux, who formerly held the office, is restored to it, and appointed Vakeel for English affairs. The correspondent of the Englishman says that Ram Bux takes office under greater disadvantages than before :- "The Nizam's treasury, which aided his administration, is nearly empty; there has not been a movement for nearly three years to pay the Sahookar's money, and whilst their capital has suffered diminution, and themselves almost impoverishment, the Government will not be able to renew its credit with them; the arrears of the troops have increased, and every department has deteriorated. During the Nizam's conference with the Resident, General Fraser, objecting to Raja Ram Bux's appointment, said he would write to his Government. The Nizam replied,— What need is there for your writing to Government, it is enough if you are satisfied." It is added that the Minister intends to transact business at the palace, and to give greater facility of access to the Nizam.

The Bombay Telegraph says :-

"A letter from Hyderabad alludes to a report that a paper had been affixed at the residency gateway, telling General Fraser that the princes and troops were starving; that the contingent only enjoyed the advantage of regular pay; and that unless matters mended, his (General F.'s) life would be taken, twenty-eight men having already been engaged, on oath, to assassinate him. Our correspondent adds, that the writer was supposed to be Prince Futteh Alee, the Nizam's brother! The paper was reported to have been sent by the Resident to Rajah Ram Bux and the Nizam, when the latter addressed a sharp reprimand to the prince, through his oostad or teacher (the interesting pupil being, by-the-bye, only thirty-five or forty years of age!)"

With the exception of these tainted spots, India throughout its vast extent seems to be enjoying content. The season has been an auspicious one, the crops being for the most part plentiful.

From the presidencies we have little to note. At Calcutta, since the termination of the police inquiry, similar but private investigations in other departments of the public service have commenced. The Hurkaru reports that "a commission, sitting at Calcutta and Patna, is inquiring into certain charges preferred against Mr. W. Blunt, of the Board of Customs, Salt, and Opium; and another is similarly employed here on certain proceedings of Mr. H. Palmer, the head of the Stamp-office." The Insolvent Debtors Court continues to be the scene of disclosures of the private affairs of public officers not very creditable to their prudence. In one of those cases, a strange statement was made by a subaltern of a native corps, who came before the Court to be sworn to the truth of his schedule (which exhibited debts to the amount of Rs. 15,000 and upwards, and property, including wearing apparel, to the extent of Rs. 193), and was finally discharged, one-third of his pay being reserved for the benefit of his creditors. Towards the close of the proceedings, the following conversation passed between the Court and the insolvent :-

"Sir Arthur Buller asked Lieut. Conroy if he could say how many officers, belonging to his regiment, were indebted to the Agra Bank, beside himself?

"Lieut. Conroy replied, that he regretted to say that the greater portion of the subaltern officers of his regiment were indebted to some joint stock bank or other: he could not say whether the Agra Bank, or any other bank.

"Sir Arthur remarked, that the facilities afforded by such institutions to young men for raising money were of very questionable advantage."

The Madras papers are singularly bare of local intelligence. The engrossing topic was the refusal of the Board of Control to sanction a railway guarantee. Sir Henry Pottinger had arrived at the presidency, and the Commander-in-Chief was expected from Bangalore on the 19th October.

i. At Bombay, much pleasure was felt at the prospect of seeing the Governor-General at that Presidency. The Bishop of Bombay (Dr. Carr) had left, on account of his health, for Europe.

The accounts from Ceylon are to the 15th October. The journals are, as we stated, bare of topics of interest. great event of the month had been the arrival of despatches from England with the proceedings of the Ceylon Parliamentary Committee, which appear to have produced a great sensation, and Sir E. Tennent, it is said, will go home in December.

The Maulmain papers contain some further particulars respecting the attempt to assassinate Major Boyle, the Commissioner, mentioned in our last issue.

The intelligence from China partakes of the general character. The communications between the Portuguese and Chinese authorities, respecting the murder of the Governor of Macao, had, up to the date of the latest advices, led to no result. Meanwhile, piracy seems to be attaining a formidable head in the China seas. Large fleets of piratical junks, under commanders, threaten destruction even to European traders. A well-appointed piratical fleet, of fifty junks, carrying each from eight to twenty guns, was sweeping the coast, from the Gulf of Tonquin and the island of Hainan to the entrance to the Canton river. We have inserted, under the appropriate head, an account of the measures adopted to put down these pirates, whose existence is an opprobrium to the Government of China.

SEIZURE OF SIKH REBEL SIRDARS.

When Major Mackeson granted to the rebel chiefs, who surrendered beyond the Jelum, permission "to live at their own homes," the Governor-General ratified the act of his agent, though we have very good reason to know that he could not and did not approve it. His Lordship was, therefore, obliged to rest satisfied with laying down such strict rules for the conduct of those chiefs at "their own houses" as would tend to render such liberty as little harmless as possible. The rules laid down were subscribed and consented to by the chiefs, who were distinctly told that a breach of any of the conditions imposed on them would inevitably lead to a forfeiture of the liberty allowed them, and reporters were publicly placed at their houses to give notice of any such breach. In spite of the bribery and corruption which seems to have been extensively employed, it had lately been ascertained by the authorities at Lahore, and of course communicated to the Government, that almost all the principal insurgents were in the habit of constantly violating the instructions laid down for their guidance, and that frequent communication had again been established among them. vernor-General promptly, and most properly, determined to exact the penalty the chiefs had knowingly incurred, and issued instructions to the local authorities for the immediate seizure and incarceration of the defaulters. Accordingly, three surprisals were planned, to come off on the 1st of October; one at Attaree, the head-quarters of the rebellion, which is about 10 koss from the capital of the Punjab; one at the village of Sirdars Lall Singh, Morareea, and Soorut Singh, Majeeleea, situate at no great distance from Umritser, and the third at the dwelling of Dewan Hakeem Rae, at Seealkot. Nothing had been heard at Lahore, up to the evening of the 1st inst., of the result of the two latter expeditions, but the first was executed on the morning of that day with the most complete success. Mr. John Lawrence, Mr. R. Montgomery, the Commissioner of that Doab, Major Edwardes, Deputy-Commissioner, and Lieut. Hodson, of the Guide corps, with Capt. Skinner's regiment of Irregular Cavalry (14th), and a small body of Pathan horse, marched from Lahore about an hour after midnight. They reached Attaree just at day-break, first surrounded the village and fort, then effected an entrance without any trouble, and completely took by surprise Sirdar Chutter Singh, and his four sons, Rajah Shere Singh, Sirdars Goolab Singh, Aotar Singh, and Tej Singh, besides other inferior rebels. The whole were mounted on horseback without delay, and hurried to the high road, where a carriage-and-four received them, and whisked them into Lahore, where Dr. Login added them to his "rare collection of celebrated characters." Lieut. Hodson remained at Attaree to search for papers, and retained with him the whole of Capt. Skinner's Irregular Cavalry, and two companies of Native Infantry, with a detachment of pioneers, under Capt. Cafe, of the 56th N. I., who was charged to blow up the fort after the search of Lieut. Hodson should have been completed. The measures adopted for effecting this have been completed. seizure appear to have been most complete. Had any resistance been attempted, and as a provision against any possible contre-temps, a wing of a corps of Native Infantry and two guns, under Capt. Sissmore, were directed to follow the cavalry detachment at 2 A.M., and were much disappointed at learning that the last argument would not be required. The public mind, both on this and the other side the Sutlej, will be much settled by the removal from "their homes" of those rebel leaders whose presence, enjoying a considerable amount of liberty, gave a last resting-place for hope, and none but the chiefs themselves will regret the infatuation which led them into new intrigues, and deprived them of their mischievous liberty. The curtain is now fallen on the Sikh insurrection, and the last scene is, according to moral and practical justice, that of "the guilty punished."— Delhi Gaz., Oct. 6.

We have heard, this morning, that Sirdar Lal Singh, Morareea, his brother Mahtab Singh, Morareea (who commenced the Peshawur revolt), and Sirdar Soorut Singh, Majeeteea, were all arrested, without resistance, by Mr. C. B. Saunders, Deputy-Commissioner, at Umritser, on the 1st of October. The result of the move against Hakeem Rae, at Seealkote, is not yet known. - Ibid., Oct. 8.

TENASSERIM COAL -Since the abandoment of the works on the coal-beds of Mergui (owing to the large balance against the mining concern, and the tendency of the coal to ignite by spontaneous combustion), a new bed, of immense magnitude, of a superior description of coal, was discovered, which burnt well, and the general opinion was that they equalled the best Burdwan in quality.

BENGAL.

PRACTICAL DEDUCTIONS FOR THE MANAGEMENT OF INWARD AND OUTWARD BOUND SHIPS AT OR NEARING THE SANDHEADS, WHEN A CYCLONE IS APPROACHING.

FROM MR. PIDDINGTON'S EIGHTEENTH MEMOIR.

THE great objects of all these researches are, first to develope the laws by which cyclones are governed, and then from such laws to deduce rules for every special class of cases, whereby life and property may be rendered more secure. In no part of the ocean are such rules more required than at the difficult access to the mouth of the Hooghly; and in no part, as far as I recollect, is there to be found a more perplexing combination of dangers at the approach of a cyclone. I have long contemplated the task of unravelling this complicated network of perils, but I have felt, hitherto, that our data were too insufficient to enable me to speak with confidence on many essential points, and to illustrate what I might say with undoubted and striking examples. In a word, if I may be excused the phrase, "we wanted a good cyclone with plenty of ships involved in it, to give us some clear and startling lessons;" and I trust, now that we have had one, the foregoing pages will prove that I have done my best to turn to account the materials which have been so liberally furnished, and that I shall not be found to have set down these rules without duly weighing the heavy responsibility of doing so.

Let us consider what are the various dangers in a cyclone to a ship at (within) or near the Sandheads where they invariably commence from between N.N.E. to N.E., E. or S.E.

- 1. The sands forming a lee shore from the western brace to the mouth of the Burrampooter, with narrow channels and indifferent holding ground, and a sea in which no ship can hope to ride with safety in a severe gale.
- 2. The land to the northward and westward, and from Point Palmiras to the southward.
- 3. The heavy set to the westward over the sands, and for some distance outside of the tails of the reefs.
- 4. The cyclone itself, with its uncertain track, and its attendant storm-wave and storm-current, one, or sometimes both, setting on to the sands or to the coast about Point Palmiras.

It is evident that in every cyclone these four conditions must be all taken into account; and as there is now no sort of doubt about their rotation, the usual tracks of the cyclones become the next consideration, for it is upon the track of the cyclone and its rate of travelling that the safe application of any rule must mainly depend. From all our investigations, up to the present day, it appears that at the Sandheads, and from thence to 8 or 9 degrees north, the tracks of the cyclones may lie from between E. by N. and S. by E., or S.S.E., to the W. by S., or N. by W. or N.N.W., and, as will be seen by the chart of tracks in the Horn Book, that the average may be about from the S.E. or S.E. by S. to the N.W. We can only lay down rules from the average, noting where they would be affected by any great deviation towards the extremes.

The rate of travelling is the next consideration, and this too varies very much, though it probably seldom exceeds 10 miles per hour, which we shall also assume as an average.

Taking first the inward-bound ships, whether from Madras, from Europe, or from the eastward, we have to consider their position, and then, if the cyclone is ahead, or astern, or abreast of them, and in what part of the bay its centre may be, for it is clear that all these cases will vary as this element also may vary.

The first case, in which the cyclone is ahead of the vessel, or, in other words, the ship is behind the cyclone, is simple enough; when convinced of its being a cyclone, the rule should indubitably be to heave to, and this on two accounts,—the first, to avoid running across or into the centre, or overtaking it, and the second because, even if a vessel got safe through or past the centre, she would not gain an hour of time on her voyage, since, as we see in many of the foregoing logs, she would on reaching the pilot station be ordered to sea, or if the pilot vessel had been blown off the station the stranger might find herself hampered off the reefs or braces, with twenty-four hours of heavy weather yet to go through, on a lee shore, the cyclones always ending at south.

The case in which the ship is abreast of the cyclone, which we may describe as having the wind north or south blowing a gale, with a falling barometer, so that the centre bears east or weat of her, is a double one. If the wind is south or between S.E. and S. W., it is clear that the ship is also safely to the eastward of the cyclone, and has only to heave to, if she has not a long run to make to the Sandheads. She will of course heave to on the starboard tack, being on the right hand side, till her barometer rises; or if it be judged, say by the violence of the S. E. squalls and the fall of the barometer, that the centre will yet pass close to her, to stand off to the N. E., unless, indeed, the vessel be altogether hampered in the N. E. corner of the bay.*

If, however, she has the wind between N.E. and north, it is clear that the cyclone is to the eastward or S. eastward of the ship, and is perhaps coming direct towards her at the rate of ten knots an hour, and she must now run back to cross in front of it; always remembering that every mile she runs, say to the S.S.W., after she has brought the wind N.N.E., is into safety, as her rising barometer will quickly show. The reason for this is obvious; she avoids the centre and avoids the farther danger of being hampered with, perhaps, a disabled ship, between the cyclone and the heads of the reefs or the coast of Orissa, as may be. She may always, as she brings the wind to the westward of north, haul to the eastward and run round the southern quadrants and "under the heel" of the cyclone, so as really to lose no time while running easily before it,† or with a quartering gale, so as to avoid the racking and straining of heaving to, or of carrying sail off a lee shore, or riding it out when dismasted.

For the outward bound ships it is clear, that supposing them to leave the pilot at the commencement of the cyclone, or to meet with its onset a few hours after getting to sea, say in 20 deg. north, their rule must also be the same, namely, to bear up so far as to cross in front of it, and not, which has usually been done, to stand close hauled into the very path of the track, and recollecting that from False Point the coast trends to the westward of S.W., and that in 20 deg. north on the meridian of the light vessel a ship is still 120 miles from the Black Pagoda, there need be no fear about making a little westing at first, for allowing the cyclone the very worst track we can suppose for a ship in this position, namely, one from S. by E., it is clear that a very short run to the S. W. will place the vessel at a distance from the line of the track and bring the wind to N. N. E., and gradually to north, so as to place her abreast of the centre; and if the track is from any point more easterly, as it probably will be, say from S. E. or E. S. E., then the distance to be made will be but short to a northerly wind. The intelligent mariner may easily, by means of a storm-card, see the truth of these propositions.

For the set over the Sandheads it may be safe to allow three and a half miles an hour at the onset of a cyclone at the light vessel, decreasing to two, and even one knot, by the time the vessel has passed the parallel of 20 deg., but also increasing both in breadth and velocity if the cyclone had lasted any time, and the careful mariner will duly take this into his account whether standing out or hove to.

We may further illustrate this by a reference to our diagram, No. I., upon which we will suppose, to put things almost at the worst, a cyclone like this of October, when its centre on the position marked for that of the 12th in lat. 17 deg. 48 min. N., long. 89 deg. 18 min. E., coming up on the same track towards False Point, but at the rate of ten miles an hour. This will place it in twelve hours about 20 miles a-head of the spot at which the centre of the 13th is marked, or say in lat. 19 deg. 17 min. N., long. 88 deg. 18 min. E., and leaves still a distance of something more than 80 miles between its centre at midnight and False Point. Now, though ships would probably be ordered to sea, say by the station vessel (lying outside of the light vessel) on the 11th, and certainly at daylight on the 12th, we will suppose a vessel so belated, or to have mistakenly run in so far that she can only start from the light vessel at noon of the 12th, so as to get 100 miles of run before midnight. It will be seen, by taking this in the compasses, that steering to the S.S.W. and S.W. by S. it will take her between the point and the centre, and at a distance of 45 or 50 miles from this last, and then enable her to bear away to the S.W., so that she will quickly run into moderate weather, and can gradually haul up to the southward, eastward, and northward, back to the light vessel again, if the weather is fine enough. Every seaman will of course see that this is a question of rate of sailing, and, above all, of steering so as to avoid broaching to; but that even if he should be disabled (which he might equally be in lying to), he will still here have northerly winds and a clear drift to sea, while on the northern side of the cyclone track, he would be drifting on to a lee shore with easterly and south-easterly winds. The examples of the Forth, which vessel I take to have been at one time within 20 or 30 miles of the centre, and of the Collingwood while overrunning the cyclone, are instances of what may be done by good steering ships, even in the very height of these fearful tempests and close to the centre, and the Fattle Rozack's management is a good instance of passing a cyclone at a reasonable distance with a heavy sailing ahip.

In some instances, as in the Coringa cyclone of Nov., 1839, which forms the subject of Part II. of my second memoir ("Journal Asiatic Society," vol. IX.), it has occurred that a cyclone travelling from the Andamans to Coringa was so far felt as a heavy easterly and E.S.E. gale at the Sandheads, that for some days it was imprudent to approach the station, and all vessels were warned to sea. But in this and all similar cases of distant cyclones the barometer is the guiding indication, and in this instance the barometer was at 29 deg. 92 min. to 29 deg. 95 min. at the light vessel.

In my third memoir, also ("Journal Asiatic Society," vol. IX.), we have an instance which might appear to create a difficulty, i. e., a cyclone travelling across the bay from the Andamans, first towards the Coromandel coast, on about a N.W. by W. course, or towards that part of it lying between Ganjam and Bimilipatam, but on its approach to about the meridian of the light vessel curving to the N.W. by N., so as to "land" between the Black Pagoda and Juggernaut, giving the light vessel and ships at the Sandheads a heavy easterly and E. by S. gale, amounting at one time with some of them who were close to False Point or on the parallel of 20 deg. to a hurricane.

But in this case also there will be found abundant guidance for the judgment of the attentive seamen, who will see by placing his horn-card in the chart, that the wind at the light vessel is at E. by S. (showing that the centre is S. by W. of him already) from the first, and E. S. E. (centre bearing S. S. W.) by the time it is really blowing hard, and thus he will not attempt now to cross in front, but get an offing and heave to.

To sum up these rules then. For the ships to the northward (i. e. on the right hand side of the track) of the cyclone when the gale, with a falling barometer, is at S.E. to E.S.E., they may, if they have sea room, stand to the N.E. to allow it to pass them comfortably, heaving to, of course, on the starboard tack when far enough out of its way. Between E.S.E. and east they may, if the barometer be not too low, and they have sea room to give the shores of Orissa a wide berth, with a stout ship and good helmsmen venture to cross, or if this be not advisable, heave to on the starboard tack when they have made an offing, if in an outward-bound ship, or before they run too far in if inward-bound.

With the wind between east and N.E. to north, I have already shown that crossing may almost always be safely adopted for the ships to the right (northward) of the cyclone path, and for those to the left (southward) of it that they must not run into it, fancying it a fine fair wind, or too far up, if in its rear, as that is wholly useless, and may bring them into soundings with a heavy southerly gale, and much sooner than they expect, if the stormwave and current are strong, if the track is one near the meridian.* All will, I hope, recollect that they have first to consider what their ship and crew can do, next what their best course is, and lastly in what position they may be if dismasting, or even loss of topmasts should occur; and this may happen from broaching to, or from sheer hard blowing, in the best ship. With an on-shore gale the resource of anchoring in the open ocean, which all the Sandhead anchoring and most of that of the coast of Orissa is, becomes one to which no good seaman would desire to be reduced if he can avoid it.

Finally, I need not remark that in all this, both as to the expected cyclone and what is to be done to avoid it, much must depend on the judgment, guided by careful observation. Thus, for instance, a sea from the eastward crossing a southerly one with a bank of clouds to the E.S.E. are strong signs of a cyclone, though it may be blowing fresh from the south at the time; and, again, if the bank is heavy to the S.S.E., that it may come up from that quarter. In a word, the vigilant seaman will watch everything, and despise no indication, and the dull and the careless will see nothing, and be always too late; and then it will be said that "the ship was very unfortunate;" but the underwriters have paid the damage, and the captain, poor fellow, has lost his command!—Englishman, Sept. 24.

THE CHANGES IN THE MAGISTRACY.

We call attention to the very able letter of "C.B.S., Junior," in our correspondence columns, upon one of the defects which render the administration of justice in Bengal so precarious and uncertain. Eleven different officers have been appointed to conduct the duties of the magistracy at Moorshedabad within the space of two years and nine months. The improbability, not to say impossibility, of justice for either the rich or the poor under such a state of affairs, is abundantly manifest. The magistrate has not even time to become acquainted with his Omlahs. He has no idea whether his Sherishtadar loves a douceur or not, a fact the knowledge of which on the part of his superior, often materially quickens the footstep of justice. As to the character of his district, the number of dacoits who find a living in it, or the names of the Zemindars who are eternally quarrelling within its bounds, of these fruitful sources of crime he will probably not try to know anything whatever, from a perfect conviction of its hopelessness under two years. Even supposing him to understand thoroughly the dialect of the particular district in which he is placed, he will be perpetually embarrassed by his want of local knowledge, and embarrassment is equivalent to injustice, for he must either throw the matter into the hands of " that intelligent Sheristadar," who has been thirty or forty years in the district, or he must grope his way through that which he does not understand.

The magistrate is, in Bengal, very different from the collector. He is not a government functionary, otherwise than that he receives government pay; and the only mode in which the authorities have any interest in interfering with his proceedings is to excite him to increased activity, all the rest is the business of the sudder. The magistrate is consequently left very much to his own devices, and crime flourishes or decreases in a great measure according to his personal exertions. The people of Bengal have an instinctive love for courts and litigation, which nothing can cure them of, except justice. It is not too much to say that every man in the Gangetic provinces, from the nuwab at Moorshedabad to the poorest ryot in Chittagong, has, at some period of his life, been concerned in some suit, either as plaintiff, witness, or defendant, and the vast majority of these cases. come before the magistrate. That he should do strict justice to all, is, we fear, a simple impossibility, but he may do much, and his personal activity will at least serve to check the avaricious cruelty of his subordinates. There are districts where the natives estimate the ability of the magistrate by the rotundity of his sheristadar, and it is by no means a bad test. But unless he is allowed time to acquire some acquaintance with the inhabitants of his district, this abuse of power cannot be prevented. Many of the evils under which the people suffer are produced from their own inherent qualities, many others from the peculiar circumstances of a foreign and dominant race, but some undoubtedly arise from temporary and removeable causes.

We will put a hypothetical case. Suppose an intelligent Hindoo placed in the situation of police magistrate, in a ward of London. His natural acuteness would help him much, his knowledge of the language—for we are supposing a favourable case—would help him more, but he would still be ignorant of the thoughts and customs of the people around him, and moreover totally unacquainted with the peculiar forms and haunts of crime in the district placed under his control. In spite of all this, the Hindoo might make a very good officer in time, but his sole chance of efficiency would be destroyed if he were at once transferred from London to Yorkshire, and then as suddenly ordered to the borders of Wales. Yet this is the ever recurring case in some districts of Bengal. The dialects of London and Yorkshire are not more different than those of Moorshedabad and Chittagong, indeed much less so; yet we doubt if the best educated foreigner would understand a Yorkshire peasant.

We are, we fear, only pointing out a truism, for we believe there is not an officer in the Mofussil who does not acknowledge the greatness of the evil, and the hardship the people suffer in consequence. The only difficulty is to devise a remedy. It is nearly impossible, we think, to do away with officiating appointments. The illness of one man must necessarily move four or five, unless the acting appointment were given to the uncovenanted servant, in which case only one district would suffer instead of many. One source of change might, however, we imagine, be modified, viz. the power exercised by the members of the civil service of exchanging situations with one another. This practice might be put a stop to by the flat of the governor of Bengal, and an increased degree of care in the selection of officers would lessen the evil to a great degree.

One passing observation of our correspondent, we must dissent from. He appears to think that the station of Moorshedabad is particularly difficult to rule, from the circumstance of the existence of a native court, and that consequently the longer the magistrate remains the better he will understand the bounds of his authority. We think not. A magistrate newly appointed is more likely to give way to the pretensions of a native prince. It is useless to attempt to conciliate these courts with their ridiculous pretensions and obsolete rights. Nothing but submission will succeed, and the longer a magistrate remains in any city so situated, the better he will become aware of the uselessness of even that mode of preserving order.—Friend of India.

THE MORALE OF THE ARMY.

The Delhi Gazette complains that officers commanding regiments in the Company's army are in truth nonentities; that they are held responsible for everything, whilst in reality they have no control over anything. This would appear to be overstated. It is undoubted that, in the great majority of the Company's regiments, commanding officers exercise very little influence over the private lives and characters of the officers; but we are inclined to lay the blame of this upon themselves. Very few commanding officers interest themselves at all in the private character and affairs of their officers; some avoid any interference on principle, and under a mistaken idea of their duty; others from laziness, and disinclination to do more than they are absolutely compelled to do, - the result of that indifference to all but self which steals over even the most naturally energetic characters after long service in India. It is rare to meet a commanding officer in India who keeps his officers even up to the strict performance of their military duty; can it be wondered, then, that anything beyond this is for the most part totally neglected?

Sir Henry Fane, in one of his admirable General Orders when Commander-in-Chief in India, remarked that a commanding officer and his juniors always appeared to him as if they were standing on the defensive, one against the other; and that their relative feelings seemed to be quite different from those to which he had been accustomed as a commanding officer. "He could not see any reason why this should be so, or why on ordinary occasions a commanding officer should not call before him an officer whose conduct should be unsatisfactory, and make known his disapprobation by word of mouth to the party concerned, without commencing a correspondence through the adjutant, and thereby making others acquainted with and witnesses to the errors of one of the parties, when no such exposure seemed ne-cessary." This parental style of acting the commandant appears to us exactly what is required in the Company's army at the present day, and were it adopted, and the character of the commandant even tolerably consonant with his exhortations, we feel convinced that the low state of the morale of a considerable minority of the army, which the Delhi deplores, would be rapidly amended. It is notorious, we believe, as the Delhi asserts, that the word of many officers of the army is considered as all but worthless by those who have pecuniary dealings with them; and it is certain that such cannot be the case without a certain amount of disgrace being incurred by the entire body to which such individuals belong. The disgraceful fact must, it is which such individuals belong. The disgraceful fact must, it is to be feared, be admitted, that instances are of daily occurrence of officers failing to meet their promises to pay; of their taking every possible advantage of their creditors, and of their even denying claims which they know to be just. We appeal to the experience of every officer in the country, whether instances of each and all of these delinquencies have not come, not once only, but again and again, under their personal observation. It is true, such offences against the rules of gentlemanly society are rarely exposed or brought to light, but the reason is, because those whose duty it is to expose them-namely, the commanding officers-take no heed of them, or, in their indifference to the private character and conduct of their officers, perhaps never hear of them.

Debt, extravagance, and all the meannesses and departures from the strict line of honour which invariably result therefrom, are chiefly prevalent amongst the young officers of regiments. With these, whatever he may be with the head-quarters' officials, and the other classes of staff officers, the regimental commanding officer is somebody, or rather, notwithstanding the bluster of the mess-table and of the billiard-room, he is a very great person indeed. We venture to affirm that advice and exhortation tendered by him in the spirit inculcated by Sir Henry Fane would very rarely fail to have a most salutary effect upon the conduct and character of the juniors of a regiment. We trust Sir Charles Napier may compel them to exert it.—Englishman, Aug. 14.

THE NORMAL SCHOOL.

It is now two years since we recorded the opening of a Normal School in the metropolis of British India. The official announcement called forth the hearty good wishes of ourselves and of all other friends to native education. We ventured to say but little at the time; it was a novel undertaking to India, and we therefore spoke with caution. Our desires for the perand we therefore spoke with caution. Our desires for the permanent continuance and efficiency of the school were much stronger than either the hope or the anticipations we felt ourselves justified in fostering. We expressed our desire that it might be "a perpetual four for the supply of our educational establishments." The intelligence which has now reached us, through our contemporaries, of the probable dissolution of the school, excites a degree of regret which preponderates considerably over our surprise, and, we must be allowed to add, our fears, with respect to the period assigned to the existence of the school. We hope that this remark will not be construed to reflect in the slightest degree on the principal, nor his assistant training masters. It does not apply to them. It would be extremely unjust to comment on their measures, or to assume their failure, in the absence of necessary and authentic informa-We are likewise unacquainted with the economy and internal working of the school; should these be open to objection,—and they may be without disparagement—there may yet remain other and modifying causes to lesson the obloquy of failure.

It would be altogether redundant to discuss the importance of education, or the practicability of a Normal School under such auspices as we enjoy in this country. Other states possessing feebler resources have tried these schools, and found them to be among their most efficient agencies for good, and though they may not have realized every wish of their zealous patrons, it is beyond contradiction that they have been eminently successful in meeting the wants of society, and have established indisputable claims on the gratitude and admiration of their respective countries and of mankind. Suppose our Calcutta training school as an experiment to have failed, or to have failed temporarily and partially, is it incapable of improvement? Those who are most deeply interested in the cause of education would say, remodel, reform it; only let not such an institution be dissolved with the intention that it shall not be revived.—Friend of India.

SCARCITY OF OFFICERS IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

One of Sir Charles Napier's latest General Orders confirms a regimental order issued by the officer commanding the 60th regiment N.I., directing a young ensign to officiate as adjutant "during such period as Lieutenant and Adjutant D. Stansbury may command the regiment, consequent on Major Drought's departure to Rawul Pindee on court-martial duty." Here is a good illustration of the shifts which it is often necessary to resort to in the Company's army, consequent on an inadequate establishment of European officers.

The command of a regiment quartered at one of the most frontier stations of the army, and in a part of the country, for the tranquillity of which the Government has openly professed its fears by withholding the indulgence of leave of absence, and prohibiting the wives of officers and soldiers from joining their husbands, is necessitated to devolve upon a young subaltern, this too at a time when the greatest tact and resolution on the part of a commandant may at any moment be called into play, consequent on the anticipated reduction of the native soldier's pay. Yet the 60th regiment is not worse officered than most other regiments in the service; it has three captains on civil employment, that is only one more than the regulations of the service allow (by the way, had the regulations on this point been adhered to, the temporary command of the regiment would have devolved on a captain instead of a lieutenant). One other captain is on sick certificate; two captains, therefore, in the ordinary course of things are left to the 60th regiment for regimental duty. But unluckily just at this time one of these two captains has been required to officiate as brigade major of the station (Wuzeerabad); and the sixth and only remaining one has been called off to a distant station to act as member of a court-martial; both every day contingencies and in the ordinary course of the service, but in the present instance leading to the anomalous arrangement which Sir Charles Napier has been forced to concur in, with dissatisfaction we may be certain, and exhibiting in the clearest light the dangerous paucity of regimental officers which is so repeatedly and justly complained of.

It appears to us that much as more regiments are needed, more officers are still more needed; and whenever the augmentation comes (and come it must, sooner or later), we are inclined to hope that it may come in this form. One well-officered regiment is worth, we firmly believe, in most situations, two that are under-officered.—Englishman, Sept. 20.

THE PUNJAB CANALS.

We have, since we then wrote, and as already intimated, received a further instalment of information regarding canal irrigation, which holds out still brighter hopes than we then entertained, especially as they are grounded on specific facts, connected with the profits realized by the Jumna canals. We will endeadour to show what these really are, and then explain, from the data before us, how the proposed Punjab canals might be made to yield as good, if not a better, return, considering that the engineer officers have now twenty-five years' experience before them to guide them in the new undertakings.

The Western Jumna Canal, the one running from near Dadospoor at the foot of the Hills, to Kurnal, and thence diverging into the Hansee and Delhi branches, has, we find it recorded in a document, the authenticity of which is beyond cavil, defrayed, out of its current and direct revenues, not only all annual expenses for repairs and establishment, and interest at the rate of ave per cent. on the capital outlay, but actually yielded a surplus revenue, which will be found, during the present year, to amount to Rs. 2,000,000 or 200,000k sterling. Its return to government, in the shape of direct (not including indirect, such as improved, revenue from lands which, if not irrigated, would have been either unproductive, or less productive, also wood, &c.) is about thirty-eight per cent. on the capital which has, from time to time, been expended in its construction. The returns on the Eastern Jumna Canal (the one running from opposite Dadoopoor, vid Saharunpoor to Seleempoor, opposite Delhi, and commonly called the Doab canal) are not so great, because it has not been so long in operation; but even that, after an existence of about eighteen years, and with charges that may be called heavy, as compared with those incurred on the Delhi Canal, has paid all its expenses, defrayed interest at the rate above quoted, and will, in the course of the present year, according to the expectations of those most intimately concerned, commence the accumulation of a surplus fund, those expectations being founded on the fact, that the work is, at the present moment, yielding somewhere about twenty-four per cent. on the whole of the capital outlay. These are facts, from which we may very safely con-clude, that in some ten or fifteen years from their completion, the Punjab canals will, not only have conferred great benefits on the country, but have formed a very sensible item in the revenue to government. We remarked, in our former article on this highly interesting subject, that the part of the country, which it is intended to bring under the benefits of irrigation, united all the essentials of great productiveness; that the soil was good, the face of the country suited to cultivation, the supply of water, even now, very considerable, and the industrial ten-dencies of the agricultural population such as are rarely to be found even in our own provinces, a most encouraging sketch, the filling up of which, by one who has examined the country even more minutely, shows to be quite correct. The system of agriculture pursued by the people is said to be as careful as it is excellent. Notwithstanding the political troubles of the last eight or ten years, which would, in the common order of things elsewhere, have induced not only carelessness and indifference in the cultivator, but an absolute abandonment of much of his land; we are told, on authority which we cannot doubt, that the style of cultivation has continued to the present time most careful; and resembled, in many instances, where valuable crops are to be raised, the culture of gardens more than of fields, while it was only on the lines of the great military operations of the past season that any thing like abandonment of land had taken place. A people thus industrious, under very adverse circumstances, will naturally be ready to avail themselves of improved plans of irrigation, especially as watering by the use of canals is, as we have already remarked, by no means new to them. We have seen some rough calculations founded, however, we have every reason to believe, on the more careful and elaborate figures prepared, during the war, by an engineer officer for the use of the Governor-General, and to which pointed allusion is made in the memoir of the Punjab campaign, that appeared in the last number of the Picnic Maga-sine. Those calculations shew, as far as they have been communicated to us, that the supply of water from the Ravee would be adequate to the irrigation of 650,000 acres of ground, independent of a great extension of minor advantages of which the people would soon become sensible, and which would extend the indirect benefits to a million and a half more acres. Comsaring the revenues now derived from lands in the provinces, improved by canal irrigation, we are led to believe that the Baree Doab alone, the one between the Ravee and the Beas and Sutlej would yield, on the system coming into full operation, a revenue of Rs., 132,00,000, one hundred and thirty-two lacs of rupees, or about three-fourths of what is now probably derived from the whole of our Trans-Sutlej possessions! In the Rechna Doab, the revenue, calculated on the same principles, would be four lacs less, and in the Jetch Doab, about eighty lacs, making a total of three hundred and forty lacs as the contingent future revenue of these three Doabs alone.—Delhi Gazette.

DEFALCATIONS OF SIR T. TURTON.

The grounds on which the parties who have commenced the present agitation rest their hopes of a successful issue, is the precedent furnished, nearly twenty years ago, in the case of the Madras Registrar, Mr. Ricketts, the defalcation in whose office Sir James Mackintosh prevailed on the Parliament to charge upon the East-India Company. But it is not so certain that the Parliament of 1850 will be disposed to adopt the vicious resolution of the Parliament of 1830. The office in which this defalcation has occurred is not in any measure under the control of the Government of India. It was established by Act of Parliament; the mode in which breaches of trust in it should be guarded against were clearly defined in the Act, and the responsibility of controlling the proceedings of the Registrar, and guarding against the misappropriation of the funds, was confided to a body of men, the Judges of the Supreme Court, whose judicial reputation depends on their being totally independent of the Government of India. It is no reason for the perpetration of an act of injustice, that the same kind of injustice formerly received the sanction of an Act of Parliament. If this mode of argumentation be valid, what abuse is there that may not be revived? The case must be judged on its own merits. The Government of India cannot, by any show of reason or equity, be made responsible for the defalcations of an officer in whose appointment it never had any share, and over whose proceedings it has never been permitted to exercise any control. The revenues of India should not be saddled with such a burden, and it is to be hoped that the Court of Directors will be found at their post, strenu-ously resisting every proposal of the kind. While all local improvements are suspended among us for want of funds, and the smallest outlay is begrudged because it is deemed necessary to adopt a system of the closest economy in the public expenditure, it is most deplorable to contemplate the possible abstraction of ten lakhs of rupees, at one fell swoop, to make good the defalcations in an office with which the Government had no connection. The sum which it is thus proposed to filch from India, through the omnipotence of Parliament, would have been sufficient to cover all the expenses necessary for the improvement of the Post Office for five years. It is assuredly a very hard case that the widow and the orphan should thus be defrauded of the legacies bequeathed to them by conjugal or paternal affection, and the sum ought unquestionably to be made good to them; but the funds of the Indian exchequer are not the legitimate source of repayment. It is for Parliament to make provision for the refund of the sums which have been lost, from its own resources, and not from the revenues of India. - Friend of India.

FINANCES OF INDIA.

From the statements laid before Parliament regarding Indian finances we learn that the annual deficiency exceeds a million sterling, or one crore of rupees. We believe this is rather under than above the truth, and that the deficit is nearer a crore and a half of rupees a year than a crore. The fact now revealed, that, without any addition to our regular military establishments, the revenues of the country are unable to meet the expenditure, and that, in the first year of peace, we are obliged to borrow money to pay our way, imposes on the Government of India, both in this country and in England, a most unpleasant but most imperative duty. As it is evident that our income will not admit of any increase, there is no option left but to prevent the increase of expenditure, if not to reduce existing establishments. This is not only the dictate of prudence but of common honesty.

The Government of India would be unworthy the confidence of England, if it was satisfied with the prospect of adding year by year to the public debt. The entire relief of the army now in the Punjab, and the establishment of new corps beyond the Sutlege, upon the same allowances which are granted to the troops on this side that river, is the first and most obvious source of relief. But this will not diminish the expenditure by much more than one-fourth of the sum required, and it is feared that Government will be driven to the necessity of revising existing establishments. This state of the finances will, it is to be feared, constrain us to postpone, for a long time to come, the hope of seeing those local improvements which have been so long neglected. It is very much to the credit of Government that in the midst of such embarrassing circumstances it should have resolved to continue the construction of the Ganges Canal, and to extend encouragement to the establishment of railways. The reluctance which has been manifested to give this latter project a larger measure of support may possibly be accounted for, not unsatisfactorily, by the emptiness of the exchequer. But for the hundred other local improvements, for which we have been so long sighing, we fear there is at present little hope. If we are not misinformed, some slight additions which were made to the public establishments last year have been disallowed by the Court; and the Governor-General is thus precluded from entertaining any proposal which may involve increased expenditure .-Friend of India.

DOORGAH POOJAH.

The Doorgah Poojah holidays are over, and the weary labourers who have escaped for a while from the ceaseless din and reek of the City of Palaces, or the dreary monotony of a Mofussil life, are returning again to their desks, to work on till the next holidays give them another chance of a fortnight's repose. In the celebration of the metropolitan poojahs, two facts are announced as especially worthy of remark. In the first place, Mr. Law, in pursuance of his duty to preserve the peace of Calcutta, prohibited the carrying of arms at the processions. There can be no cause sufficient to warrant the populace of such a city as Calcutta being permitted to parade the streets with weapons. The practice always creates confusion, and may at times be attended with considerable danger, while it adds nothing to the dignity of the ceremony, and cannot benefit the mob who drown the images. Painted wooden swords, similar to those which are brandished with such vigour, if not grace, at English fairs, would be more in consonance with the scene. In spite of the wrath of our native contemporaries, we think that Mr. Law has acted —not only judiciously, for that he did when his orders were overruled—but legally, and that the Baboos of Calcutta cannot claim a privilege which no police commissioner in London would tolerate for an instant.

In the second place, " The native militia has not been allowed to do duty at the houses of certain opulent native gentlemen.' Not even, we are informed—though the fact is difficult of belief—at the palace of Mutty Lall Seal. We really cannot perceive the hardship. The constabulary force of Calcutta is paid for the express purpose of protecting the persons and property of her Majesty's lieges, and there exists no cause whatever for calling out a military force. It is not required to maintain the peace, and ought not to be employed in swelling the pomp of private individuals, whether Baboos, Rajahs, or Maharajahs. In England it has been always the custom to allow a guard of honour to such crowned heads as might visit the island, and, we believe, on some occasions, to their representatives. But the proudest noble in England would not venture to ask for a body of soldiers to form his cortege. Nor is there any reason whatever for giving such a privilege to any native gentleman. If he is anxious to make a grand show he has only to dress up two or three hundred men in the most gorgeous apparel, and put silver sticks in their hands. This would be far more pompous than a guard of a dozen sepoys. There can be no reason for desiring a military force, except it be that of identifying Government with the procession, or of exhibiting the Baboo or Rajah as a special favo-rite with the ruling authorities; and the troops should be refused on both grounds. - Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE EXPRESS, with the London Mail of August 24th, reached Calcutta on the 8th of October.

DR. DUFF'S DEPARTURE FROM CALCUTTA. - Dr. Duff has started from Calcutta for the north-west, on board the steamer Sir Frederick Currie. He will proceed to Lahore, after inspecting the intermediate stations, for the purpose of an interview with Sir Henry Lawrence, who has, we understand, munificently raised a large fund for the establishment of a school there, to be named after Dr. Duff. The rev. gentleman will embark at Bombay for England, probably in the latter end of March next, in the hope of arriving before the general assembly of the Free Church of Scotland meets in May, 1850.—Hurkaru.

The Refort that the Cawnpore Bank was to be wound up has been contradicted.

KAPILA FROM AFFGHANISTAN. — A letter from Peshawar states:—" A grand kafila, such as was never known from Central Asia, has been stopped just across the Khyber Hills, for the last fortnight, and we are all anxiously looking out for its arrival. The merchants here wrote to the Dost as to the policy of detaining the kafila; and the Ameer, I hear, has written to Saladut Khan, the chief at Lallpoora, on the subject. The result is, that the kafila will be sent off without delay, and therefore we now expect it in hourly."

DURING THE LATE GALE the outward-bound ship Baron Renfrew was driven on shore at Kedgeree, and has not been got off.

H.M.'s 75TH REGT. has arrived at Allahabad. The men are said to be very healthy and in excellent spirits.

THE MAGISTRATES. - The Englishman understands that the police arrangements are so far concluded, that Mr. Wylie is immediately to take his seat as a magistrate on a salary of Co.'s Rs. 1,500 a month; Mr. Hume will remain on the same pay, and the two will be equal in other respects, not senior and junior; Mr. Reddie will, it is said, succeed Mr. Wylie at the Court of Requests.

THE COUNCIL OF EDUCATION, finding that they have exceeded the Government allowance by nearly Rs. 35,000 a year, have determined to reduce the establishments under their control, WOODEN RAILWAYS.—The papers state that the white ants will never attack wood which is subjected to continual and violent vibration, as would be the case with wooden railways. If this statement be correct, and we are not disposed to doubt it, the impediment which would otherwise exist ab origine is removed, and the comparative cost and wear of wooden railways only remain to be considered.

MR. S. G. T. HEATLEY has taken the editorial charge of the Calcutta Star.

The Rev. Thos. Smith.—The members of the Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund at Delhi have passed a unanimous resolution, expressive of their concurrence in the deter-mination of the directors at Calcutta to admit the Rev. Thomas Smith to the benefits of the fund for his wife and family

HINDOO CASTE. - A prize of three hundred rupees has been HINDOO CASTE.—A PRIZE Of three nundred rupees has been offered for the best dissertation on Hindoo caste.

Conversion.—Dwarkanath Dey, a pupil in the General Assembly's Institution, has embraced the Christian religion. A candidate is writing for baptism, who is said to be a Brahmin of high caste, formerly a student of the Hooghly College.

Education.—We understand that considerable changes are meditated in the educational department. The council finds it has exceeded the government allowance by some Rs. 35,000 per annum, and is obliged in consequence to retrench. The details we do not profess to know, but this is certain, that the Normal School is to be abclished and also the inspectorship of schools. It is said that Captain Richardson has tendered his resignation of the principalship of the Hindu College, and that the same has been accepted. If the rumour be correct, we presume Mr. Lodge, who is at present inspector of schools, will be appointed principal in the room of Captain Richardson. What is to be done with the staff of the Normal School is not stated. We are deeply grieved that an idea, like that of the Normal School, fundamentally so correct, has been dropped in consequence of the straits of the department. Were it so carried out in practice as to yield fruit, we imagine the council would sooner have suppressed one or two, or three, local schools, rather than abandon the seminary which was to rear teachers for Bengal, rather than kill the goose which laid golden eggs. Napoleon, at his extremest necessity, hesitated before he prematurely used the students of the Polytechnic School as officers; he had a respect, as he said, for the old fable. We do not suppose Mr. Bethune has less, and therefore must conclude he does not think highly of the present conduct of the Normal School. - Calcutta Star, Sept. 26.

CONSTITUTIONAL TIMID:TY OF SEPOYS .- The Friend of India, with reference to the sudden cowardice of the sepoys in the affair with the Moplas at Maliaperam, and the peculiar circumstances under which it was manifested, observes :- " The numbers of the regular troops were so much greater than the Moplas, and their equipment so infinitely superior, that a mere ordinary panic will be hardly sufficient to account for their ignoble retreat. The sepoy, however individually brave he may be, is subject to all the superstitious prejudices and terrors to which other natives are liable, and even the bonds of discipline are in such cases insufficient to restrain him. Even the Sikhs, the bravest soldiers in India, entertain a dread of the Akalis, far greater than can be accounted for on ordinary grounds. The feeling with regard to the Moplas on the western coast appears to be precisely similar, and the sepoys dared not face men whom they considered to be in possession of powers far superior to their This cannot of course be considered as a plea to extenuate the punishment which a court-martial will of course inflict upon them, but it serves to explain in some degree their other-wise incomprehensible panic. The occurrence of such a circumstance, so immediately after the boasts we have heard, of the superior discipline of the Madras and Bombay sepoys, is a strong proof of the validity of our argument, that the faults of the native soldier are not those of his particular presidency, but of his constitution as an Asiatic."

LORD GOUGH.—At a meeting of the "friends" of Lord Gough, held at Lahore, "for the purpose of taking into consideration the best mode of showing their respect, esteem, and regard for his lordship on his departure from India," it was proposed that some testimonial should be presented to his lordship. Upon this circumstance being notified to Lord Gough by Major-General Sir W. R. Gilbert, in a letter soliciting his acceptance of a testimonial, his lordship returned a reply, declining the compliment, observing, "It would ill become me, and would betray a total want of good sense and good feeling, were I not proud and gratified at the profession of respect, esteem, and regard of my friends of the civil service and of the officers of the army of India; but, my dear Gilbert, I have long flattered myself I possessed those of the latter in no small degree, as exemplified in their uniform, ready, and cheerful fulfilment of every order I issued. I am quite aware that a large portion of my brother officers have been withheld from subscribing by a feeling that, by so doing, they would be infringing a General Order. This was once my own opinion, and I consequently declined subscribing to a testimonial for one whom I esteemed, respected, and honoured, and of whose friendship any man must be proud. I need hardly say, I allude to the Earl of Ellen-borough. Having done so, I cannot with consistency accept a similar compliment to that to which I so declined subscribing my name."

The Abolition of the Export Duties.—The impression seems steadily gaining ground, says the Englishman, that another liberal concession to the commercial interests of India will soon be carried out by Lord Dalhousie. We refer to the abolition of export duties. The tendency of this measure towards the improvement of our trade, superadded as it is to the advantages already realized under his Lordship's Government by the abolition of interportal duties, cannot fail to be a source of much congratulation in this time of unprecedented depression. Considering the fertility and varied products of India, with the moderate cost of labour and land in this part of the country, it has been long thought by those who look only to the surface, that nothing more was required than freedom from war, from vexatious imposts, and from ill-considered commercial laws, to render this the richest and most flourishing country in the world.

OUR VENERABLE AND VENERATED BISHOP has once more donned the scallop shell and sandal shoon for an episcopal pilgrimage over his diocese. His lordship's purposed visitation will comprise the ecclesiastical stations in the upper provinces, for which he started last week by the route of the Bhagiruttee. A steamer will be placed at his disposal. as soon as its services are available, but apprehensions were entertained that if no rise in the river take place, the bishop will be greatly delayed, and inconvenienced in travelling to Berhampore. The officiating archdeacon, the Rev. J. H. Pratt, accompanies his lordship, and the Rev. H. S. Fisher and W. O. Ruspini act as commissaries during the absence of the two dignitaries from Calcutta.—Calcutta Star, Sept. 24.

DISHONESTY OF NATIVE OFFICIALS.—The Delhi Gazette narrates a curious instance of the mode in which native officials sometimes contrive to become millionaires on Rs. 500 or 600 a month. The Raja of Alwar appointed two natives of Delhi, named Amoojan and Mirza Islandyar Beg, dewan (financier) and naib dewan (deputy) of his revenues. His affairs were very fairly conducted during a space of two years, but at the end of that period the dewan contrived to obtain the dismissal of his colleague, and the appointment of his brother, Fuzil, in his place. The two brothers then began a career of spoliation. which has been abruptly terminated by a complete exposure of their practices. The raja upon this demanded a fine of twenty-two lacks from the delinquents, but they finally effected a compromise for four lacks and a half, and subsequently offered eight lacks more to be reinstated in their appointments. The highest income they had ever enjoyed during the twelve years of power amounted only to Rs, 700 and Rs. 250 a month respectively, that is, they had received a total sum of Rs. 1,57040, or one lack and a half. We should have felt little compassion for the raja had this embezzlement been effected from his treasury, as he must have known that Rs. 700 a month was not enough to raise a native above temptation where such large sums were to be made by pillage, but unfortunately it is his subjects who have been ground down by these extortions. It appears that neither the dewan nor his accomplice is to be exposed to any further punishment. - Friend of India, Oct. 4.

AN IMMENSE WEN.—A tumour, weighing ninety pounds, was removed from a patient at the Mesmeric Hospital, Sept. 19, with perfect success, mesmerically and surgically. The operation was over in three minutes, and the man recovered with little difficulty.

THE KING OF DELHI appears not to have abandoned his hope of inducing the British Government to recognize his eighth or ninth son, Meerza Juwan Bukht, as his successor, to the exclusion of the just claims of Meerza Fukr-ood-deen, his eldest surviving son, and, by way of furthering his views, has addressed a letter to her Majesty the Queen, of which the following is a free translation, and which is a curiosity in its way: -" Having in view the friendship that existed between the illustrious House of Ameer Tymoor, and particularly between his late Majesty Jalalodeen Ukbur Shah, and the British nation, which, under favour of providence, still continues in the same thriving position of unanimity as of old, it was my intention to send my son, Meerza Juwan Bukt Buhadur, to you, but, owing to his tender age, I have not done so, being also unable to bear his absence for a moment, and notwithstanding his tender age, the marks of eminence are conspicuous on his forehead. He is placed under proper tuition. He is blessed with discernment between right and wrong, and a conciliatory disposition; owing to these, he is possessed of a greater share of my affection and consequent preferment in life, while the brotherly affection subsisting between your majesty and me gives him a superior claim on your majesty more than that of a mothers love, to advance. I have therefore sent a drawing of my son Meerza Juwan Bukht's hand to you, to solicit your majesty's patronage in his behalf, and by the influence of your power, disappoint enemies and gladden the hearts of friends and well-wishers, so that, in my present advanced age, I may be thoroughly satisfied of the safety of my son from the fangs of ambitious and crafty men. I hope your majesty will be graciously pleased to countenance and approve this appeal and favour me with information accordingly. Sept. 22. - This attempt at opening a correspondence direct with his "royal sister," as he presumes to style her majesty, has, however, not been approved of by the lieutenant-governor, and the document has been returned to the king with an urzee, or petition (the style of address still in use), from his honour's agent, not, it appears, to the king direct, but to his servants, of which. the following is as correct a translation as it is possible to give of such superlative nonsense: -"To the servants of his majesty, the shadow of God, the king, divine successor, mighty monarch of the world, master of the universe, world-enslaver, whose possessions shall endure to all eternity. This day a letter has been received from the office of the secretary to the lieutenant-governor (Nuwab) of Agra, regarding the despatch of the nama to the great queen of England. Previous to this, on the 20th of March, 1849, the Governor-General, Bahadoor, had already. intimated that such correspondence was not usual, and had never before been entered on. Therefore, until the sanction of the ministers of the queen has been received, the present nama cannot be forwarded, in the opinion of the lieutenant-governor."-Delhi

H.M.'s 87th REGIMENT.—The wing of H.M.'s 87th regiment (400 men), which left Chinsurah for Berhampore on the 18th ult., arrived at its destination on the 28th, having lost thirteen men en route. We might mention some of the incidents of the voyage to Berhampore, which have been related to us, in illustration of the paternal care with which European soldiers are treated by the Government, and the wise economy shown with respect to lives, each of which is worth, in mere money, 1001. But these will be easily imagined by any one at all acquainted with this country, and with the habits of soldiers fresh from We may allude, however, to an occurrence by England. which the town of Hooghly was enlivened on the day that the fleet of dinghies set sail. The first death occurred before the gallant squadron had proceeded a couple of miles. Of this the public were made aware by witnessing an unseemly altercation which took place close to the Cutcherries and the Sudder Ghaut, at Hooghly, between a British officer and the Bengalee sircar above mentioned. "Baboo, dig grave, quick"—" My Lord, how I dig? Mootea ne hai, hum kya karega!"—" You not dig grave, Baboo? You one —," but here we will allow the dialogue to be interrupted, as the epithets which followed would not look well in print. Suffice it to say that the body would have been speedily buried in front of the public buildings and European dwellings, had not chance brought to the spot a gen-tleman residing in the neighbourhood, through whose kind offices a resting-place for the deceased was at last procured at the adjacent church of Bandel. Whether similar edifying scenes took place on the occasion of the deaths which subsequently occurred at the rate of more than one per diem, we are not in a position to declare. But we believe that enough will be brought to the notice of Government to absolve us from the necessity of making further mention of facts, which are a scandal to our name, and to our boasted civilization.— Hurkaru, Oct. 6.

SIR LAWRENCE PEEL arrived at Delhi on the 20th September. The chief justice proceeds thence through Meerut to Mussoorie. ADEN A FREE PORT.—A draft of a prepared Act has been published in the Calcutta Gazette, by which it will be enacted that, "Whereas the trade between the western coast of India and the Red Sea and places thereunto adjacent will be improved by encouraging the resort of vessels of all nations to the port of Aden in Arabia;" the port and settlement is a free port and settlement, and no duty of customs will be payable on any ship or other vessel, or on any goods lawfully carried by sea or land to or from the said port and settlement.

GOVERNMENT-GENERAL ORDER.

ALLOWANCES

Head Quarters, Simla, Sept. 19, 1849.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct, that the general orders quoted in the margin,* by which it is provided, that "commanding officers present with their corps, but incapable, from sickness, of conducting the duties of command, will, in the event of such sickness being prolonged beyond the period of one month, be directed to deliver over charge of the regiment to the next senior officer present, to whom the command allowance will be passed," shall be extended to officers commanding companies, who, in like manner, are to be directed to the officer next entitled to a company, and who will likewise be entitled to the allowances going with such a charge.

MARKETS.

CALCUTTA, Oct. 9.—Since last report of 20th Sept. the chief part of the time has been occupied by the interval of the Doorga Pooja holidays, and business was only resumed on the 3rd Oct. During this period a large number of vessels arrived, many of which brought considerable parcels of Manchester goods; and therefore, as might be expected, more time has so far been taken up by the Bazar Merchants in making inquiries, and in examining new musters than in actual purchases. Sales however to a fair extent have been Merchants in making inquiries, and in canning the street have been effected, and prices show no great reduction from the rates current previous to the holidays. Mule Twist is perhaps a shade lower. Glasgow fabrics, upon the whole, are doing comparatively well. Metals are all lower in value. Sales of Sheathing Copper, however, have been more extensive. Stocks of Iron are larger, while Spelter

MADRAS.

THE MADRAS RAILWAY.

Public discontent has been stirred to its inmost depths by the announcement of the refusal of the Board of Control to sanction the guarantee of 5 per cent. recommended by the Court of Directors. Without this, the formation of a Company is utterly hopeless, and the Board's refusal may therefore be taken as the virtual abandonment of the Madras Railway. Could Sir John Cam Hob-house and his colleagues be placed in the focus of the ejaculatory prayers which this disappointment evoked, they would find few places more damaging to either their sense of comfort or respect. Bad wishes in all their varied forms have been heaped upon them, and with the greater cordiality, inasmuch as no solid reason for this exercise of their obstructive prerogative can be found in any of the circumstances attending the line itself that has been chosen, or its prospects. Perhaps it would be impossible in this country to select a line of road more free from serious natural obstacles, or more likely to yield a profitable return; hence, to quote the indignant language of a local journal, "It is impossible to find any extenuation for Sir John Cam Hobhouse and his colleagues. Their placing themselves as a barrier in the pathway of improvement, is an insult offered to the British public, who are urging the Court of Directors to advance therein, and an injury done to the people of this Presidency, whose welfare the railroad would greatly promote. By their arbitrary and absurd decision, they have knocked our prospects on the head, perhaps for years to come, because capitalists at home will naturally infer from it that there must exist some serious objections to the scheme." but fair, however, to the well-abused minister, to quote the following semi-defensive paragraph from the Madras Athenaum :-" It is a great pity that the good folks of Madras have not been favoured with an outline of the precise reasons, which induced, as it is said, the President of the Board of Control to knock our embryo railway project on the head so cruelly. We do not say this on account of any supposed present damage inflicted by Sir John Hobhouse on the scheme in question, since it is more than likely, that its promoters are grateful to him for the opportunity of allowing it to slumber for a year or two in the calm obscurity, which is thought so favourable to the ultimate prosperity of under-takings set on foot in this Presidency. We should like to have the information for the sake of the supposed delinquent, who, as an unpopular member of an unpopular ministry, has at this moment so little of good reputation to spare, that we should be sorry to see that little made still less, through the aid of erroneous statements. Our present impression is decidedly, that the order to stop has not originated in his department as a mere exercise of capricious interference with railway prospects in Southern India. We are convinced, either that the incipient company have failed in some material point to satisfy the requirements of Government, or that the President of the Board of Control has reason to believe that the sanction of the Court of Directors would at present give no valid strength to the project. To suppose that he would interpose needless obstacles in the way of carrying out a line of railway, which could be made for less money, and which is likely to prove more remunerative than either of the schemes set afloat in the other Presidencies, is to do violence io the general impression of his sagacity and fitness for office. It is well known that Mr. Bourne, who at one time entertained sanguine hopes as to the utility of iron roads in India, is now actively engaged in attempts to induce the Home Government to adopt his system of improved canal navigation, which he tells the public, in effect, may be tried with advantage by way of prior experiment to the general introduction of railways. It is very probable, then, that the Court are willing to countenance his plans, and if so we may take it for granted, that no effectual help will be given to the more gigantic enterprises, at least for a season."

What steps intending shareholders may resolve on taking, or whether they will take any at all, as the intelligence of this unexpected difficulty in their way has only just arrived, we are unable to say; from our knowledge of the apathetic temperament of the benighted, we conjecture passive endurance will be the order of the day.—Alhenæum, Oct. 13.

THE ROADS OF THE PRESIDENCY.

You commence about half-way to Poonamallee to have the particles which compose your body re-arranged in accordance with the atomic theory, and the process is continued with almost unabated force all the rest of the journey. The evenness of neglect exhibited is truly wonderful. There are some portions of the road, such for example as about half-a-dozen miles before reaching Streepermatoor, and a still longer stretch in the Vellore district, which, having had originally a sound constitution, still continue to afford tolerable facilities for locomotion. But the respite given by them is not to be pleaded as a set-off to the chronic indifference to human comfort, and the needs of commerce, displayed throughout a range extending frem Madras to Vaniambaudy, a distance of 130 miles. And shorts 4 the term of our experience has been, it was long enough for the purpose of acquiring information, and a great deal too extensive for our notions of enjoyment. We managed to go over nearly every mile of the ground by daylight, and having had rain on the way up, and dry weather on the journey home, were enabled to test the difference between falling into a slough every other moment, and sinking up to the axles in a series of sandpits. We have heard of the corduroy roads of America, and have seen the pathways on the Continent, the byeways of England, and the bullock tracks of India, and most solemnly aver, that taking into account the extent of country through which it passes, the grand trunk highway down which the commerce of Mysore is poured into the Carnatic is far worse than any of them. Some idea may be formed of its condition, so far as the interests of trade are concerned, from the fact that at Rajah's Choultry, the bullock bandies choose to make a detour far away to the south, rather than keep on the main highway; and with reference to the personal sufferings of travellers, it is well known that Col. Alexander declared on repeated occasions previous to his departure for Europe in the last steamer, that the agony endured from the state of the roads on his route from Bangalore materially aggravated the violence of his disorder. When it is recollected that delicate females and sick persons of all ages are almost daily carried along this road, in the hope of benefitting by a change of climate, and that in many cases their stay in Madras is protracted till the frame be-comes almost too weak to bear the fatigues of ordinary travel, it becomes easy to imagine how many similar cases of needless torture must occur. - Athenæum, Aug. 25.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE NIZAM. -- A Madras paper gives the following translation of the Persian document recently presented to the Nizam by General Frazer, on behalf of the Supreme Government. Governor-General regrets that the Nizam again changes his minister, and dismisses from office, without any cause, a high nobleman, whom he had but a short time before himself appointed. The Government will labour under disadvantage, if these changes continue to occur, in regard to officers appointed to conduct the affairs of Government. If, therefore, the Nizam desires a good Government, he should place confidence in the ministers, and allow their projects to be carried to an end, and to acquire permanency. It requires time and energy to correct the evils which are known to his Government. The English Government has a right to make this representation because it has apprehension that from such causes the debt to the Company's Government, which was before brought to his highness's notice, will not speedily be paid. The Governor-General was gratified to hear that his highness considers the payment of the debt an easy matter, and disapproved of his minister's intention to pay it by an annual sum of five lacs. The Governor-General had before said, that he also did not approve of it. But no means is referred to for paying the debt, nor any time fixed. The Governor-General is willing to receive payment on the 31st December, 1850, and advises the Nizam to give his immediate attention to obviate his embarrass-If the debt be not paid at the time specified, the Governor-General will take such measures as may be conducive to the interests of his Government. The Governor-General has also directed me to write a note to Shums-ool-Omra, to express his satisfaction, that notwithstanding the difficulties and obstacles placed in the way of his administration, he should have conducted the affairs with so much ability and judgment, and to add that he had the Governor-General's best wishes for his prosperity and welfare.—Hyderabad, 15th September, 1849."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Fort St. George, Sept. 11, 1849.—The privilege enjoyed by General Officers Commanding Divisions of the Army, of being absent on leave, during the prescribed periods, and within the limits of this Presidency, without forfeiting any portion of their Staff Salaries, being, under the orders of the Honourable the Court of Directors, conditional upon no extra expense being in consequence of such absence entailed upon the State, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council is pleased to direct the substitution of the following clauses, for the first clause of para. 3, "Absence," section 9th, page 133, of the Code of Pay and Audit Regulations:—

"General Officers Commanding Divisions, when absent on leave, from their commands, but within the limits of this Presidency, during the prescribed periods (vide section 1st), do not forfeit any portion of their Staff Salaries, provided that no additional expense to the State is occasioned by their absence; otherwise a deduction equal to the extent of such additional charge is to be made therefrom. The Brigadier, or next Scnior Officer in the Division, on whom the temporary command may devolve during the absence of a General Officer, exempt from forfeiture of allowances under the preceding clause, is not entitled to any additional allowance beyond that for his permanent command, which he does not relinquish.

AFFRAY WITH THE MOPLAUS.

Fort St. George, Oct. 2, 1849.—No. 182 of 1849. The Right Honourable the Governor in Council has received with much satisfaction a despatch transmitted by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, from Major Dennis, H.M.'s 94th regiment, reporting the entire destruction of a band of Moplah fanatics in the neighbourhood of Calicut.

2. The Governor in Council entirely concurs in the approbation which has been expressed by his Excellency of the gallant conduct of Major Dennis and the other officers and men employed, both of H.M.'s 94th regiment and of the 39th regiment Native Infantry; and he cannot better convey to the detachment of H.M.'s 94th regiment especially the sense which is entertained by the Government of their services, than by publishing in G. O. the following letter from H. V. Conolly, Esq., the magistrate of Malabar.

No. 22-1849.

From H. V. Conolly, Esq., Magistrate of Malabar, to Sir H. C. Montgomery, Bart., Secretary to Government, Fort St. George. Sir,—I consider it my duty to bring to the special notice of Government the excellent behaviour of the detachment of H.M.'s 94th regiment, lately employed at my requisition in putting down a fanatical outbreak in the interior of Malabar.

Two companies of the 94th started from Cannanore on the afternoon of the 30th ultimo, and reached Tellicherry, 14 miles distant, that evening. The next evening they reached Budaghery, 15 miles further. Here they were met by an emergent letter from me, requesting that some of the freshest men should be pushed on with all speed. Major Dennis, in command of the detachment, made an immediate march of 22 miles with the grenadier company, and arrived at Ellatore in the afternoon in a perfect storm of rain. There was no time for delay, and after drinking a little coffee or arrack, the men were put into boats, wet as they were, under the idea that they would arrive at Ariacode, 12 miles from Munjairy, where their services were required the next morning. But the weather got worse and worse, and so powerful was the torrent of water that rushed down the river, that the large boats on which the soldiers were embarked were actually unable to stem it. At 12 o'clock on Sunday night, the body of the men whom we had expected to arrive on the Sunday morning, were found to be many miles down the river, and we were only able to get them up in detached bodies by the repeated trips of the small snake-boats, in which the gentlemen of the party had made their passage, and by marching them over the last mile or two by land, for more than 30 hours; then the men had to remain cramped in their boats, in wet clothes (the deluge of rain made the slight covering over them of little service), and without regular food. The only murmur that was heard was at the idea of being too late for the service that was known to be before them, and the last body of 20 men, who only came into camp on Monday at 9 o'clock A.M., were just as ready as any of their comrades to start for a 12 miles' march at ½ past 9. Very many of the soldiers had lacerated feet from the journeys already made-some so much so, that it seemed impossible they could march—but they either cut their boots into all sorts of shapes to ease their hurts, or walked without covering altogether.

They arrived at Munjairy that day; and, so far as themselves were concerned, were most ready for an immediate attack on the insurgents,—which, however, was postponed by Major Dennis for sound reasons, as mentioned in my letter of the 3rd inst. The next morning they marched to the post evacuated in the night by the fanatic insurgents, from which they had only just returned when the intelligence was brought that the fanatics were destroying a temple 12 miles off. But little time was required for them to be ready and in pursuit, and by six o'clock in the evening they had come up with the fanatics, beaten them, and were in their quarters, three miles in advance, without a single straggler. The agony of one man's feet was so great that he was about to get into a doolie, when, on hearing that the fanatics were really at hand and about to fight, he ran up and joined his comrades as if nothing was the matter with him.

Of the conduct of the men and their officers during the encounter it is not my part to speak; I can merely say that it was evidently only owing to their consummate coolness that so few casalties occurred on our side. The steadiness of the Europeans was the admiration of all the spectators, and I cannot but hope that its moral effect will be considerable. The fanatic Moplah thinks little of losing his life if he can do damage at the same time to his opponent; but the glory of his exploit is considerably dimmed if he is shot or bayoneted down like a mad dog before he can do much mischief. Be this as it may, and to return to my more peculiar task of description, I would go on to say that the conduct of the men, subsequent to this affair, has been in the highest desgree satisfactory.

There was not a single case of drunkenness—not one of insubordination or excess of the slightest nature. From first to last the detachment has done its duty in a manner to warrant a warm encomium from Government, who, I am confident, will duly appreciate the value of the services they have performed. It is to their spirit and energy that we are indebted for the putting down an outbreak which, if not put down, would have become every day more formidable. Had Major Dennis merely thought of the harassed condition of his men, and not marched them so as to crush the fanatics the very night he did, the consequence to the peace of the country would have been deplorable.

I have already mentioned that it has been ascertained that the fanatics intended to heave the Augadipooram pagoda during the night, and to make a dash at the next most famous pagoda in the country. This course (of seizing and burning Hindoo temples) they would no doubt have prosecuted in all directions; and with no force to oppose or check them, their ravages, until they were in some way or other hunted down, would have been most destructive.

From the many unhappy consequences which would have attended such a state of things we have been freed, by the prompt and energetic measures pursued by Major Dennis and his most active and intelligent aid, Lieutenant Vaughan.

I have the honour to be, &c. &c.,

(Signed) H. V. CONOLLY, Magistrate.

COURTS MARTIAL.

ENS. WILLIAM OWEN TUDOR, 31ST N.I.

Head Quarters, Bangalore, Sept. 11, 1849.—At a general court martial held at Bangalore, Sept. 1, 1849, W. O. Tudor, Ens. 31st reg. or Trichinopoly L.I., was arraigned on the following charges:—

First.—For unofficerlike conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Bangalore, on August 11, 1849, solicited, incited, and endeavoured to persuade Lieut. H. Le F. Hughes, of the 31st reg. or Trichinopoly L.I., to convey a challenge to fight a duel, from him, Ens. W. O. Tudor, to his superior officer, Major Gilbert James Richardson, of the said regiment.

Second.—For unofficerlike conduct, subversive of military discipline, in having at Bangalore, on August 12, 1849, proceeded to the quarters of Major G. J. Richardson, of the 31st reg. Trichinopoly L.I., and then and there made use of unwarrantable and provoking language to the said Major G. J. Richardson, his superior officer, tending to excite him to fight a duel, by stating that if he, Ens. W. O. Tudor, did not receive an apology from the said Major G. J. Richardson, he would report him to the colonel (meaning Lieut.-Col. James Davidson, commanding the same regiment), and if he did not receive satisfaction, he would post the said Major G. J. Richardson as a coward to all the regiments in the cantonment.

Revised Finding.—Guilty of the first charge.

Not guilty of the second charge, and the court acquits him of the same.

Revised Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded.

Bangalore, September 7, 1849.

As the court has adhered to its original finding on the second charge, and to its sentence, I confirm the same, but cannot approve either the one or the other.

(Signed) G. H. F. Berkelley, Lieut.-Gen., C.-in-C. Head Quarters, Bangalore, September 10, 1849.

Remarks.—The offence of which the prisoner has been found guilty is tantamount to sending a challenge to his superior officer, and certainly merits a severer punishment than a reprimand, which I could have ordered myself without reference to any court-martial, and which is only suitable when the offence is trivial, or when the offender, from his rank, services, and character, is likely to attach the utmost importance to the disapproba-tion of superior authority.

On the other hand, I am totally at a loss to know upon what grounds the court can have acquitted the prisoner on the second charge. That provoking and unwarrantable language was made use of by him to Major Richardson, is, I consider, proved by the sworn testimony of Captain Brett, to whom the prisoner, although much excited, twice repeated the words he had made use of to Major Richardson, almost word for word those quoted in the charge; and that he did make use of them is not even denied by the prisoner, and the testimony of the officers, who heard only part of the language used by him to the major, strongly corroborates his own acknowledgment. I leave the court to get over the inconsistency of their finding with these facts as they best can.

Ensign Tudor, 31st Light Infantry,

You have been found guilty of soliciting another officer to convey a challenge from you to your superior officer, the major of your regiment, and that this challenge was not actually delivered, was in no way attributable to you. Your offence, therefore, was in every respect equal in magnitude to that for which military law renders you liable to be cashiered; and in your instance it was aggravated by your relative position to the officer, against whom you contemplated the offence, and by the want of any reasonable provocation on his part. You must not be led into the error of believing your offence a light one from the lenient sentence awarded by the court which has tried you, for the tendency of your conduct is destructive of military discipline and subordination; and you are now warned, that a repetition of this, or any other unmilitary conduct, will assuredly subject you to appearing again before a court-martial, that may not deal so leniently with you as the present one. I now strongly advise you to cultivate more respect and subordination towards your military superiors, and to restrain your duelling propensities, which, if persisted in, will be your ruin.

On this being read to you by your commanding officer, you will be released from arrest, and will return to your duty.

(Signed) G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lt.-Gen., C.-in-C. Ensign W. O. Tudor to be released from arrest, and return to his duty.

LIEUT. EDWARD BAYLY, 1st. MAD. FUS.

Head Quarters, Bangalore, September 11, 1849.—At a general court martial held at Bellary, on August 28, 1849, E. Bayly, Lieut. of the 1st Mad. Fus., was arraigned on the following charges.

First.—For having at Bellary, on August 6, 1849, failed to appear at the place of parade of the 1st Mad. Fus., appointed by his commanding officer, Lieut.-Col. Thomas Assheton Duke, commanding the 1st. Mad. Fus.

Second.—For unofficerlike conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Bellary, between 12 and 1 o'clock on the afternoon of the day specified in the first charge, been in a state of intoxication.

Finding .- Not guilty, and the court acquit him thereof.

Remarks by the Court.—The court has found the prisoner not guilty of the first charge, because although he did fail to appear at parade on the day stated in the charge, he was at the time suffering from disease, and reported himself accordingly to the medical officer of the regiment who had previously attended him.

Bellary, September 3, 1849. Confirmed.

G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lieut.Gen. C .- in-C. (Signed) Head Quarters, Bangalore, September 10, 1849. Lieut. E. Bayly to be released from arrest and return to his duty. LIEUT. JOHN CHRISTIE, 1ST MAD. FUS.

Head Quarters, Bangalore, Sept. 26, 1849 .- At a general court martial held at Bellary, on September 15, 1849, J. Christie, Lieut. 1st. Mad. Fus., was arraigned on the following charges, viz. :leffrit.—For having at Bellary, on August 6, 1849, failed to appear at the place of parade of the 1st Mad. Fus., appointed by his commanding officer, Lieut.-Col. Thomas Assheton Duke, commanding the same regiment.

Second.—For conduct highly unbecoming the character of an officer and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Bellary, by excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquor, incapacitated himself for the performance of his duty on August 6 and 7, 1849.

Finding .- Not guilty of the first charge, the court attaching no criminality to the fact of the prisoner's having been absent from parade on that morning. Not guilty of the second charge, and the court fully acquirs him thereof.

Bellary, September 19, 1849. Confirmed.

(Signed) G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lieut.-Gen., C .- in-C. Lieut. J. Christie to be released from arrest and to return to his duty.

COLD WATER TREATMENT OF THE CHOLERA.

WE noticed in our last summary the introduction by Dr. Mosgrove, of the Bombay Medical Service, of the free use of cold water internally, as a cure for cholera. In the early part of the month this gentleman sent in a report to the Medical Board, descriptive of the cholera cases treated by him since the first public and authorized trial of his "cold-water cure." number of cases which he had treated was twenty-two, of which the majority were of a very serious description, the stage of col-lapse having supervened. He cured twenty of the patients, and two died. Both the deaths, however, appear to have occurred from causes not directly owing to the disease. In consequence of this apparently striking success in the treatment of cholera, it was determined to establish a Cholera Hospital, and a committee was accordingly appointed, consisting of J. Warden, Esq., C.S.; E. F. Danvers, Esq., Junior Magistrate of Police; Major M. F. Willoughby, C.B.; Captain Baynes, Police Superintendent; and Dr. Keith; for the purpose of collecting and applying funds and superintending the general arrangements. Expensive premises would no doubt have had to be engaged for the new institution, but at this stage of the proceedings, a spirited native gentleman, Meerza Ali Mahomed Khan, Esq., ame forward and placed at Dr. Musgrove's disposal, rent free, two houses in Oomercarry, one for the reception of sick, and the other as a residence for himself. No time was lost in commencing operations; and during the first week, out of seventeen asses treated, fifteen were, by the new method of treatment, restored to health. Of the cases in which cures were effected, nine were very bad ones indeed. The two patients who died were brought to the hospital in the last stage of the disease, and it would have been little short of a miracle had any treatment succaeded in saving them. A subscription paper is now in circulation with the view of raising funds to defray the expenses of the hospital. The Governor and the Lord Bishop head the list with contributions of Rs. 50 each; Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy and his family have subscribed Rs. 1,500; Juggonath Sunkersett and Bommanjee Hormusjee, Esquires, Rs. 100 each; Mahomed Ali Rogay, Esq. Rs. 200, &c. &c. A desire has been expressed by certain leading members of the native community, to keep up the Cholera Hospital as a permanent institution—or rather, to have a medical officer appointed, whose duty it should be to travel about the presidency with his assistants, and afford relief at every place where the malady might chance to be prevalent.—Telegraph, Oct. 17.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE EXPRESS, with the London Mail of Sept. 7th, reached Bombay on the 9th October.

THE SUPREME COURT OF BOMBAY has decided that a husband is not liable for debts contracted by his wife without his consent, either expressed or implied.

THE SLAVE-TRADE.—The H. C. S. Elphinstone is being fitted out for the Persian Gulph and the African Coast, and instructions have been furnished to her to keep a sharp look out for slavers, as the traffic in human flesh has been increasing a good deal of late in those quarters.—Telegraph.

A HEROINE.—An examination is at present in progress at Tannah, before J. S. Law and F. Lloyd, Esqrs. H.M.'s Justices of the Peace, in regard to a very lamentable affair which has recently happened at Trombay, where the lady of Dr. Fogerty (a private practitioner of Bombay) appears to have fired at and wounded a carcoon and two peons of the Collector's Establishment, who had been sent to look at a field, the proprietary right in which was in dispute between the Doctor and Government. The defence of the lady is being conducted by Mr. P. J. Mackenna.—Ibid.

THE FEVER OF SURKUR.—At a meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Bombay on the 6th of October, an interesting communication on the climate and fever of Sukkur, by N. Hefferman, M.B., H.M.'s 60th Rifles, was read. The paper commenced by a short topographical description of the cantonment of Sukkur, and was accompanied by meteorological tables for the months of April, May, June, and July. A description was afterwards given of the fever from which H.M.'s 17th regiment suffered on its return from Bhawnepore in March 1846. It appeared that the regiment had been marching for three months of the cold weather, but the men were quite healthy on reaching Sukkur on the 31st March; between that date and the beginning of August, when the regiment was moved to Kurrachee, there were 591 admissions from fever; and of this number 36 cases terminated fatally. The most fatal form of this fever was characterised by the great rapidity with which its progress was attended—twelve patients having died within nine hours after admission, and in nine of these case death took place within five hours. In no instance could the attack be traced to exposure to the sun's rays, the men being invariably kept under cover during the day, and, what is very remarkable, it spared no class of individuals, the healthiest men being often seized, whilst there were two or three instances of weakly persons in hospital recovering from other diseases, who fell under its influence. After a full and clear account of the symptoms and treatment, Dr. Hefferman concluded his paper with some interesting remarks upon the pathology of this singular disease.

THE CARNAC TESTIMONIAL.—It may be satisfactory to the subscribers to the Carnac Testimonial to know that Curseties Jamsetjee, Esq. the secretary, has, with the sanction of the committee, paid into the Government Treasury the balance of the funds belonging to that account, the interest whereon at five per cent. Government has agreed to pay periodically to the Treasurers of the District Benevolent Society of this place, as the "Carnac Donation."

The balance of these funds amounted to Rs.5,794 3 09 To which Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, with his wonted liberality, added the sum

in order to make up the amount to Rs.6,000 0 00

The original purposes of the subscription having been all accomplished, there seemed no more suitable mode of disposing of the balance of these funds than its appropriation as above described, which has the effect of associating the name of the late Sir James Carnac with one of our most extensively useful charitable institutions.—Bombay Times.

RE-LOCATION OF THE INDIAN ARMY. - A proposition is at present under the consideration of the Supreme Government for the re-location of the armies throughout India. The subjugation of Gwalior, and conquest of Scinde and the Punjab, have within five years' time altered nearly the whole of our military necessities. Steam navigation has, along the line of coast and in countries directly opening from the sea, provided us with facilities of transport which, where they can be made available, are tantamount to an augmentation of our army; and a force of any magnitude can be sent from the presidency to Aden, Kurrachee, or along the Malabar coast to the extremity of the Peninsula, in less time than it would take to reach Poons with the ordinary supply of followers and baggage. We long since announced that it was the purpose of Government to push up further troops from the Madras army into the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, in order to enable the Bengal troops to move northward. It is now in contemplation to commit the charge of the whole of Malabar to the Bombay army, thus relieving the Madras troops from Cannanore, Mangalore, Cochin, Calicut, &c. These stations can be reinforced, relieved, or furnished with men or supplies of any sort, with the utmost economy and expedition, and can at all times communicate with head-quarters in a few days' time. - Bombay Times, Sept. 26.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE MAGISTRATES. - During the trial of a criminal case yesterday, the Chief Justice inquired if the committing magistrate was present in court. Being a material witness for the prosecution, he was sent for. On his entering the witness-box, the Chief Justice said, with indignation, that he was very sorry to find that the hints he had repeatedly thrown out, and the remarks that he had frequently made, regarding the absence of magistrates, were disregarded; that it was the duty of the committing magistrates to be present in court during the trial of criminal cases, when it might be necessary for the judge to consult those officers for the ends of justice; that he did not require that all the magistrates should attend, but that at least one of them ought to be present. Mr. Danvers said he could not leave the Mazagon police office, because, according to the regulations of Government, the office should be kept open every day. The Chief Justice said he did not care for the regulations of Government; that he sat on the Bench to administer justice according to English law; that, as head of the criminal department in Bombay, he considered it his duty to require the attendance of the magistrate in court; that Government ought to have sent another magistrate to supply his place; that as he (Mr. D.) was the committing magistrate in most of the cases sent up for trial, his presence was absolutely necessary; and that if his (the Chief Justice's) orders were treated with contempt by the magistrates, he would do what former judges had done to enforce their attendance, and fine them Rs. 1,000. His lordship also stated that it was the duty of the superintendent of police to be present in Court.—Bombay Times, Oct. 3.

The IMAUM OF MUSCAT.—We are sorry to hear that the Imaum of Muscat has been found to have been lately in some way connected with slave-dealing, having either actually countenanced the traffic in human beings, or not used his best endea-yours for its suppression, as he had bound himself by treaty to do. For this breach of faith, it is said, the Bombay Government have administered a severe rebuke to the Imaum, recommending him to be more careful in future in the observance of the last treaty concluded with him on this subject. - Ibid., Sept. 12.

MR. T. R. RICHMOND, the oldest, and long considered one of the most upright and honourable-minded, European merchants in Bombay, commenced business in 1823 as a member of the highly-respected firm of Dirom, Carter, and Co. The copartnery having, in 1843, been dissolved through efflux of time, resolved itself into the new firms of Dirom, Hunter, and Co., and Richmond and Co. Mr. Richmond has since been a director in the Oriental Bank, in the Steam Navigation Company, in the Grant Buildings and Colaba Land Companies, and took a large and influential share in the management of every joint-Stock company with which he was concerned. Here, indeed, was the mischief: the share he took in these things distracted his attention from his own affairs, and withdrew from them the time they demanded. In 1846 he went home, on deputation, to arrange some misunderstandings which had crept in amongst the shareholders of the Oriental Bank in reference to the powers of the London and Bombay boards respectively, and was admitted on all hands to have managed matters with the utmost success and ability. Up to the time of his failure his character as a merchant was considered irreproachable, and he was generally spoken of in the community as "Honest Tom Richmond;" a man whose love of speculation was suspected, but whose integrity was deemed unimpeachable. Deeply involved in many rash and ill-considered speculations, distracted by the diversity of the departments into which his business had divided itself, and tempted by the large amount of money entrusted to him, he unhappily made use of securities intrusted to him for widely different purposes; and, disappointed in his expectations of returns, appeared in the Gazette as an insolvent, as he now appears as a fraudulent intromitter with other men's means.—Bombay Times.

TRAM-WAY FOR GOOZERAT.—The prospect of a railway at Bombay has excited such a sensation amongst the natives, that the chance of obtaining improved means of communication to meet the wants of the country,-always allowed as important, but too often regarded as visionary,—has aroused them to reflection and exertion. Three hundred miles to the north of Bombay, Tankaria Bunder affords the shipping port for Goozerat. The large city of Buroda, the capital of the dominions of H. H. the Guicowar, communicates with this by a wretched road forty miles in length. The country is flat, and a large tract of it so low that during the rainy season, and for many weeks thereafter, all communication with the coast is cut off. Very tolerable an communication with the coast is cut off. Very tolerable cart-roads, now under process of repair and improvement, stretch into the interior as far as Malwa. The exports from Goozerat to Bombay were valued in 1816-47 at a quarter of a willion steeling the interior as far as Malwa. million sterling, the imports at a million and three-quarters: both seem capable of almost indefinite increase. The loss of interest alone occasioned by the delay of bringing the goods to market must be enormous—more, it is believed, than would, in five years time, construct the expected road. It is proposed, that over this most promising line a tram-road or bar rail shall be constructed; the expense of this is calculated at no more than 1,200% a mile, or less than 55,000% for the whole line, including all contingencies. For twenty years to come the Baroda and Bombay line will not have extended so far into the interior as to become rivals of each other : when they do so, it will in all likelihood be found that both will gain by the rivalry .- Bombay Times.

MARKETS.

BOMBAY, Oct. 17 .- A moderate business in grey fabrics has taken place during the fortnight, but without any improvement in prices; after the termination of the Dewallee holidays, however, a brisk trade may be expected to spring up. The supplies to hand since last report have been very moderate:—For grey domestics a better inquiry than formerly now exists, 8,457 pieces have been disposed of at prices varying from Rs. 4 7-16ths to Rs. 12 3-8ths per piece. The same remark applies to grey longcloths, of which 2,450 pieces have been sold at from Rs. 5 3-16ths to Rs. 5 15-16ths per piece. Of grey madapollams, 32,800 pieces (12,700 of which were coarse makes) have been sold at from Rs. 2 1-16th to Rs. 4: 3½ annas per piece,—showing a slight decline on former rates. Grey shirtings per piece,—snowing a siight decline on former rates. Grey shirtings are scarce and in demand: 3,650 pieces have been sold at from Rs. 5 3-16ths to Rs. 5 13-16ths per piece. 6,800 pieces of grey jacconets have been disposed of at from Rs. 1½ to Rs. 2 9-16ths per piece. The descriptions in request at the date of last report continue to be inquired after. In bleached and fancy goods scarcely any transactions have taken place,—the only description of the former at all in demand being jacconets.

In Metals.—Sheathing and brazier's copper have slightly advanced in price; while those of Swedish steel in tubs, and British bar, round neil rod, and hoop iron, have given way a trifle.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

MODIFICATIONS OF PENSION RULES.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Colombo, Sept. 12 .- His Exc. the Governor having received instructions from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State, modifying in certain respects the rules under which pensions to public officers of this colony are now regulated, under the minutes of the 3rd July, 1845, 28th August and 4th December, 1846, and 30th January, 1847, has directed that the same be published for general information.

1. In assigning superannuation or retired allowances according to the specified scales in the above minutes the increased rates of allowance authorised by those scales after periods of five years' service shall not take effect immediately after the completion of each period; but the authorised rate shall be apportioned according as the service might exceed such completion and approach the next period of increase. Thus, for example, upon a salary of 120%. per annum, the maximum allowance authorised by the minutes after a service of twenty and not exceeding twenty-five years, being 5-12ths or 50%. the increase of 10% shall be distributed by annual apportionments between the twentieth and twenty-fifth year of service, as follow :-

Service 20 years		Allowance £42
,,	22 ,,	,, 46
"	23 ,,	,, 48
	94	50

and in like manner the minutes authorising the allowance of 6-12ths or 60%. for service from twenty-five to thirty years, the apportionment shall be

or 2	years	£ 52
27	7 ,,	56
28	3 ,,	58
29		60

and in the same ratio with reference to longer or shorter service.

2. Should the term of service not warrant the assignment of an annual allowance, a guatuity may be granted after the rate of one month's salary for each year of service.

3. The apportioned rates above mentioned, giving the maximum allowance for the last year of each period to which the scales of the minutes are adapted, are, however, only to be granted in cases of decidedly faithful and meritorious service; but where the testimony as to fidelisy, diligence, and merit, is in any respect defective, a deduction will be made from the apportioned rate, either of one-fifth or of greater or less amount; or the grant of allowance will be altogether withheld where there has been obvious negligence, irregularity, or misconduct.

4. But in cases of special merit it will remain open to her Majesty's Government to award the maximum allowance warranted by the scales of the minutes to the shortest terms of service, or to give such extraordinary recompense as they may deem expedient.

5. The services in respect of which superannuations are granted ought, in all cases, to have been continuous, unless interrupted by reduction of office, or other temporary suspension of employment, not arising from misconduct or voluntary resignation of the party.

6. In cases of suspension of employment on reduction or abolition of office, temporary allowances may be assigned according to the above rules; on condition, however, that the parties receiving the same will be liable to; be recalled into service, and with the understanding that they are to be re-employed as opportunity may offer, in preference to new applicants for office.

CHINA.

We mentioned that, on hearing of the murder of the Governor of Macao by the Chinese on the 22nd of August, H.M.S. Amazon and H.M. steamer Medea went over at once in order to restore confidence by their appearance; two American and one French men-of-war have been there for the same purpose. Since the Portuguese soldiers captured a small Chinese fort outside the barrier, three days after the murder, there have been no acts of hostility on either side; the number of Chinese killed and wounded on that occasion was not far from 70; in Canton exaggeration has swollen the number to over a hundred. The Chinese within the walls of Macao are quiet; there has been neither riot nor plunder, and the presence in the town of marines belonging to the French and American ships of war will have an excellent effect.

The Chinese commissioner's reply to the despatch from the Macao Government, informing him of the crime that had been committed, was not received when the last packet closed. It came to hand a few days later, and is marked by the cool insolence of its tone. It is said that the answer sent to Mr. Bonham's communication was much in the same strain. The Macao Government answered seriously; but it had little, if any, effect. About the 20th, Government received another communication (we rather think not written by Sue himself), offering to deliver up the head and hand of the late Governor, also a head said to be that of one of the murderers, provided the Portuguese would release the three Chinese soldiers captured at the barrier gate on the 25th ult. To this the Portuguese could not consent; much value being put on the evidence of the soldiers. It is said they were on guard when the murder was committed,-witnessed the whole affair,—and feasted in the guard-house with the murderers, the head and hand being there until near midnight, when they embarked for Canton. They reached Canton the following evening, when there was much rejoicing within the city. At Whampoa-in sight of the foreign shipping-there was a public procession a few days later. Many Chinese soldiers were present, carrying with them the figure of a European on horseback, which they placed in the temple of one of their idols. Rumours are current of rewards, and even rank, having been conferred on the murderers; but of this, foreigners have no certain knowledge.

The authorities at Macao will spare no exertion to get at the truth; no sane man for a moment can believe that this was the act of mere desperate ruffians. Plunder was not their object; before they committed the deed a retreat was secured to Canton, and the very hour of their arrival at the city timed.

It now appears that some days previous to the murder a mandarin vessel moored in the bay near the barrier. She anchored off the Praya on the evening the deed was done, and left some time during the night. It is probable that, after marking the state of excitement, this boat put off and embarked the murderers according to previous arrangement. An express boat despatched for Canton that evening returned, stating that they had been fired at by pirates and compelled to return. The crew of the express assert that the boat which prevented their going further was the identical mandarin boat we have referred to.

The Chinese continue repairing their fortifications at Caza Branca, but whether they meditate hostilities is mere conjecture. The officials take the capture of their fort by the Portuguese and the slaughter of part of the garrison very quietly. The mandarins merely demanded back the fort, the barrier guard-house, and the three prisoners; they made no comment on the number killed and wounded. Knowing how very difficult it is to deal with them in an ordinary accidental homicide, when a foreigner happens to take the life of a Chinese, it is difficult to believe that they will refrain from demanding satisfaction.—Friend of China, Sept. 28.

PIRACY.-Parties in Europe who are in the habit of seeing Hong-Kong papers must be struck with the number of piracies reported. Numerous as they are, not one case in ten finds its way into the local papers, or is even heard of by Europeans. They prey upon their own people, avoiding European vessels and boats as a rule, though sometimes foreigners do not pass scatheless. Recent events have disclosed what no Englishman in China had any idea of. A well-appointed piratical fleet, consisting of not fewer than fifty junks, carrying each from eight to twenty guns (some of them long heavy 18-pounders), was sweeping the coast from the Gulf of Tonquin and the island of Hainan to the entrance to the Canton river. A couple of months ago a large junk from Singapore (commanded by an Englishman) reported having been captured by a piratical fleet cruising off Hainan, and that he had been compelled to ransom himself and vessel. By fishermen and others similar reports were brought in. By a late arrival from Singapore it was ascertained that the brig Dido was chased by pirates off Hainan, and narrowly escaped; the ship Sylph, from Hong-Kong to India, with a valuable freight of treasure, was signalled by the Dido the following day, standing in for the land, and as she had not reached Singapore, it was feared she had been taken. On hearing of the non-arrival of the Sylph, H.M.'s steamer Medea was promptly despatched to make search for the missing vessel along the Hainan coast. On the morning of the 7th inst. the Medea anchored off Tien-pahk, where had then congregated the whole pirate fleet with their prizes. Unfortunately, from her draught of water, the Medea could not get over the bar, and it would have been folly to attempt cutting out such force with her boats. After taking and destroyroceeded to Hainan, and returned to the port on this 12th, having gained no intelligence of the Sylph. In the meantime, the owner of the Sylph engaged the Peninsular and Oriental Company's vessel Canton, and with a party of marines and seamen on board belonging to H.M.S. Amazon, she followed on the Medea's track, but three days later. On the evening of the 9th the Canton passed nearly the whole pirate fleet; they had stolen out of the bay of Tien-pahk after the Medea sailed for Hainan. Had the Medea remained blockading Tien-pahk a couple of days longer, the Canton would have arrived, and the whole fleet been then captured. And not only the pirates, but also their prizes, and people who visit their haunts to buy the plunder. To the Supplement we refer for a short narrative of the Medea's cruise, and also that of the Canton. Captain Jauncey, it will be observed, speaks of a Macao woman who told them that the junks were all pirates. This woman has since been taken on board a junk at Cumsingmoon, and there are grounds to suspect that part of the squadron at Tien-pahk had gone to that anchorage to trade away their plunder. At present we forbear saying much; the woman (Akeu) has been kept by a foreigner for many years, and this is not her first visit to the pirates' haunts. Two of these junks were taken possession of by the American brig Dolphin: they had cotton and produce on board, which, from certain marks, is supposed to be British property. Commodore Geisinger, on this ground, wrote to Captain Troubridge tendering him the prizes; they were brought over by H.M.'s brig Columbine, and the case is being investigated to-day. On the 19th the H. C.'s steamer Philogethon—with three armed boats from the Amazon and Columbine in tow-started on a cruise, there being good grounds to believe that Shap-ng-tsai and his fleet were at the island of St. John's. On arriving there they learned that Shap-ng-tsai had sailed for Tien-pahk, where he intended to repair damages. The Phlegethon had a short supply of fuel, and could not follow. On the 23rd the Amazon and Phlegethon both sailed, expecting to find Shap-ng-tsai at Tienpahk, or in that vicinity. At Mamee they learned that he returned to Tien-pahk on the 21st, and, after capturing some junks and burning the village of Chappa, he sailed for Hainan, finding the English were after him. Hearing that some pirates were blockeding the fishermen in a bay on the west coast, the Columbine, went to their relief yesterday. No doubt this is part of the great squadron, which is now distributed over the coast as far as the southern point of Hainan .- Friend of China, Sept. 28.

DR. GUTZLAFF is about to visit Europe, after an absence of twenty-three years. That long term has been passed in China, or among the Chinese. Perhaps no foreigner of the age has more thoroughly identified himself with the people; their literature, religion, government, history, and social and domestic habits, have been investigated by a mind which finds pleasure in study. Even in personal appearance the learned gentleman has, in a degree, become Chinese.—Ibid.

MARKET.

CANTON, SEPT. 27.—A good business has been done during the month in raw cotton, at a slight advance on the improved rates advised last month. The arrivals of cotton yarn had been considerable, and adding to the heavy stocks previously pressing on the market, prevented any great advance in the price. Prices have become firm prevented any great advance in the price. Prices have become firm and current, where the month previous they were mostly nominal. Present rates leave the shipper a serious loss on late Manchester prices; the sales this month are fully 900 bales. Grey cotton long cloths had fallen to a very low price, especially for light goods; but attention having been attracted to them by speculators, an advance of 5 to 7 cents took place and has been maintained on 56 to 64 reed goods; while finer sets, say 66 to 72, have receded in value; the best 72 reed of 9½ catties will not fetch more than 2½ dollars, each price duty paid; though many holders are firm in their refusal to accept such low prices. Metals.—Iron has fallen again in price for every kind except hoop, of which the quantity on the market is very small; every arrival now further depresses the market, as this article is very easily brought down in price when the stocks on hand are heavy; the buyers being combined to such an extent that the trade is almost a monopoly. About 5,000 piculs have sold, each parcel

BORNEO.

The following detailed account of the operations of the expedition, organized by Sir James Brooke (who accompanied it), against the Sarebas and Sakarran pirates of Borneo, is given in the Journal of the Indian Archipelago: -

On the 25th July, the steamer Nemesis, with the boats of the Albatross and Royalist in tow, left the river, followed by the Sarawak flotilla. On the 27th, the steamer and boats rendezvoused at Kaluka, and on the 28th the Nemesis, being somewhat short of fuel, returned to the mouth of the Sarebas, to collect wood. Certain information was received in the evening that a large pirate fleet had left Sarebas early on the 26th, and it was conjectured that the capture of the peaceful town of Sariki was the object of the expedition. A strong detachment of boats was instantly despatched by Capt. Farquhar to prevent this fleet escaping on their return by the Kaluka river, whilst the steamer, the men-of-war's boats, and some native prahus, guarded the Sarebas. This position was maintained for three days, whilst scout boats were sent out to give timely notice of the approach of the pirate fleet. On the evening of the 30th, intelligence was received that the pirates, after partially plundering Palo, and threatening the inhabitants, retired to a river called Si Maring, where it was conjectured they were plotting an attack on Siriki. The Palo people fied the same night to Rejang, and reported that all the powerful chiefs of Sarebas were out, and that they had counted 107 war prahus. This news revived the spirits of the expedition, and on the evening of the 31st the scout boats brought intelligence of the approach of the pirate Bala.

Every preparation was instantly made, and the Kaluka de-tachment moved to the entrance of that river, and discovered the pirates in great force passing at very long gunshot distance. Lieuts, Everest and Wilmshurst advanced in the cutters, and opened a are upon a portion of the pirate fleet, which was fully returned. The main body, however, pulled close in shallow water to the entrance of the Sarebas, and appeared, on seeing the effective preparations for their reception, to hesitate as to their future course of action, for some delay took place. This hesitation over, they rushed at the eastern point of the river, with the intention of forcing their way up the Sarebas in water too shallow for the men-of-war boats. were, however, met by the native force at the sandy point, and after a brief resistance, seized with a complete panic, the Bala divided, some escaping a-shore, some putting out to sea, and some crossing the river by a long detour. It was a bright moon-light night, and now commenced a series of small independent actions.

The steamer at the river's mouth management and kept up a hot and destructive fire. The men-of-war boats outside were playing the same game, whilst the Sarawak natives on either bank of the river, about 3½ miles across, were closely engaged with the pirates and intercepting their escape. The Nemi was everywhere cutting up the pirates; rockets, shells, shots, musketry were flying in all directions—blue lights and port fires illumined the scene. Over a space of fully seven miles, there was here a fight, there a chase. Here a pirate boat sunk at sea, whilst others were seeking safety (and often seeking it in vain) on shore, in an inhospitable jungle far from their homes. At about eleven o'clock the firing relaxed, and by twelve the pirates were no longer seen, and the English force was left to its repose.

At break of day on the following morning the result of the night's action became visible. On the eastern point, or Batang Marrow, lay upwards of sixty prahus, and on the beach for a long distance was strewed the débris of their large pirate fleet sunken boats were carried here and there with the tide-fully 2,500 men of the enemy sought refuge in the jungle, where our people were eagerly hunting them in detached parties.

Thus the pirates of Sarebas, caught red-handed in the fact, laden with plunder, and gorged with blood, met the fate they so richly deserved. Upwards of eighty prahus were captured (many from sixty to seventy feet long, and eight or nine feet in beam), and many men slain. It is difficult to calculate the exact number of the killed, but, at a low computation, three hundred must have fallen during the night's action, and many wounded and exposed will swell the total loss of the pirates. The morning was occupied in destroying and appropriating the captured prahus, and orders having been given to show mercy to any of the pirates who wished to give themselves up, the fleet in the evening joined the steamer at Rembas.

The next morning, the 2nd August, an a lvance was made up the Sarebas, and the force anchored at Baring in the afternoon, and again proceeded at night to Sarueh. The next morning a Malay prisoner having been brought in, the following information of the movements of the destroyed pirate fleet was obtained. A force (by his account) of 120 boats had set out under the firm persuasion that the Malays of Sarawak would not make any attack during the Ramadan, or last month, and probably, he added, the chiefs had an idea of attacking Siriki. Having (as before mentioned) plundered Palo, they held a conference in the Si Maring and proceeded to Mato, capturing by the way two trading prahus, one laden with sago bound to Singapore, the other returning from that place with piece-goods,

The panic on finding both the Scatt was complete. Everybody (the prisoner added) lost his senses, and each boat thought only of reaching home.

It would be useless to describe the further movements of the expedition in detail, and it will suffice to say that the town of Paku was taken without resistance after a skirmish or two, and after some hard labour for two or three days in removing the Obstructions thrown across the narrow and shallow river. the 7th of August the expedition returned from the neighbourhood of Paku and rendezvoused around the Nemesis. A letter was, however, left at Paku, addressed to the pirates, pointing out their crime, and the punishment which had followed it, and offering terms, on the basis of the abandonment of piracy.

The original object of the expedition was now resumed, and the steamer and boats moved to Rejang, and advanced up the river eighty miles to the mouth of the Kanawit, inhabited by the piratical tribes—a successful excursion was made up this river—several long houses were destroyed, some piratical Bang-kongs taken, and some prisoners made. The same terms were kongs taken, and some prisoners made. Verbally offered to these people as had before been offered to the Sarebas, and three of their chiefs came in, and promised, as far as they themselves were concerned, to discontinue their piratical excursions; but they would not answer for the other chiefs, amongst whom "Buah Riah" of Ensabi is the most powerful and influential.

On the fourth day, the boats having once more rejoined, the On the fourth day, the boats having once more rejoined, the steamer proceeded about ten miles up the Rejang to Poe, inhabited by the Kanawit Dyaks, a tatooed race. These people, bited by the Kanawit Dyaks, a tatooed race. piratical themselves, and the guides of the Sarebas and Sakarran on their expeditions, were fined, and two slaves, captured by the Sakarrans resident up the Poe creek and sold to them, were set at liberty. The effect of these intermediate depôts of trade between the Malays and the pirates is, that the captives and plunder taken during their piratical excursions are exchanged for salt, iron, and other goods. Such depôts are the receptacles of plundered property, and must always be destroyed, in order that the pirates may not derive the profits from piracy which they have herectore done. The receiver of piratical plunder must be regarded in the same light as the pirate himself.

At Poe, this most successful expedition may be said to have ended, and it is only necessary to add that the Rejang is probably the finest and deepest river in Borneo, and when piracy shall be suppressed will become a place of note and a great producing country. The river Kanawit can send out some sixty or making, with Sarebas and Sakarran (previous to the recent defeat of the former), upwards of three hundred prahus engaged in piracy, either in the fleets or detached parties. The present expedition has dealt a heavy blow to this infamous system, and the best results may be expected from it, and the public and H.M.'s Government are greatly indebted to Capt. Farquhar for his conduct on an arduous and tedious service. All alike deserve thanks and applause, from the gallant commander of the Nemesis, and the officers engaged on the expedition, to the seamen and marines, for all alike did their duty with zeal and with cheerful-The news received from Sarawak when the boats were up the Rejang will further illustrate the system of piracy which has been allowed to grow up on the coast of Borneo. pears that, previous to the expedition from Sarawak proceeding to Sarebas, five piratical prabus had passed towards Sambas and Sirhassan. On their return on the morning of the 7th of August, these boats attacked the houses at the Moratabas entrance of Sarawak, and, though repulsed, subsequently captured a trading prahu and killed twelve men. They had before taken an island prahu, and killed some Chinese, off the entrance of the Sambas river, but the exact amount of mischief done by them has not

As it has before been said, it is very difficult to estimate the loss of the pirates during these proceedings, but it is satisfactory that no Englishman has lost his life from the enemy, and only four natives in personal encounters. It is gratifying to add, likewise, that women and children have been respected, and that the Malays, and even the Dyaks, have shown a great willinguess to introduce a humane system of warfare, and in this, as on many other points, to imitate the customs of their Euro-On the 23rd of August the expedition once more anchored at the entrance of the Rejang, and on the 24th the Nemesis entered the Moratabas.

MAULMAIN.

Maulmain papers to the 31st ult. record an event of sufficient interest to have demanded and received an extra to itself-being nothing less than a violent, if not almost murderous, assault by a Burman upon the commissioner, Major Bogle. some grievance, real or fancied, to revenge, and, going to the The ruthan had residence of Major Bogle, he presented a petition to that officer, and, attacking him as he was reading the paper, struck him repeatedly with a short bludgeon, which he had carried in, conceased under his clothes. The native attendants of the commissioner, probably Bengali khitmutgars or chuprassees, paralysed by fear, no doubt, did not attempt to prevent the assault or to seize the perpetrator. We are glad to learn that Major Bogle was recovering from the effects of the injuries inflicted on him. - Hurkaru, Sept. 21.

The investigation preliminary to the trial at the sessions of the man, Nga Mho, who assaulted Major Bogle, with intent, as it is alleged, to kill him, seems to be their only subject of interest to extra provincial people. Our contemporaries are clamorous for vengeance on the wretch who raised his hand against the life of the commissioner. They would stretch the law the ine of the commissioner. They would stretch the law to its fullest extent, if not a little beyond it, for his especial benefit, in meting out his punishment; but we observe that the Times, though affecting no doubt of his guilt, is so anxious that he should have a fair trial, that it does the officers of the commission, as we think, some injustice in declaring its belief that they are none of them likely to be fair and honest judges. We trust that the wretch will have a fair trial; and we would hope that those who have to try him are above the influence of any such bias as that attributed to them. If convicted, as it is highly probable he will be, the criminal will be deserving of the heaviest penalty which the law warrants, and, of course, he will suffer it; but we are sure that the fact of his crime having been perpetrated on the principal person of the place, or of "an indignity having been committed on the whole of the British population," will not be taken into account to increase its severity.—Ibid. # CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Advices to the 22nd September announce that the Neptune, with 282 convicts on board, arrived in Simon's Bay on the 19th. As soon as her arrival was known in Cape Town, the members of the Anti-Convict Committee of Vigilance proceeded to Simon's Bay, to take such immediate precautions as the case might require. Early next morning the alarm was given by the sounding of the gong at the Town hall, and the tolling of bells in the churches. Though great excitement prevailed, the general feeling was evidently one of relief and satisfaction. No difference of opinion appeared to exist as to the necessity of employing instant and decisive measures to put an end to the suspense and anxiety which had prevailed for nearly three months, disorganising everything, government, society, and business of every kind. A letter was sent to his Excellency by the Municipal Board of Cape Town, stating in plain terms, that as "the people have determined that the convicts must not, cannot, and pie have determined that the convicts must not, cannot, and shall not be landed, or be kept in any of the ports of this colony," the board trusted his Excellency, in accordance with his often expressed desire to promote the well-being of the colonistic of the colo nists, would order the Neptune, after victualling, to leave, declaring that he would be responsible for any consequences that might ensue from his refusal. A reply informed the Board, that his Excellency would adhere to the determination he had previously announced; that the ship would, therefore, ride at anchor in Simon's Bay until advices were received from the Home Government, which would probably be within a month or six weeks; and he regretted the tone of the Board's letter, which the prevailing excitement might excuse but could not justify. The reading of the letter was followed by groans and other expressions of disapprobation. The excitement throughout the town continued to increase. Many mercantile establishments were closed, and business was generally suspended.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At the meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Asiatic Society, 20th September, Dr. Buist, in laying a collection of specimens on the table from Sewree, said that, in cases where the fortuon the table from Sewree, and that, in cases where the fortu-nate combination of a heavy fall of rain, a stormy sea, and high tide, came together, as they had done a few days before, the geologist might look for disclosures he need not expect under a less fortunate state of things. The heavy rain of the 17th inst. had gr ooved a deep trench right through Sewree sands, which one tide had helped to clear away; the following tide filled it up, and effaced it altogether. Staying in the neighbourhood, he had visited the spot when in its most auspicious state for examination, and was surprised to find a geological arrangement he was not prepared for. They were all aware that the rocky portion of the island of Bombay consisted chiefly of trap, of different varieties; Tardeo and Malabar Hill were of basalt; most of the other rocks greenstone. Sewree Fort was built on a mass of chert, or black jasper,—the Lydean stone of the mineralogist, and touch-stone of the goldsmith,—the result, probably, of the outburst of the trap through a bed of clay. In the trap was curiously entangled considerable masses of stratified rock, containing impressions of fresh water plants, of frogs, and other fresh water animals. This was found along the base of Malabar Hill; it was beautifully exposed at the cut beyond Love Grove; it cropped out all along the eastern edge of the flats; and after for some time being buried under the trap, it re-appeared again under Nowrojee's Hill, near the Mount, and so all along by Chinchpoogly, round by Sewree Bay and Matoonga. This over the lower part of the island was overlaid by deposits of the newer pliocene periods, from three to fifteen feet thick; that is, at this stage of its existence, the group of islands, then some dozens in number, which now constitute Bombay, had all been simultaneously raised from the sea-whether rapidly or leisurely did not appear-by some eight or ten feet. The raised beach, which consisted entirely of sand, gravel, and sea-shells, such as those now found on our shores, was in most places converted into a solid concrete by cementation. The lime dissolved during the monsoon, when the water, which everywhere abounded, was impregnated with carbonaceous matter, or fixed air, was thrown down as the season advanced, and formed a variety of cementation, from which the concretion in question, as well as the konkur, or limestone nodules, and another variety of stony concretion, derived their origin. Of this material, a large number of the oldest houses in the native town were built. raised beach, whether loose or solid, extended over the drillground, Colaba, the lower part of the Observatory compound on the harbour side, and the whole of the Esplanade. It stretched out to the base of Malabar Hill, and so on towards Tardeo, where it was overlaid by a lagoon, or silt formation of very re-cent origin. It re-appeared near Worlee, and extended all under Mahim Wood northwood, and so on by Mahim, and continued towards Sion, re-appearing, after some interruption, along the verge of Sewree Bay, and under the village of Sewree. Along Sewree Bay was a large bed of blueish clay, filled with mangrove roots, konkur, and other matters, which he (Dr. Buist) had often examined, and always believed to have been a bed of more recent origin than the newer pliocene,-to have been deposited, in fact, as the ground was in process of elevation. It was obviously older than, and in several respects different in character from, the recent mud deposits in the neighbourhood, and attained a considerably higher level, being found at several points above high-water mark, where clayey matter could not have been deposited. The torrents of the 17th inst. had dispelled this illusion, and furnished a beautiful section, exhibiting a bed of three or four feet of clay, lying under a mass of from four to six feet of shells, gravel, and concrete. On surveying the beach with much care, he found the clay bed to extend from end to end; and at some places the difference betwixt the lowest level of the lowest mangrove roots in the clay bed and summit of the concrete was from fourteen to eighteen feet. The strata of the concrete dipped slightly three or four degrees towards the east, and occasionally varied considerably, so that the upward movement which raised them to their present level had not been tranquil or uniform. Near the fort, the lower beds had been washed away, and some seventy yards down the beach large masses of concrete, ten or twelve feet square, and two or three feet thick, were lying strewed over the clay bed in which the old mangroves still abounded. This was an evidence that the sea was here advancing,-the tough clay and harder strata of the concrete alone withstanding its ravages,-the intervening deposit, to the extent of many acres, had been carried away. The arrangement stood thus :-

At a meeting of the Ceylon Branch Royal Asiatic Society, on the 25th August, Dr. McVicar read a paper on the Gan Sabbe, or Village Councils of the Singhalese, for the reinstitution of which a movement has recently taken place amongst the rural inhabitants of Ceylon. These institutions appear to have fallen into disuse since the possession of the island by the British, though the Charter of 1833 sanctioned them. About eighteen months ago they were re-established, and there are now not less than twenty between Negombo and Pantura.

These Courts or Councils, Dr. McVicar observes, trace their origin far back amongst the annals of Buddhism, and in their religious Olas are many records of the institution of and decisions given by these bodies. Dr. McVicar read several cases, which possessed high interest, more especially as two of them which possessed high interest, more especially as two of them bore a similarity to portions of Holy Writ.

With regard to the first, the Pali Ola tells that, in the time of Bhodisat, a young mother laid her infant under the shade of a tree whilst she bathed, and that, during her ablutions, a demon, assuming the shape of a young female, approached the child, and after caressing it, obtained permission from the mother to take it up; but no sooner had she got the infant in her arms, than she run away with it. The mother pursued, and by her cries brought some neighbours to the rescue. The two women disputing the possession of the child, they were taken before Bhodisat and his Gan Sabbe, when, having heard the story which each had to tell, and to shew the Council the soundness of the decision he had arrived at, Bhodisat told the women to lay ho'd of the child, the one by the arms and the other by the legs, and see who would thus pull the infant from the other. They did so, but on the first cry of pain from the infant, the woman who was the mother ceased her hold of the child. Bhodisat turned to his Council and asked them which woman had shown the feeling of a mother? They of course replied, she who had ceased to pull when the child cried; and so judgment

The other legend relates that a number of virtuous men were falsely accused to the king, and condemned to be trodden to death by the royal elephant; but that, when the animal approached the innocent men, instead of doing them violence, as expected, it turned away and would not return. The accusers were thereupon condemned to die the death they had sought for

Colonel Low, writing from Kedda (or Quedah) says: "In all my numerous excursions in the jungles here, I have discovered undoubted relics of a Hindoo colony, with ruins of temples. This tract extends along the talus of the Kedda mountain Jerrei. Besides the Sivaic emblem, I found several copper coins. My researches have been unavoidably slow, from the almost impenetrable state of the forests, and from the necessity imposed on me by the mendacious or exaggerating propensities of the natives, and the absurd and vexatious jealousy of their rulers beyond our frontier. My researches have clearly proved that the people worshipped Buddha, and at the same time Siva, and perhaps some other Hindoo deities, but that these last classes appear to have predominated in the end, their advancement perhaps keeping pace with the gradual success of the Hindoos in India in their rivalry of the Buddhists. I may likewise mention that I found several small talismans of leaf gold amidst the foundations of These are of a triangular shape, and the base about an inch long, with old Siamese characters upon them, and several quotations from Pali or Sanscrit religious works, and in a character of the Pali closely approaching to, if it be not, the Nagari."

MALAY AMOKS. - Besides the ordinary amok amongst the Malays is one caused by disease or monomania. Dr. Oxley says: A man, sitting quietly amongst his friends or relatives, will, without provocation, suddenly start up, weapon in hand, and slay all within his reach. I have known as many as eight killed and wounded by a very feeble individual in this manner. day, no one could be more contrite, and when asked why he did it, the answer has invariably been, 'The Devil entered into me; my eyes were darkened; I did not know what I was about.' I have received this same reply on at least twenty different occa-On examination of these monomaniacs, I have generally found them labouring under some gastric disease, or troublesome ulcer, and these fearful ebullitions break out upon some exacerbation of the disorder.'

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

THURSDAY, November 22, 1849.

THE subject of "Conversions in India" has recently been discussed in a place where it is sure to attract a large share of attention,—the columns of the Times newspaper. Like all questions which deeply affect the public mind, this subject has given rise to very discordant opinions, not as to the end, but the means, and the correspondents of the Times represent the two extreme parties,—those who distrust all reports of success in conversion under the existing missionary system, and look to the slow progress of education for the due preparation of the native mind to receive the truths of Christianity; and those, on the other hand, who are for assailing at once the strongholds of Paganism, and who appeal to the triumphant reports of religious societies as encouraging evidence of the success of missionary efforts.

The discussion was initiated by an able writer, who, with the caution characteristic of his class, warns us of the danger incurred by interference with the religion of the Hindus; urging that the change from Paganism to Christianity should be wrought without that disastrous collision which precipitate measures must occasion; that wrong notions are entertained of the intellectual and moral qualities of the people of India, more especially the upper classes; that it is an egregious error to suppose that "the soil of India is bare," and that "with a broad-cast fling of the arm," it is only necessary to scatter the seed, and wherever it falls it will be sure to grow.

"I have no doubt," he says, "of its being desirable that the eastern as well as the western pagans should shake off their illusions; I have little doubt that, by degrees, they will do so; and that with time their minds will become pervious to the truth. But that result, momentous as it is, has hitherto been checked, and it will continue to be retarded, by our impatience. We have been hurrying to our term when we ought to have been attending to our course. Before we attempted to make the Indians Christians, we ought to have seen that they were fit—I would even say that they were capable—of being so. I never yet knew or heard of one single instance of a creditable convert to Christianity in India. I never knew an instance of one that was not as well a reproach to the creed he was adopting, as a warning to the one he had abandoned. Such converts as have yet been made, small as their number is, have served therefore no other purpose than that of deterring others from following their example. Instead, therefore, of thrusting our gift on the acceptance of the Indians, let us qualify them, or rather let us enable them to qualify themselves, for its attainment. Before they can become worthy converts, they must become willing converts. To pursue the right path usefully, they must be led into it by their own choice; and, to adhere to it steadily, they must be guided by inherent, not reflected light."

A counter-view of the question is presented by two other correspondents, who maintain that numerous converts, of respectable character, attest the success which has attended the exertions of missionaries, to whose reports they appeal, as well as to the fact that "several Christian denominations in Bengal and Bombay, as well as Madras, count their converts now, not by twos and threes, but by tens and hundreds," from many of whom European Christians might take lessons in humility and patient, persevering piety; and they contend that to argue that the natives of India must be first fitted to be Christians, and that civilization must precede conversion, is "a fatal error," since it is "limiting the direct power of God over the human heart." One of these writers plausibly urges that the manifest change which is operating in Indian society, under which Brahmin influence, the result not of wealth but of superstition, is gradually declining, is the fruit of missionary labours, the natives themselves ascribing it to "the spread of missionary education among the people, by schools, by tracts, and by public preaching."

"An independence of thought is fast supplanting the grovelling servility of former ages, and, though the missionaries are often laughed at and jeered, as Christ's missionaries have always been by the heathen, yet their sayings and illustrations are not forgotten, and take a powerful hold upon the native mind. And thus the principles of Christianity are becoming the standard of morality throughout the land. Meantime, outward signs are not wanting to support the sanguine hopes of Christians, that Brahminism, that great barrier to the progress of our pure religion, is crumbling to ruin. Although at the principal old shrines pilgrims year after year attend, as formerly, in countless numbers, yet, in many of the great towns which are rising up to importance under our fostering hand, the great cars, of which every town has one, have almost ceased their yearly procession for want of hands to draw them, while in former times thousands would flock, obedient to the command of the Brahmins, to assist in parading through the streets their presiding deity. The civilization and enlightemment of the districts of Tanjore and Tinnevelly are much to be attributed to the spread of Christianity in the former, and almost wholly in the latter. Mysore and Canara are also feeling its influence."

The tendency of the former of these opinions is to create an indifference towards the object of conversion, and a desire to let things remain as they are, and estimate too highly the intellectual attainments of the Hindus, which the writer we have quoted perhaps exaggerates, when he says, "I have in no country met with better scholars than in the upper classes of the native Hindus," whose education, he adds, "has been as sedulously cultivated as our own, and whatever they have learned, they know well and apply judiciously." On the other hand, the zealots of missionary operations approach very closely the verge of coercive conversion. The Rev. Dr. Duff, indeed, in a work supposed to speak the sentiments of the Directors of the Church of Scotland Mission, boldly advocates immediate conversion, declaring that the employment of preparatory measures is "beginning at the wrong end;" that "all ameliorating schemes, of mere human devising, must, in the issue, prove abortive, and even if success should attend them up to their full measure of capacity of effecting good, they must still prove but poor, weak, and insufficient;" and he urges that we should "at once betake ourselves to that only effective scheme, which is announced and developed in the Blessed Volume of Inspiration."

Between these dangerous extremes, the Government of India pursues a prudent middle course, to which may be attributed whatever advance has really been made by Christianity in India,—namely, a steady perseverance in the diffusion of education by means of schools and colleges, in which all interference with the religious belief of the students is strictly forbidden.

Those who desire a more rapid attainment of the end in view, must either calculate upon miraculous agency, or misunderstand the manner in which great religious or moral changes are wrought in nations. The precedent, so often referred to, of the propagation of Christianity in the primitive ages, has no application to the present time. A scheme of superstition, most cunningly devised, intimately incorporated with the social institutions of a very peculiar system of civilization, and intrenched within formidable prejudices, derived from considerations which exercise a powerful influence upon all mankind, cannot be rationally expected to give way upon the mere preaching of a creed scarcely comprehensible to men in the condition of the Reasoning analogically from instances not rare in the moral government of the world, there appears nothing presumptuous or improbable in the supposition that it may be for wise and beneficent purposes that civilization should, in the present age, be made the pioneer of true religion; that, whilst false creeds may coexist with the darkest ignorance and the deepest moral depravity, Christianity should require, as a condition precedent, a certain degree of mental illumination, without which it is susceptible of only imperfect development.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LORD GOUGH's reply to an address from the citizens of Limerick, eulogistic of the eminent services of their distinguished townsman, contains the following passages: - "I would fain here gratefully acknowledge the goodness of that Gracious Power who by His divine grace has raised British India to that high position in which it now stands, and by a crowning victory successfully terminating the war in the Punjab, thereby to all human appearance insured the great blessings of peace. The more so, because surrounding states must feel, as well as the most warlike of them (the Sikh nation itself), that it was not by one simple action alone that British supremacy has been established, but that throughout a series of most trying operations, the discipline, indomitable courage, and endurance of the gallant troops under my command were everywhere triumphant, despite the numerous obstacles which conspired to oppose us. Par-liament has evinced in both Houses its sense of the services of that army. Her Majesty has also been graciously pleased, upon my recommendation, to bestow upon many of its most distinguished officers honours or promotion, most grateful to the feelings of that general who has fourteen times led them to victory, and upon myself a further mark of her approbation, thus closing a career of fifty-six years in the service of my country, in which I have expended unreservedly, and to the utmost extent of my ability, the energies of a long life.—Simla, Sept. 7."

SIR CHARLES FORBES, BART., died at his house in Fitzroy Square on the night of the 20th. We hope in our next issue to present a short memoir of this highly-respected gentleman, who, during a long career, in India and in England, as a senator, a merchant, and in private life, earned the esteem of all who knew him.

THE LE BAS PRIZE ESSAY .- The subject of this essay for 1850, founded at the University of Cambridge, is: "The political causes which conduced to the introduction and establishment of British sovereignty in India between the dethronement of Suraj-u-Dowlah and the second treaty of peace with Tippoo Sultaun.'

GHUZNEE AND SCINDE PRIZE MONRY .- Notice is given in the London Gazette, that the unclaimed shares of the prize money for the capture of Ghuznee, in July, 1839, on account of the 16th Dragoons and 13th Foot; and for the captures in Lower Scinde in 1843, under General Sir Charles J. Napier, G.C. B., on account of the 41st regiment (only), will be payable at Chelsea Hospital on and after the 3rd of December.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF BENGAL. -On the 14th November, the winding-up of this Company's affairs, under the provisions of the Joint-Stock Companies Act, came on for hearing before the Master in Chancery Dowdeswell. The petition in support of the proposed process, verified by affidavit from Major General M'Leod, the chairman, and Robert Wolesley, the secretary to the Company, sets forth that the undertaking was projected and provisionally registered in April, 1845, for carrying out railway communication from the river Hooghly, near Calcutta, to Rajmahal, on the Ganges, with a branch to Burdwan, proposed capital 4,000,000l, in 80,000 shares of 50l. each, deposit 5s. per share. Shares were allotted to a large number of persons; who paid the deposit, which were applied in the affairs of the Company; and in August, 1815, a subscribers' deed was executed, to which Major-General M'Leod subscribed to the extent of 1,000%. The various parties were in attendance for the appointment of an official manager to superintend the winding-up the affairs of the estate. There were four propositions. After a discussion the Master adjourned his decision as to a selection.

RUSSIAN SURVEY OF THE CAUCASUS. - It is stated, in letters from St. Petersburg, that in two years the Russian Government has completed a trigonometrical survey of the territories of the Caucasus, from the mountain chain to the frontiers of Persia and Turkey, and from Tiflis to Baku. At the same time, astronomical observations have been taken, by which twenty-two points have been fixed in the district which has so long been the seat of war, by the means of which a new map of the district over which the Russian military operations are likely to extend can be prepared.

SENHOR AMARAL, the late Governor of Macao, had married by proxy a beautiful widow only a few days before the news of his assassination reached Lisbon; he had fought a duel on her account before he went out to China.

**TONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

**O** To the First Part of this Dictionary, the preceding editions of which have met with general approbation, as well in Europe as in India, the author has by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, been enabled to make such artensive additions, that the number of words and phruses, now given and explained, exceeds by many thousands that contained in any other Hindustani and English Dictionary extant. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper character, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derwatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages; and much attention has been paid to the insertion of the names of Plants, as well as of other natural productions, with the technical terms at present adopted for them in Europe.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the English words in most general use, as well as numerous phrases, with the corresponding Hindustani annexed; and so much additional matter has been now introduced, that although the work is printed in a smaller type, the present Edition comprises rOURTEEN BUERS ENGRE of letter-press than the last, and it is greatly reduced in price.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the seduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

PEARLY SET of TEETH.—ROWLANDS' ODONTO, DEARLY SET of TEETH.—ROWLANDS' ODON'TO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE,—a white powder, compounded of the choicest and most recherchéingredients of the Oriental herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in giving sweetness and perfume to the breath. It extirpates all tartarous adhesions to the teeth, and insures a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. Its anti-septic and anti-scorbutic properties exercise a highly beneficial and salutary influence; they arrest the further progress of decay of the teeth, induce a healthy action of the gums, and cause them to assume the brightness and colour indicative of perfect soundness; while, by confirming their adhesion to the teeth, they give unlimited enjoyment and fresh zest to appetite, by perpetuating effective and complete mastication. The Proprietors of this Dentifrice pledge themselves that its efficacy in preserving and embellishing the teeth far surpasses anything of the kind ever yet offered to the public, and has, in consequence, obtained its selection by her Majesty the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d, per box.

CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus,—"A. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton Garden," to be engraved on the Government stamp, which is affixed on each box. Soid by the Proprietors, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

ANOTHER mail has left the whole of British India in a state of profound tranquillity. The intelligence it brings is, however, by no means deficient in that species of interest which must satisfy the yearnings for news of the advocates of the peace movement, when their millennium shall have arrived,—the utter extinction of war.

Foremost in the list of military incidents is the official announcement of the long and anxiously expected relief for the army (which will be found in another column), with the exception of the Bombay corps, the reliefs for which were daily expected on the departure of the mail. This relief is on a very extensive scale, including every Bengal corps beyond the Sutlej and Beas; it deprives the Bengal army, according to present appearances, of one divisional and three brigade commands, and may give two brigade commands in lieu thereof at Mooltan and Peshawur; and, finally, it puts in motion 7 troops of horse artillery, 15 companies and 10 batteries of foot artillery, 6 regiments of light and 16 regiments of irregular cavalry, 3 regiments of European infantry, and no less than 59 regiments of native infantry. The Delhi Gazette observes—

"The expense will be great, the changes momentous, but the Government will have the opportunity of correcting the very grave error they made on the annexation of the Punjab, about the batta, or rather Scinde allowances, to sepoys. We shall have a word or two to say on the hardships entailed on some corps, but we must confess that, on the whole, the relief appears a fair one. It was headed, we are credibly informed, when first sent up to Government by Sir Charles Napier,—' Head-quarters of the Artillery from Dum Dum to Meerut!"

Mhow, it appears, is to be transferred from Bengal to Madras; Nusseerabad and Neemuch are to be placed under the Bombay Presidency; Naogong and Midnapore, now occupied by Madras troops, are to be restored to Bengal; and Peshawur and Mooltan are to be occupied by Bengal troops, not Bombay, as reported. Two regiments of native infantry, a wing of irregular cavalry, and a company of foot artillery, were to move to Mooltan, and one queen's regiment (the 98th), four regiments of native infantry, one regiment of regular cavalry, two of irregular, a troop of horse artillery, and a company of foot artillery, were ordered to Peshawur.

Another military incident of some moment to the parties concerned is the issue of the general order, granting six months' batta to the troops employed in the arduous Punjab campaign, with the proviso that it is to be deducted from any prize-money which may be hereafter receivable. The extent of the grant seems to have fallen short of the general expectation; but the "poverty of the State" is pleaded in bar to complaints. The troops are, however, to have a medal, those present at Mooltan and the battle of Goojrat receiving a bar in addition for each.

Of political news, the most prominent item is the seizure of the remaining Sikh traitor, Dewan Hakeem Rae, and his two sons, at Sealkote. All the disaffected Sirdars are now in safe custody. Whether they are to be retained in imprisonment at Lahore, or sent to safer confinement in Hindustan, does not appear to have been decided upon-

Their crime consists in conspiring to raise a new confederacy against our power. They were detected in corresponding with Dost Mahomed Khan, whom they incited to attack us. According to the Agra paper, Maharajah Golab Singh was the cause of their arrest. "He received certain letters from the Sikh Sirdars, entreating his assistance and co-operation in another insurrection, which letters he placed in an envelope, and sent them to Sir H. Lawrence. Whether the letters are genuine or forgeries, remains to be proved; but in either case the good intention of the Jumboo Rajah towards the Company can no longer, for the present, be either suspected or misunderstood." On the other hand, the Mofussilite states, that "amongst other documents of importance, it is said that the treaty between Shere Singh and Chutter Singh, and Dost Mahomed, has been found at Sealkote, and moreover (which we discredit) it is said to bear the signature of the Maharajah Golab Singh." The indulgence granted to these Sikh chiefs, after their surrender, in being permitted to return to their homes on parole, which they have so shamefully abused, is said to have been granted by Major Mackeson, the Governor-General having disapproved of it from the first. reasons of Major Mackeson in favour of the measure, which might be justified upon very plausible grounds, have not been published.

The accounts from Lahore state that, besides the chiefs already named, various other persons of note, who were implicated, had been arrested there, and sent off to Govindghur. It is added, that a general rising at Peshawur had been spoken of for some time past; that a plot to take Dhuleep Singh out of the palace had been discovered, and extra sentinels had been placed on the Summun Boorj to prevent his escape; and that he is to be sent away, Poonah being spoken of as his future residence. Upwards of a lakh of rupees had been found at Attaree, besides jewellery, by the pioneers.

Sir H. Lawrence had arrived at Cashmere. The Delhi Gazette mentions a rumour that negotiations have been undertaken by Sir Henry with Maharajah Golab Singh, for his surrender of Cashmere, on receiving Peshawur as an equivalent.

The letters from Peshawur continue to speak well of the place and climate. The reports of the sickness and mortality amongst the troops are declared to be exaggerated. The complaints were chiefly fever and bowel disorders, occasioned by the changeable state of the weather. There were no Cabul troops at Jellalabad beyond the usual garrison, and the rumours of meditated inroads by the Affghans were discredited, in spite of the desire of the troops to pay off old scores.

A court-martial was about to assemble at Rawul Pindee, for the trial of the mutineers of the 13th regiment of native infantry.

The far-famed city and fort of Mooltan had been almost abandoned by the Europeans of the force there stationed. The sickness has been so unusually severe that it was considered unsafe to keep ailing Europeans there for any time. A private letter describes the misery of the poor native soldiers belonging to the force as almost beyond description; they are, nevertheless, patient under all their afflictions.

In consequence of the tranquil condition of the Punjab, the order issued by the Governor-General, prohibiting the wives and families of officers and soldiers from proceeding beyond Lahore, has been rescinded: "the wives and families of officers, soldiers, and others serving in the Punjab, will now be permitted to reside in all cantonments of British troops throughout that country, excepting those in the Derajat and in Huzara."

Scinde furnishes no exception to the general rule of quiet. The station of Kurrachee was very gay,—balls "coming off" and being in prospect. A proposition had been made for putting an additional steamer on the Kurrachee line, so as to prevent the recurrence of any delay in the receipt of the Scinde portion of the Southamption mail. Serious charges had been sent in against the Kotwal of Hyderabad, who is accused of having taken bribes to an almost incredible amount.

The Nizam's capital and state exhibited the usual indications of misrule and disorder, which, according to a letter from Hyderabad, "must terminate in the assumption of the powers of the State by the Company's Government, in less than a twelvementh, if not in its entire occupation, and the subversion of the reigning dynasty."

"The Nizam," continues the writer, " is now engaged in his annual cold weather progresses to his country houses. He appears not to be aware of his ticklish position. The enormous debt he owes, which is rapidly increasing, seems scarcely to engage his thoughts, assuredly not to occupy his mind. Warned repeatedly of the serious responsibilities he will incur by the nonpayment of his debt—reminded constantly of the necessity for its speedy liquidation,—he gives it but little thought. His only expedient seems to be to listen to fabulous accounts, from ignorant domestics, of the enormous wealth in possession of some of his subjects, unfairly acquired, and to demand its restitution. As instances:—Shumsool-Oomra was, at one time, called on to pay thirty lakhs; Raja Balapurshad was supposed to have died worth two crores, when he was not actually worth as many tens of thousands. These and similar acts mark a condition of mind which impresses a strong belief of its fatuity. He is now enjoying himself at Seroornuggur, with all his hunting establishment. It was reported that he was to sojourn some time at Shums-ool-Oomra's country seat, called Juhan-Nooma. His caprice has now varied to the occupation and Oomda Begum's. Previous to his quitting the city, a body of fifty-five munsubdars annoyed him for their pay, and their turbulence procured for them that which justice and their rights could It is not long ago since I reported a very similar occurrence as to numbers and results. The munsubdars, on being paid, both as to numbers and results. were dismissed. Of this body of mere parade horsemen, a thousand or twelve hundred are still left. Many, if not all, of these, hearing of the success of their dismissed brethren, begged, through an official channel, to be similarly treated. The answer given by the official was that the cases differed, inasmuch as the petitioners had not been turbulent. The compliance with this proviso (being the employment of bad means to a good end) is, I presume, facile enough.

According to the Calcutta Englishman, of October 22nd, the disturbances in Goomsur had again assumed a very serious shape.

"In the low country, within the last two or three months, Chokro Bissye's followers have burned ten villages in the mootahs of Oonagherry, Panchghur, Gullery, and Bibelly, and killed and wounded twenty-five people; and lately Chokro Bissye himself went to Gattigooda (which is within twenty miles of Russellconda) and murdered two chiefs. Villages have also been burned and people murdered in the mootah of Cooklooba; and within the last few days a party of armed men, amounting, it is said, to several hundreds, have appeared in the mootah of Juggernathpersad, and required the sirdar and paiks of the mootah to join them, in order to obtain the restoration of the Goomsur rajah, and on the sirdar's refusal, burned several houses and murdered the people. On the hills two Brahmins and their servants have been murdered in the Coorminghia Ghat, and the principal Khond chief, Madwa Khonro, of Raneegunga, has fallen in an attack made upon his tribe by Chokro Bissye. We have not heard how many, if any, meriahs have been sacrificed in Bood-Goomsur, but we are assured that as many have been immolated in Chinna-Kimedy as if the agent had never gone there or withdrawn one intended victim. In the Bood Hills, Chokro Bissye alone has any power, and in Tentilghur and Athora mootah (in Goomsur) the tribes are fighting fiercely among themselves, and have practically overthrown the control of the Government. They drove off the Hill Sirdar's son and a party of sebundies, who had been sent to reduce them to peace and obedience."

It is still asserted that the Governor-General and Sir C. Napier will visit Bombay, where it was believed that a steamer had received orders to proceed to Kurrachee for the purpose of awaiting their pleasure.

The Mofussilite, of the 18th October, publishes the following programme of the intended movements of Sir C. Napier:—

"We are at length enabled to announce that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief leaves Simla on the morning of the 20th inst., and proceeds on his tour to Agra and Delhi. His Excellency's camp starts from Kalka on the 5th prox., for Loodiana, where Sir Charles overtakes it by dawk. He crosses the Sutlej at Phillour, traverses the Jullundhur Doab, and visits Lahore. He afterwards inspects the several military stations and posts between the Ravee and Indus, and proceeds as far as Peshawur. From thence he returns by a cross route to Mooltan, where His Excellency dispenses with the further attendance of head-quarters staff, who return to the provinces, whilst Sir Charles pursues his journey to Bhawulpore, and goes down the Indus to the point where he crosses to Kurrachee. A steamer will be in attendance there to convey Sir Charles to Bombay, and there he takes his leave of the army of India, and embarks for England in March next."

The Marquess of Dalhousie has given another proof of his desire to promote the agricultural interests of India, by sanctioning the offer of a sum of Rs. 5,000, as a prize to any one who will invent a simple, cheap, and efficient machine for the cleaning of the indigenous cotton of the country.

The domestic incidents at Calcutta are few and unimportant; they may be summed up in these few words:—Some little ferment upon the ecclesiastical question, excited by the proceedings of Mr. Bethune; the return of the chief justice, Sir L. Peel, in improved health; and a faint agitation respecting the ice-trade. The commercial reports are still satisfactory in their tone; the markets, both for foreign and country produce, being rather brisk.

The Madras intelligence is barren. From Bombay there is no dearth of noticeable matters. Both the Governor and the Commander-in-Chief were at the Presidency; the place was, however, dull, Lord Falkland not having, since his return from the Deccan, given the public breakfasts which, in the time of his predecessor, used to bring the society together twice a week. "Parties who wish to make known to the head of the Government that they are still in existence, drive at midday to his lordship's 'marine residence' at Malabar Point, and, having inscribed their names in a book, drive back again." An official notification has appeared, that, as the scheme of awarding prizes for encouraging improvements in the staple agricultural products, and in agriculture generally, of the Bombay Presidency, has resulted in complete failure, no rewards will be given hereafter, and it is thought expedient by Government to abolish the scheme altogether, after the present year. The Bombay Times states that it was found impossible to get anything like a show of competition established, or even samples sent in. The grant allowed by the Government was Rs. 500; it commenced in 1841, and every means were devised to make it available; " collectors everywhere were consulted; the most experienced members of the European and native communities were referred to; prizes of any magnitude, and for any objects that might seem suitable, were assented to, but it was found absolutely impossible to arrange anything like a competition." Great dissatisfaction had been caused by the news that the H.C. steam frigate, Auckland, which took from Bombay the overland mail of the 17th September, arrived at Aden some hours too late for the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer, although the latter had been detained four days at Galle. "The fact is," observes a writer who reports the occurrence, "that for the first four days after leaving Bombay, with an ordinary light wind, we were obliged to steer south, because the Auckland could not make way enough against the swell to enable her to steer. When she was put to it, we averaged 11 to 2 miles per hour, and in a calm, with the boilers nearly bursting, we induced her to go 5 miles an hour; and this is the craft to which the mails are intrusted!" The promoters of the Baroda and Tankaria Railway have been advised that the proper course for them to pursue is to address a letter to the London Board, through the Bombay Committee, requesting them to take up the line as a branch of the Bombay and Callian one. H. H. the Guicowar has agreed to subscribe for a lakh of rupees of shares, and the inhabitants of Baroda and Ahmedabad are willing to put down their names for as many more. Some surprise had been occasioned at the delay in sending out the engineers and other staff connected with the Bombay Railway. "A month has already been lost." says the Bombay Telegraph, "which would have been available for active operations, and it would seem that another at least is likely to pass away before the 'first sod' of the railway can be turned. This is to be regretted, as there is no time like that between October and April for field-work in India. With the heats of May, efficient labour must in a great measure cease, and from June to September the monsoon will, of course, put a complete stop to out-of-door operations." The female schools, established by the students of the Literary and Scientific Society, have been opened, and, judging from the state of things on the first day of their career, bid fair to realize the anticipations of their founders. Not only were the parents who had promised to send their daughters to the school true to their word, but many others, who had made no such promise, brought their little girls for the purpose of receiving tuition. The numbers in attendance were increasing every day; the schools open are four Parsee and two Hindoo, and the average number of pupils is twelve at each, or seventy-two in all.

The ferment at the Cape of Good Hope, caused by the attempt to introduce convicts into that colony, contrary to the wishes of the inhabitants, continued at the date of the latest advices, the 19th October. At that time, the colonists, by what they term their "quiet and determined mode of resistance,"-namely, combining together to refuse supplies to the Government establishments, the army and navy, and stigmatizing those who manifested a more loyal spirit as "traitors,"—had, on the one hand, reduced the Government to temporary straits, and, on the other, exasperated some of the lower classes, whose labour or subsistence the measure had interfered with. In whatever phrases the Anti-Convict party may disguise their opposition. a resolution "to suspend all business transactions with the Government, in any shape and on any terms;" to interdict "merchants, bakers, butchers, shopkeepers, and all other good and loyal people," from dealing with any but private individuals, whom they know to be unconnected with the Government departments; and to recommend that "all shops and stores be closed, as for a solemn fast, except for the accommodation of ordinary private and well-known individuals," touches almost upon the very verge of rebellion. We are forcibly reminded throughout the proceedings of the Anti-Convict Association, of those times in England when a "loyal" Parliament, breathing the utmost respect and deference for the King, were actually levying war against him.

The design of making the Cape a receptacle for transported convicts, it appears from an official notification of Sir Harry Smith, has been abandoned by the Secretary for the Colonies, and it is understood that orders are on their way to the Cape, authorizing the removal of the Neptune, with her hated cargo, to some other shore. There is, therefore, no reason now to apprehend,—especially considering the prudence and judgment displayed by the Governor,—any serious collision between the adverse parties in the colony; and we doubt very much, if it were worth incurring the risk, whether, the main point having been conceded, the colonists would be able to persevere in their system of "stopping the supplies" much longer.

BENGAL.

BENGAL CIVIL FUND.

WE give insertion to the proceedings of a meeting of subscribers to this fund, lately held at Agra, being desirous that those of our readers in the Civil Service, who may have happened not to read these proceedings in the daily papers, should be made aware of the unanimous view taken of the proposed new rules by their brother officers at the north-western capital of the presidency:—

At a meeting of civil servants, held at Agra, for the purpose of taking into consideration the proposed modifications in the Civil Fund Rules.—Present: G. P. Thompson, H. S. Boulderson, A. W. Begbie, J. S. Boldero, T. J. Turner, R. H. S. Camphell, G. F. Edmonstone, W. Muir, C. B. Denison, and H. B. Thornhill, Esqrs.

Mr. Thompson in the chair.

It was proposed by Mr. Begbie, seconded by Mr. Edmonstone, and carried nem. con.

That this meeting do approve of the alterations in the principles and rules of the Bengal Civil Fund, proposed by the Committee in Calcutta, and are of opinion that they will in their operation be beneficial to the service at large.

Proposed by Mr. Begbie, seconded by Mr. Boulderson, and carried nem. con.

That this meeting, through their chairman, do convey to the Committee in Calcutta their grateful acknowledgments for the labour they have gratuitously bestowed in the preparation of their lucid and satisfactory report.

Proposed by Mr. Begbie, seconded by Mr. Edmonstone, and carried nem. con.

That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the principal mofussil and Calcutta newspapers, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Committee for their information, with a letter from the Chairman expressing the sense of this meeting that the wording of Article VIII. admits of being made clearer.

The Agra civilians have acted most judiciously on the occasion, and their example is one which we should be glad to see imitated at every station throughout the Presidency where there are two or three subscribers to form a meeting. The measure submitted to the service is one of fundamental importance to all, whether married or unmarried, and it is therefore extremely desirable, not only that the determination of the service to adopt the principle of the new rules, for the sake of the preponderating balance of advantages they hold out, should be as nearly as possible unanimous, but that this determination should be unanimously expressed. It will greatly strengthen the hands of the general meeting, in dealing finally with the question, to be assured of the degree in which their proceedings harmonise with the general sense of the subscribers, a vast majority of whom are necessarily prevented from taking part. in the discussion. The members of the committee would have been more than mortal if they had produced a draft code of rules free from all imperfection and open to no amendment. We ourselves have already commented on the injustice of curtailing the allowances granted to the families of those who are compelled by sickness to retire on reduced annuities; the Agra civilians have pointed out an obscurity in the wording of the 8th Article, though we may remark in passing that it is lucidity itself compared with the clause in the Bombay rules from which it has been adopted; and there are no doubt other errors both of omission and commission which will occur to many on a careful perusal of the report and its appendices. These trivial blemishes need not and ought not to prevent the decided expression of what we believe to be the almost universal feeling of the civil service in favour of the main principle of the new rules, namely, "that the pensions receivable from the fund by the families of deceased subscribers shall be irrespective of private property;" but it is incumbent upon all to assist the general meeting with suggestions on every doubtful point, in order that if the rules are again referred to the committee for the reconsideration of details, the points to which their attention is to be directed may be clearly understood and defined.

There is one very important argument in favour of remodelling the rules of the Bengal Civil Fund on the principle above mentioned, to which the committee have not alluded, and which perhaps if introduced into their report might have savoured of We allude to the effect the new rules are likely to clap-trap. have upon the rate of promotion in the service, the slowness of which has of late years been much complained of, and which the provisions of the Annuity Fund would seem to be of themselves insufficient to accelerate to the desired pitch. We had occasion to notice this subject a fortnight ago, in connexion with the difficulty which the members of the Bombay service have of saving enough in twenty-five years, of which three are spent on furlough, to make up the 50,000 Rs. which they are required to pay as the half value of their retiring annuity. The members of the Bengal Civil Service in general seem at the present day to be no better off than their Bombay brethren, if we may judge by the number of available but untaken annuities which are said to have accumulated. But there is no doubt acconsiderable number of civilians, who, after twenty-five years' considerable number of civilians, who, after twenty-live years service, find themselves possessed of a small property, the fruits of their own economy, or perhaps acquired by inheritance, but who remain in India for the purpose of rendering their families independent of the Civil Fund as it is now constituted, and providing for their support more than the bare subsistance which the fund can afford. To such persons, when the support from the fund becomes an addition to, instead of a deduction from, their private means, the inducements to retire to their native country will be greatly strengthened, and the service will most likely profit by their retirement at least two or three years sooner than would otherwise be the case.

Our correspondent "Agitator" returned to the charge last week, and we published his letter. He again assumes that it is proposed by the new rules to tax the unmarried for the benefit of the rich married subscribers, and we must again assure him, on the authority of the committee's report, that this assumption isaltogether unfounded. The increased rate of half per cent. required from unmarried subscribers is no more than they would have to pay for the assured support of present and prospective incumbents under the existing rules of the fund, which "Agitator" admits is a charitable fund. For anything more than that -for the assurance of fixed pensions to those who are either wholly or partially independent of support, on charitable grounds —it is proposed to tax the married men alone. The unmarried men are, therefore, only called upon, as at present, to contribute towards the support of those families who have insufficient property of their own; and the married men are invited to provide the additional means necessary to assure equal pensions to all. No bachelor, therefore, can have any just cause of complaint; and no married man, who is able to appreciate duly the interest of himself and his family, can hesitate to support so advantageous a proposal.

So far from proposing to dispense with the assistance of an actuary, the committee expressly state that an actuary must be consulted, and they point out the steps to be taken for collecting "the materials necessary to enable him to report fully and satisfactorily on the state of the institution." The committee are evidently, and not unnaturally, impressed with a sense of the advantages enjoyed by the Bombay service, in consequence of the reform introduced into the affairs of their fund twenty years ago, and a desire to extend to their own service with the least possible delay the benefits of a similar improvement. They, therefore, simply ask the subscribers to act upon the experience of the Bombay fund, and to do that which the Bombay service did boldly and successfully without any experience at all. They ask them at once to adopt the only just and equitable principle on which such a fund can exist; and to provide by an additional contribution the means which, on a liberal estimate, are thought sufficient to carry that principle into effect, leaving the accurate calculation of probabilities for future adjustment by a professional actuary.

We beg to remind subscribers that the special general meeting for the consideration of the rules will be held on the 12th of October, and that they should lose no time in forwarding their votes to the secretary .- Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAILS. - The Precursor, with the mails of 25th August, arrived on the 8th, and the Bombay Express, with English news to the 7th September, in the evening of the 18th October.

Furlowers.—Messrs. O. W. Malet, G. M. Berford, D. Cunliffe, J. Wheeler, and W. H. Brodhurst, of the civil service, have applied for furloughs.

THE BENARES BANK, some twelve days ago, paid in liquidation twenty per cent. to all shareholders who have paid up their shares in full.

RAJAH OF SUMBHULPORE.—Letters from Chota Nagpore inform us that the Rajah of Sumbhulpore died on the 10th ult., from dysentery, after a protracted illness. He leaves no heirs behind him, and Government, it is supposed, will at once assume the direct management of that country. Its revenues are said to be considerable, and the district of great extent, adjoining those where the Meriah sacrifices prevail. The extension of British rule to these comparatively unknown and barbarous regions will materially tend to check these cruel sacrifices. - Mofussilite, Oct. 9.

THE Barham, on her passage out, sailed 9,522 miles in fortyfive days, making an average of 2111 miles per diem.

COURTS-MARTIAL are, it seems, the order of the day. one on Major Cooke, of the 17th N.I., has, we are informed, terminated; another is to be held on Capt. Mackenzie, of the 2nd European regiment, and Lieut.-col. Steele has been summoned as a witness from Mussooree. A third is sitting, or about to do so, at Rawul Pindee, on another officer of H. M.'s 53rd foot, and we presume that two more will be held at Feerozpoor, while another is spoken of at Jullundhur. - Delhi Gazette, Oct. 17.

H. M.'s 75TH REGIMENT.-We are concerned to learn from Allahabad of the sickness that prevails among H. M. 's 75th regiment lately arrived there. Our correspondent says, upwards of thirty men have died within the last few days, and at the time of writing nearly a hundred were in the hospital. It is to be hoped that the removal of the men into tents (which has been ordered) will cause a cessation of the epidemic. Dr. Maxwell's remedy for the cholera has, it appears, been tried with great success.

Mofussilite, Oct. 4.
The Ship "Emily," of 500 tons, from Calcutta to Mauritius, was totally lost on a small island on the western side of the Andaman group on the 1st of September. Five of [the crew were drowned, and the second mate, whose name we do not know, was left on the wreck, which he refused to leave. The captain, with Mr. Horsburgh (the chief mate), Mr. Allhu. sen (a passenger), and the rest of the crew, reached the shore, but were driven off by the natives, who were armed with bows and arrows. After lying inside the breakers for a whole night, the pinnace, with the captain, Mr. Allhusen, and two Europeans and seven natives, parted company with the long-boat and put out to sea with four gallons of water in an oil tin, one pan of beef, one barrel of pork, a blanket for a sail, no compass, and no shelter of any kind. It was the captain's intention to make the Coco islands, but after thirteen days of extreme suffering from exposure and hunger they made the mainland about forty miles west of Rangoon. The sufferers were here treated with great kindness by the natives, and forwarded to Rangoon where they all arrived in safety. Nothing had been heard of the long-boat with the mate and remainder of the crew. The captain thought they would endeavour to make the Coco islands. They had on board six or eight pieces of beef and a few gallons of water which the natives had saved in their handles. - Hurkaru.

Two Officers have fought a duel at Nainee Tal, and one of them has been severely wounded. Their names are not given. It is said that the parties will not be brought to a court-martial. but we can scarcely believe this.—Hurkaru.

New South Wales Horses.—The first instalment of New South Wales horses, imported per Coromandel, has sold at an average of Rs. 456 each, which is considered a very fair return in the present overstocked condition of the market. The second instalment brought 476 each.

EXCHANGE OF CASHMERE FOR PESHAWUR. - There is a rumour. though how far credible we cannot say, that Sir Henry Lawrence has proposed to Golab Singh to exchange Cashmere for Pesha-The only object of such an exchange would be to place Golab Singh as a "buffer" between Affghanistan and the British dominions.

CAPT. RICHARDSON, having, after some fifteen years' service in the Education Department, been driven to resign the post of principal to the Hindu College, has not been deemed worthy of mention in the Guzette. Our contemporaries have alluded to this slight as more injurious to those who could resort to it, than to him whom it was intended to mortify. The council will find that educated men will not troop so readily to take summons, as is imagined, if studious insult is to be added to neglect and injury. It may be that to give English literature a predominant place in the curriculum of Indian colleges has been discovered to be a mistake; it may be that causes of dissatisfaction in regard to discipline are entertained by the council; it may be that a new Pharaoh has risen, who knows not Joseph or his worksbut all these, and ten times more, would not justify a display of indignation to the extent of a departure from official precedent. The rawest ensign that changes his regiment at his own request has the event commemorated in the Gazette; the Sudder Ameen who gets leave for the Dusserah vacation is put immediately into print; but the man of education, who has acquired a high literary reputation for himself, and diffused an acquaintance with English literature among hundreds of native youth, sinks into official oblivion as soon as he tenders the resignation to which he is driven by something approaching persecution. This is petty and undignified, and will not be without its reward - Eastern Star, Oct. 20. - The Friend of India, speaking of the resignation by Capt. D. L. Richardson, of the Hindu College principalship, and the appointment of Mr. Lodge in succession, says, "We have heard, though the report seems scarcely credible, that the students of the Hindu College have threatened to quit that insti-tution unless he is restored." With the intimate acquaintance possessed by our contemporary of the habits of the native community; with his own experience of the readiness with which the youth of this country become attached, where their regard is once drawn by intelligence of the highest order and kindness of a more than ordinary description, we wonder that he can perceive any thing strange in the report. - Indian Times, Oct. 22. We copy an article from the Eastern Star, relative to the recent change of the principal of the Hindu College and the manner in which it was announced, in order to shew the una-nimity of the press on the subject. It is unnecessary for us to say more on the impolicy, the injustice, and the littleness of the proceeding we refer to; but we intend to watch over the fantastic tricks of power, which the heads of our educational department seem disposed to play, and to show them up occasionally for the edification of the public, and the information of the supreme authority in India.—Hurkaru, Oct. 23.

NATIVE DEBTORS AND CREDITORS.

We alluded a short time since to a case in the course of argument before the judges of the Sudr Adawlut, in which a soucar, residing at Hyderabad, sought to recover from a member of the same fraternity four lakhs, for money lent, in the first instance, for the use of the Nizam, and duly recovered by the defendant, who borrowed it from the plaintiff on his own responsibility, but forgot to return it. Ramasawmy Moodelliar was, it appears, born in the town of Arcot, and transplanted when very young to the commissariat service. Ramasawmy, who possessed talents, ambition, and opportunity, bought houses in Secunderabad, left the service of the Company, and became collector of the Nizam's city revenues; entertained Arabs in his service, who made no scruple of roasting his enemies when they were troublesome; grew to be on familiar terms with British gentlemen more notorious for their possession of rank than for their command of rupees; and, in short, occupied exactly the position which a native may hold in this country who has money and knows how to make use of it. It happened in 1841-2 that the Nizam was in want of cash, but as his Highness is always in that predicament, it will be enough to say that Ramasawmy chanced at the period in question to be a part of the machinery employed to relieve him from his little difficulties. The prince was, however, at that time, choice in the selection of creditors, and one Poorun Mull, who was quite willing to accommodate him, was led to suppose that the Nizam would only take his money under the cloak of an alias. Ramasawmy proposed himself willing to act as a friendly medium, and the sum of Rs. 400,000 was accordingly deposited in his hands for the use of the Sirkar, the ostensible borrower taking care to obtain repayment in due sea-Of course, Poorun Mull, with many expressions of thanks, asked for a re-transfer of the coin, when he had ascertained that the Nizam had sent it to his old acquaintance, but Ramasawmy had made no stipulation about paying back, and hence declined compliance with the request. The unhappy Poorun found himself in a dilemma. He could not cite his faithless debtor in the Queen's or Company's Courts, for both parties were out of the jurisdiction; and if he sought redress before a tribunal instituted by the Nizam's government, he knew that Ramasawmy would plead that he was a British subject, born at Arcot, and actually residing and carrying on business within the limits of a British cantonment. Hence there was no course left open to him but that of preferring his claim before the Military Court of Requests at Secunderabad, the Act XI. of 1843 giving to these Courts the power of deciding suits to any amount, when the defendant can be proved to carry on any trade or business within the limits of a military bazaar. Preliminary proceedings were accordingly set on foot, but the officers who would be called upon to try the case were very diffident as to the extent of their authority. sawmy was known to be rich and very obliging, but nobody worthy of belief could say that he was engaged in transactions which would bring him within the meaning of the law referred to. The police knew nothing upon the subject, and the rest of the authorities, having no official knowledge of the matter, were not, of course, justified in drawing upon their respective stores of private information. There was certainly the brick and chunam testimony of a couple of dwelling-houses, a pagoda, and a dharmsola, in favour of his amenability, and a score or two of soucars, double that number of debtors, and an indefinite amount of dealers in all kinds of merchandize, who were ready to testify, and who ultimately did aver, that Ramasawmy bought and sold money and goods whenever he could find a chance of profit; but all the witnesses were insufficient to override the conviction in the mind of the brigadier and his officers that he was not a banker or a trader. They declined to meet, and it became necessary to exercise the power of the Sudr Adawlut, through an order of the Governor in Council, to compel the formation of a Court to try the case, which was at length entertained on the 6th July, Col. Blundell presiding on the occasion. Having been duly constituted, the Court proceeded to try the preliminary question of its own right of jurisdiction, with the view, no doubt, of saving the defendant the labour of cross-examining the evidence in support of the claim, and adducing his proofs of nonliability when it came to his turn to be heard. They called Maj. Trotter, the superintendent of police at Secunderabad; Capt. Gardiner, assistant commissary-general, Hyderabad subsidiary force, and Vellore Ramasawmy, brother of the defendant,—all of whom deposed in his favour. The vakeel on the opposite side handed in a paper, upon which the decision was as follows: "The Court, having attentively considered the statement handed in by the plaintiff, decide that the same cannot be received, it being irrelevant, with the exception of that part wherein it is stated that the plaintiff is prepared to prove that the defendant has carried on business as a banker, and has traded in shawls and gold coins, and if this part is re-written the Court will re-Further; if the plaintiff will hand in a list of those persons with whom the defendant had so traded, as also who are stated can prove the fact of the defendant having so traded, the Court will use its discretion as to the examination of those persons." Evidence of the most overwhelming kind was adduced to prove that Ramasawmy was a soucar and merchant. He had sued and obtained verdicts as such in the very Court which was now investigating its rights to interfere with him. If any proof existed in favour of his plea of exemption, it could have been had on the spot from the mouths of a host of witnesses, who could in that case have easily shown the perjury committed by the opposite side; but nothing would satisfy the members of the tribunal as to the reality of their power in this Col. Browne, the military secretary of the Madras Government, had written to the brigadier, by order of Sir Henry Pottinger, pointing out that the question of jurisdiction had already been affirmed by the highest law authority,-that of the Sudr Adawlut,-but the Court of Requests knew better. They were not going to do an illegal act, and meddle in matters which did not concern them; and so they decided in favour of their scruples, that "Ramasawmy, Moodeliar, not being a person of the description mentioned in Section II. of Act XI. of 1841, the Court dismisses the suit."-Athenaum, Oct. 13.

JUDICIAL PERJURY OF NATIVES.

The time has long since arrived when a necessity for attempting to repress the commission of perjury in our Supreme Court is acknowledged on all sides. The experience of every session shows that, so far as the action of law against a wealthy criminal is in question, its proverbial uncertainty is altogether done away There is no room at all for the operation of chance in the matter; the final verdict becomes a mere affair of rupees. If the offender does not hesitate to use his purse, he is certain to save his person. A regular tariff appears to be established for the purchase of consciences, so that no matter however po-sitive and overwhelming the nature of the evidence originally brought forward in support of the accusation, the prosecution is sure to break down, either from the want of direct testimony, or from the absence of material witnesses. or from the absence of material witnesses. The system is now so thoroughly understood, that no one expects to hear of a conviction in those cases where the prisoner is wealthy and the main evidence rests with natives. The judges anxiously cast about for legal weapons with which to overcome this impediment in the way of justice, but the general complaint is of the utter inefficiency of the law as regards prosecutions for perjury. so difficult to bring the offence home to the false witness, however strong the moral conviction of his guilt, that in nineteen out of twenty cases the offenders escape with the useless admo. nition not to repeat the experiment. At home, it is usual, when doubts are entertained as to the fidelity with which witnesses will discharge their ultimate duty to society, to retain them under surveillance until the day of trial; but here the corruption is so universal, and the frequency of doubtful cases so overwhelming, that were a similar plan adopted, it would be necessary to build a new wing to the principal jail, and forbid all intercourse on the part of its inmates with members of the outside world. Now and then an example, such as that made by Sir William Burton, in the case of Auroomootoo, Moodeliar, against whom an indictment for perjury, resulting in a conviction, was preferred by the order of the judge a few months since, is exhibited; but such occurrences are too feeble and too solitary to create terror in the minds of the community at large. What is wanted is an enactment, framed specially with a view to the repression of the crime of false swearing, as practised in India. It should be sharp, short, and terribly decisive, and should leave no obvious loophole for the escape of palpable criminals. There may be difficulties in shaping such a law, but any amount of trouble, if it could be made effectual for the overthrow of the present fearful state of things, would be amply compensated by its results .- Athenaum.

THE EMIGRATION TO BOURDON. - Information has been received this morning from Coringa, stating that M. Bedier, who had occupied himself in engaging coolies at Yanam, for Bourbon, was under arrest by order of the collector, for having engaged in an illicit traffic. Another version of the matter has it that M. Bedier surrendered himself a prisoner, claiming the protection of his own Government, by whose permission he had proceeded to Yanam, for the purpose of procuring emigrants. It is supposed that this affair will occasion a delicate correspondence between the British and French Governments, as the coolies, when stopped, appear to have been on board a French boat, bearing the Republican flag.—Spectator, Oct. 17.

Mysorn.—A letter from Mysore contains the following:-" Have you heard of a very serious difference between an officer holding high office in these parts and a very distinguished functionary to whose friendship the former owes his present lucra-tive post? In connexion with this unpleasant affair, Mysore will shortly be honoured with the presence of a Baronet, who is expected up here, I am told, to mediate between his brother and that gentleman's justly offended superior. Report has it that the commissioner is on much more friendly terms with the rajah of late." – U. S. Gazette, Oet. 16.

SHIPMENTS OF COOLIES TO BOURBON .- According to the Manritius Mail, the shipments from the French port have been extensive, to a degree much beyond what we were prepared to understand. "On the 30th of June," says that journal, "7,500 Indians were expected [at Bourbon], and we believe are now arrived. The cost of introduction is not far above ten dollars:" a circumstance suggestive of very strong suspicion regarding the numbers conveyed in each ship. If this statement be authentic, the necessity for legislative interference is very pressing. Since the date above mentioned, further shipments of labourers bave taken place, and the traffic still proceeds with activity, if we may judge by the information that reaches the police. Several parties have recently been brought before our magistrates, and subjected to heavy fines, for assisting to decoy British subjects to Pondicherry, and it is noticeable that they have agreed in representing Mauritius as the destination whereto the coolies, at the time of their engagement, are ostensibly consigned. Now assuming that deception is really practised on the poor natives, with reference to this point, the aspect of the matter becomes graver. and the consequent responsibility of the French Government more serious, than has hitherto been supposed. The authorities here are bound to ascertain, as far as may be practicable, both the precise number of emigrants departed, and the proportion of males to females among them, in order that the working of the system may be fully understood. As the case now stands, there is reason to apprehend the existence of fraudulent practices, on the part of the agents employed by the Pondicherry shippers, to collect emigrants from the British provinces, and the proof of this would greatly strengthen any remonstrance that may be addressed to the Republican Government, with the view of prevailing upon them to suspend the illicit emigration .- Madras Spectator, Sept. 19.

NATIVE ARISTOCRATICAL INSOLVENTS. — The Madras Athenaeum relates an instance, of no very ancient date, in which fraud and impudence, supported by rank and influence, have boldly demanded, in the Insolvent Court of the Presidency, the immunity designed only for honest poverty and misfortune, and having undergone a legal purification, swaggered out in all and more than all the dignity of the purest innocence:—"It is scarcely six months since that a Mahomedan, nearly related to the Nabob, came up for a first and final examination. The opposing creditor had been thoroughly swindled to the extent of his claim, but the man was dismissed without a word of admonition. He made his bow to the Court and the assembled creditors, passed through a double rank of servants attired in the royal liveries of Chepauk, and preceded by two men carrying silver sticks, stepped from the door into a handsome carriage drawn by four beautiful ponies, and returned to his master free from trouble or incumbrance. A score of similar cases might be quoted from the experience of the last year."

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE EXPRESS, with the London mail of September 24, reached Bombay on October 31.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF and Staff returned to the Presidency on November 2. The stay of the gallant general, however, was expected to be but brief.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHOY has presented Rs. 5,000 to the fund for the support of European pensioners at Bombay.

SIR ERSKINE PERRY completes the term of Indian service next year, and will retire on his pension.

CURRENTS OF THE INDIAN OCEAN.—We understand that an officer of the Indian navy is at present engaged in constructing current and tidal charts of the Indian Ocean, similar to those prepared some time ago by Lieut. Maury, of the United States navy .- Telegraph, Nov. 3.

H. M.'s 22ND Foor would (states the Bombay Times) be transferred to the Bengal Presidency. The entire regiment has quitted the province for Lahore, where it is believed it will for the present be stationed. The regiment was to march as far as Sukkur, where it would embark and ascend the Indus and Sutlej as far as Ferozepore, and thence cross over to the Sikh capital.

DR. AND MRS. FOGERTY'S CASE. - The investigation at Tanna into the Trombay shooting case, closed Oct. 24, when both Dr. and Mrs. Fogerty were committed to take their trial in the Supreme Court for the offence charged against them. Dr. Fogerty entered into a long review of the evidence. Mrs. Fogerty said nothing in her own defence. The defendants were both committed for trial at the next sessions of the Supreme Court; and were admitted to the same bail as formerly taken.

INSOLVENT COURT REFORMS. - In the Insolvent Court on the 22nd Oct., Sir E. Perry gave notice of the fees of the Court having been assimilated to those ruling at Calcutta, which are much more favourable to the creditors of insolvents than those formerly in force. His lordship also noticed the practice prevalent in Bombay, of rich suitors engaging all the counsel procurable, thus leaving their poorer opponents to manage their suits the best way they can for themselves.

FAILURE OF THE AGRICULTURAL PRIZE SCHEME. - The grant of Rs. 5,000 allowed by Government to the Agricultural Society of Westen India, under sanction of the Court of Directors, for prizes for agricultural produce, has been discontinued,—the prize scheme having (states the Bombay Times) proved a failure.

SCHOOLS FOR NATIVE FEMALES .- The Literary and Scientific Society of Bombay, an association chiefly of educated Hindus and Parsees, has resolved on the establishment of eight schools for the instruction of native females in that island,—four of them for the education of Parsee, and four for Hindu girls. For the former, seventy pupils have already offered themselves; and for the latter, forty-three.

THE OFIUM GAMBLING CASE. - The Bombay journals report that the opium gambling case has assumed a new aspect. has been submitted to the Supreme Court that, as both parties in the suit are Hindus, the question must be tried by Hindu law, and that the Shastras forbid wagers.

SAY HOW MUCH .- The Commander-in-Chief of India is determined not to be put off with generalities; he will not have this or that general assurance that a man needs a good income to live well-that a spendthrift will require more than a good economist-that a careful man may live within his means, a marrow man save money from his pay. He has sent round to the officers commanding Queen's corps in India the following queries, which, if fully answered,—and the hero of Meanee is not a man to be trifled with or put off,—will provide a mass of gastronomic statements such as may fairly claim the credit of being unique:—"lst. What is the lowest monthly sum for which an officer can live comfortably at the mess of the regiment under your command? 2nd. Of such sum, what proportion is for messing, what for wine, and what for extras? 3rd. Is drinking wine compulsory on any, and what, occasions? 4th. What are the extra expenses, meaning such as are either compulsory by mess rule or obligatory by custom?"—Bombay Times.

THE MOPLAS. - The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette affirms that the Moplas, who have lately disturbed the country around Malliapooram, compose a portion of a fanatic Moosulman tribe, supposed to be descended from Arabs who have settled on that Their number is estimated at 100,000, and the fanatic bravery which they have displayed on several occasions may make them formidable even to the British Government, unless timely measures are adopted to prevent an outbreak. Their leaders are already threatening, and an attempt has been made to rouse their superstitious fears, by declaring that the Government intends to pull down all the mosques in the country.

SLAVES IN BOMBAY .- The Bombay Times, whilst inveighing against the "anti-slavery fanatics," for extending their ope tions to the eastern shores of Africa, those of Arabia, the Red Sea, and Persian Gulf, observes:—"Our aversion to traffic in human flesh, or to the idea of property in human thews and sinews, is as hearty and cordial as can be; but it stops short at the point where efforts to work out a sound principle in reality introduce a much greater amount of evil and suffering than they We trust a Liberia will come to be provided for eradicate. those we capture and emancipate: it will be but a sorry boon for the victims we propose to release, if we only prevent them becoming the slaves or servants of their kinsfolk in countries and amongst people kindred to their own, to make them the slaves of strangers. We believe that in Bombay itself the slaves now existing may be numbered by hundreds or thousands, yet no one complains; we have no official knowledge of the fact, and there the matter rests, and ought to rest."

BOMBAY (Nov. 3.)—The amount of business done in Imports has not been to such a large extent as was expected; still considerable sales have taken place, and the market has presented a tolerably healthy aspect. The amount of supplies from Home to hand during the past fortnight has been small,—only two vessels having arrived during that period.

CEYLON.

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL was opened by the Governor, on the 18th September, with the following speech

"Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,-It is highly satisfactory to me to be able to congratulate you on the continuance of that perfect tranquillity in all parts of the island which I announced to you at the close of the last Session of the Legislative Council. I have reason to believe that the benevolent intentions of the Government, and its anxious desire to promote the prosperity of all classes of the people, are daily becoming more perfectly understood and more justly valued; and that the full development of the resources of the island is found to be inseparable from the maintenance of the public peace and the cultivation of mutual good-will among the inhabitants. The most gratifying evidence of this fact is offered to you, by the increased amount and value of the exported produce of the island, and by the improved tone of the public finances. Between the 11th October, 1848, and the 13th September, 1849, upwards of 362,000 cwts. of coffee have been exported, and 526,000 lbs. of cinnamon, so that, on the completion of the twelve months ending 10th October next, a much larger trade in these articles will be exhibited than at any other similar period. There is every prospect, also, that the crops of the coming season will be fully equal to those of the last; and from the early arrival of Malabar coolies from the coast, there is reason to hope that abundance of labour will be at the command of the producer.

"I observe, however, with much regret, that in certain districts the cultivation of the grain crop has been injuriously affected by the unfavourable state of the weather, and that a partial failure of the harvest has been the consequence.

"The revenue of the first six months of the current year has exceeded the estimate for the same period by the sum of 10,8371., while the expenditure has fallen short of the estimated amount by the sum of 10,110/. The apparent excess of income over expenditure for the half-year ending 30th June was 13,2571., but inasmuch as it will be necessary to make good the amount of the military contribution for which no provision was made in the Supply Ordinance of 1849, and from the payment of which H. M. Government have not yet consented to relieve the colonial finances, the surplus revenue will be reduced by the transfer of the 12,000l. for the half year to the military chest, to the sum of something more than 1,200l. At the same time it must be observed, that large payments have been made during this period for colonial stores for the public departments.

"Notwithstanding the injurious mercantile crisis of the past year, and the many unforeseen causes which were calculated temporarily to disturb the ordinary current of internal prosperity, the total income of the year was nearly equal to that of 1846, and total income of the year was hearly equal to that of Avio, and only fell short of the revenue of 1847 by about 25,000*l*., although the actual surrender of revenue by the abolition of the export duties during the last four months of the year entailed a loss of The expenditure of the year 1848, notwithstanding the unlooked for demands upon the public revenue consequent upon the movement of troops and other unusual charges which were rendered necessary by the peculiar circumstances of the time, was less than the expenditure of the year 1847 by the sum of 13,4381. It cannot be a matter of surprise, however, that it slightly exceeded the income of the year, and you will be gratified to learn that the excess amounted to only 16,5591.

"The estimates for the ensuing year have been prepared with the utmost care and economy, and, after making a very moderate calculation of the probable revenue to be received, I have every confidence that it will amply suffice to meet the entire expenditure, including the military contribution. Indeed, I have every hope that further reductions will continue to be effected without detriment to the public service, and that the real amount of expenditure will be kept considerably below the estimates of the

"A Committee of the Executive Council has been employed by my direction, in consequence of instructions from the Secretary of State, in preparing a scheme for the remodelling of the various public establishments, and for effecting such reductions in their cost as appeared consistent with their efficiency.

"Taking a broad view of the general aspect of affairs in this island, I think I am fully justified in looking forward to a progressive increase of prosperity in all branches of public industry, intimately blended as they are the one with the other."

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

A dispute has arisen between the Government of the Sandwich Islands and the French Consul, M. Dillon, who had for some time been at loggerheads with the Government. The arrival of a French. frigate and a war steamer at Honolulu induced M. Dillon to make certain demands upon the Government, threatening them with force in case of non-compliance. The demands were:

"1. A reduction of duties on brandles and liquors of one-half of all such duties as have been collected since 1846. 2. The same rights to Catholics and their schools as are granted to Protestants. 3. The repeal of a law which compels whale ships importing liquous for sale to pay port charges. 4. The remission of a fine imposed upon some captain of a whale ship. There were some minor demands relative to redress and satisfaction for indignities and insults offered to the French republic."

Three days were allowed for the Government to comply or refuse. The King being absent, the Admiral waited until his return, when the Government refusing to comply with the demands, the French troops landed and took possession of the fort. No resistance being offered, the French spiked and threw from the ramparts the guns of the fort, destroyed the ammunition and public stores, and took possession of all the Hawaiian vessels that were in port. The Hawaiian flag was lowered and the French hoisted. After the quiet possession of the fort for three days, the French abandoned it, and retired on board their vessels, which shortly afterwards left the port, taking with them M. Dillon and family, who intended returning to France vid New York. The British who intended returning to France was New York. The British Consul General and the American Consul protested against the action of the French forces; the former offered his services as mediator, but they were refused. The general impression was that M. Dillon had exceeded his powers.

MADAGASCAR.

The abolition of slavery throughout the French colonies has been attended with melancholy consequences at Nossi Bé, a small island on the N.W. coast of Madagascar, colonized by the French in 1840. The following account of the affair is given by the Mauritius Mail :-

" Nossi Bé, a small island on the N.W. coast of Madagascar, situated very near the main land, and a French colony since 1840, has been the scene of grave disasters. As soon as the emancipation of slaves was proclaimed, the indigenous proprietors—Sakalaves—left the island and established on the opposite coast of Ankii; from this time hostilities were commenced. The Sakalaves committed nightly depredations; property and cattle pillaged from the establishments of the French colonists were destroyed by fire, and finally two French traders, Messrs. Labrouelle and Wilder, murdered. On the 16th June, 4,000 Sakalaves landed, and meeting dered. On the 16th June, 4,000 Sakalaves landed, and meeting with little resistance, advanced to Hellville, setting fire to the surrounding villages. The French Governor had two pieces of cannon to defend the town, one of which soon became useless, and it was only by firing grape from the other that the assailants were kept in check and obliged to retreat. Lieut. Cottey was killed in attempting to prevent the landing of the Sakalaves. This officer was sent with a detachment of 100 Malgashes, who abandoned him as soon as the enemy approached; he was surrounded and cut down. It is remoured since, that the invaders have made themselves completel masters of the island, and that the French inhabitants have been massacred or have escaped on board the vessels that happened to be massacred or have escaped on board the vessels that happened to be there. The French Government steamer Cassini, the Reine Blanche, and the Artemise have left Bourbon with reinforcements."

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Our files of Cape papers have put us in possession of the occurrences in the colony to the 19th October.

In our last issue we announced the arrival of the Neptune, and the excitement produced thereby amongst the colonists, who prepared to act upon the "pledge," and upon the resolution passed by the Anti-Convict Association, "that no contracts of any description should be entered into for the supply or use of the military, naval, or civil departments, until the Order in Council, making this colony a penal settlement, be rescinded; and that the inhabitants of all classes be strongly recommended to adhere firmly to such resolution, as the only means of saving the colony from injury, degradation, and ruin." The Zuid Afrikaan, of Sept. 24, says: "Threats, so often repeated, must now be carried into effect, and his Excellency, who has long enough trifled with the feelings—the acutely hurt feelings—of the colonists, be in reality made sensible of the impossibility to keep here this mingled mass of villains for any period, however short, unless with the express object of putting the vessel in a position to prosecute the return voyage. This is what the colonists have sworn before God and man to carry out, should their just request be disregarded; and, as this crisis has now unfortunately arrived, they are ready to prove that that oath was something more than blustering, and that they have not in vain lifted up their hands to heaven. They peremptorily refuse—and they are quite right in doing so-to await the determination of a Minister who has entirely forfeited all their confidence, by whom they have been insulted and debased, and from whom they can expect no sympathy. They have now to deal with no one else but the Governor.'

After the reply received from the Governor to the letter of the commissioners and wardmasters of the Cape Town municipality, who had stated that the people had determined "that the convicts must not, can not, and shall not be landed, or kept in any of the ports of this colony," a large open-air public meeting was held in front of the Town House, Mr. Ebden in the chair, when it was resolved to make a further appeal to the Governor, expressing deep regret at his reply to the former application, and stating, "that, under these circumstances, the inhabitants feel compelled by a sense of duty to themselves, their children, their faiends, and their country, and fully justified in the sight of God and man, in the exercise of their undoubted rights and privileges as British subjects, to put into immediate operation those means of self-protection which are expressed in the document called the 'Pledge,' which has been signed by all ranks and classes of her Majesty's loyal subjects in this colony, one of which is, that they 'will drop connection with any person who may assist in supporting convicted felons;' and that these words include all departments of the government by, or through, or under the authority of which supplies of any kind may be conveyed to the Neptune, until that vessel's destination be changed, and until supplies are required to enable her to prosecute her voyage."

To this letter, a very long reply was returned by the Gover-nor's private secretary, in which he stated that "it is with un-affected pain his Excellency perceives that the common cause of the whole colony is in danger of being jeopardized by demands which no government could concede, supported by threats to which no government would submit;" that these demands had risen in proportion as he had evinced his willingness to exercise his powers so as, as much as in him lay, to realize the wishes of the community; that "continued attempts had been made to force his Excellency from the position of acting, under the law, in such a manner as to meet all reasonable desires, into the position of acting, in violation of the law, for the purpose of meeting desires altogether unreasonable, by reiterated applications to force the Neptune out of the waters of the colony, to seek a destination wherever the persons in charge of her may, without any lawful orders, and without any authoritative guidance, be able to carry convicts entitled to use force, and, if needful, to take life, in resistance to a detention on the high seas unauthorized by law." The letter examines, in a temperate manner, the various grounds upon which the Governor was urged to send the Neptune to sea; and with reference to the engagement contained in the "pledge," the letter observes: from the complete, all-pervading, and wholly-unprecedented unanimity of opinion which exists throughout the length and breadth of this colony, in reference to the refusal to receive, support, or employ any imported convict, of any sort or description whatsoever, arguments both for and against the 'pledge have been derived. But no right-minded man will deny that the recognition of such a principle, even in such a case, may tend hereafter to arm, for purposes of social tyranny and oppression, the hands of any majority which has an end to gain. Ab-staining, however, from all discussion in regard to the original propriety or impropriety of the pledge in question, his Excellency, considering its terms, its spirit, and the objects in view at the time at which it was devised, feels justified in pronouncing that it will be strained beyond its meaning, if it be sought to be applied to the victualling of the Neptune, whilst the convicts are being kept on board. The precise extent to which the 'pledge' is now sought to be applied, his Excellency is unable to collect from the terms of your letter. But in an address to his Excellency, presented on the 16th July, 1849, and which bore your signature, the subscribers thought it no violation of good feeling and good taste, deliberately to tell his Excellency, that if any gentleman should take office as a legislative councillor, 'without doubt he would be starved.' It is presumed to be now in contemplation by some persons who stand forward as the organs o the Cape community, to 'starve' a number of her Majesty's subjects, because her Majesty's representative,—who yields to none in his desire, by all lawful and expedient means, to convince her Majesty's government that a measure, conceived in a commendable spirit, but wholly inapplicable to the Cape, cannot be carried out in this colony,—will not go beyond what his conscience and his duty dictate,—beyond what the public so long. considered entirely satisfactory,—beyond what is truly judicious for the sake of the cause itself,—and, above all, beyond the law of the land." The letter concludes: "Should his Excellency, however, be disappointed, and an attempt be made, by means of combination and intimidation, to deprive of necessary food a portion of the public guilty of no crime but that of obeying their lawful orders, and peacefully performing their allotted service, it will become his Excellency's imperative duty, supported by the opinion of his executive council,—and he trusts by no small proportion of the rational and well-affected throughout the colony, -to employ the means at his disposal for the purpose of counteracting a course of proceeding so discreditable, illegal, and inhuman."

The reading of this letter at a public meeting on the 24th September, we are told, produced "occasional outbursts of laugh er and indignation." Subsequently, the substance of a private letter from Earl Grey to Sir H. Smith, dated 23rd July, was made public, in which his Lordship, after expressing his regret as to the opposition of the colonists to the general measure of convict transportation to this colony, intimated that that system was in consequence abandoned; but expressed a hope that, by making this concession to the feelings of the colonists, no opposition will be manifested towards receiving the convicts by the Neptune, in which event he will send out an equal number of free emigrants, at the cost of the Home Government; but if the colonists persisted in their opposition to receive the convicts by the Neptune, those funds would then necessarily be employed in providing for them. This proposal was "indignantly rejected" at a public meeting held on the 9th October.

Meanwhile the Anti-Convict Association remained firm, and resolved not to relax until it was officially announced that the "pest-ship" would depart. At the public meeting last mentioned, the following resolutions were adopted:—" That it is the duty of all good and loyal subjects of her Majesty, at once, from this day, to suspend all business transactions with the Government, in any shape, or on any terms, until it is officially declared that the Neptune, with the convicts on board, will go away as soon as all necessary supplies for her voyage can be put on board, and that all intercourse and connection between private individuals and his Excellency and heads of the victualling departments, shall be dropped from this day-the merchants, bakers, butchers, shopkeepers, and all other good and loyal people dealing only with such private individuals as they know and clearly understand to be unconnected with those departments by or through which supplies, sufficient to afford a pretext for the detention of the convicts, may possibly be obtained: and that the measures already taken for this purpose being too slow for the urgency of the case, it is recommended, that, after this day, all shops and stores shall be closed, as for a solemn fast, except for the accommodation of ordinary, private, and wellknown customers, that his Excellency may no longer be in doubt as to the impossibility of detaining the Neptune, with her convicts, within the limits of this colony."

Accordingly, all the shops were closed against the supply of provisions to the army, navy, and government departments. The government were obliged to send to Simon's Bay for a supply of biscuit; to seize draught bullocks, and to build ovens for baking bread. A vessel, destined for Port Natal, with flour for the troops at that place, being still in Table Bay, the flour was ordered to be relanded; but no boatman would perform the office, and even the Port-office boat's crew refused, and the boat was manned by soldiers.

In a government notice, dated the 12th of October, the Governor announces that although a number of persons "who utterly repudiate the violent and oppressive proceedings sought to be put in force, by rash and mischievous men, against the army, navy, and civil servants of the government," had caused the Governor to be informed that "they look to him, in the expectation that he will, by strong hand, if necessary, put down the disturbers of this city, and assert the freedom of opinion and action against the existing attempts to harass and intimi-date the reasonable and well-affected," his Excellency, who could, at once, without the slightest difficulty abate what he -frankly states he regards as a serious social nuisance, and set free this city from every sort of thraldom;" and is " far from denying that circumstances might occur to call for the exercise, upon his part, of the power which he possesses;" yet is de-termined "never to resort to even the display of force, until all other means had failed." He observes, that "the inhuman and insolent attempt to deprive of necessary food the army and navy has been defeated by arrangements which place the victualling of those departments beyond doubt; and as some priwate families might suffer inconvenience from the sudden refusal of their tradesmen to supply them with bread and meat, they will be supplied by persons to be appointed for that purpose."

Some slight acts of violence had taken place, but not by the anti-convict party. The houses of Mr. Fairbairn, a prominent member of that party, Mr. Sutherland, and Mr. Norden, had been attacked by mobs, on account of the suspension of supplies. A proclamation issued by the Governor, dated the 18th October—premising that, "so long as the present excitement is kept up, and more especially so long as the labouring-classes are kept in idleness and exposed to privation by the stoppage of trade and business, now sought to be enforced by a dangerous confederacy in this city, all crowds and assemblages congregating in the public streets and thoroughfares are calculated to excite much and well founded alarm in the minds of her Majesty's peaceable and loyal subjects, and are therefore by law illegal"—peremptorily prohibits all mobs or meetings in any pablic thoroughfare, and authorizes the police force, supported, if necessary, by military power, to prevent the formation of all mobs or crowds, and to disperse any such mob or crowd which may happen to have formed, "so as to set free from the present state of intimidation such of her Majesty's subjects as are deterred, by fear of violence in personal property, from transacting their ordinary and lawful business, and so as to preserve, as much as may be, quiet and good order throughout the city, and repress in their origin the excesses to which such irregular and illegal assemblies, in periods of excitement like the present, have a tendency to lead."

SIAM.

A correspondent of the Straits Times writes,-" I regret to say that the cholera, that awful visitation of God, has, in its onward march, reached Bangkok, and made most fearful ravages among its thoughtless multitudes. On Sunday, the 17th of June, a few cases occurred within the city walls and near the palace; by the Tuesday following it had so increased that eighty bodies were taken to a single wat for burning. On Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday it raged so that its horrors are beyond all description. You could not walk out, even for a short distance, without witnessing the dead bodies lying in all directions, and eeing persons attacked while walking from one place to another, who perhaps oftentimes never reached their homes. So great was the number of deaths, that they found it impracticable to burn them all, and many were buried, and multitudes more thrown into the river just as they had died. You may form some conception of the numbers by knowing that in many of the wats 400, or nearly that, were burned in a day. brought and laid in piles and fuel applied, when they were con-*sumed like heaps of logs. No parade; no funeral; no other object but to hasten them away to the wat, where they often were left to be burned by those who would attend to it, or left to putrefy on the ground. Perhaps in the three days last mentioned not fewer than from 2,000 to 3,000 died daily; and at the end of 12 days it was known that more than 20,000 had fallen victims to its fearful ravages. Since that time it has very much abated, but has by no means ceased. Among those who have died were very few of the higher classes; however, among the small number was Khan Khun Bodin, a noble of high rank and great influence, a man of age and experience, who was commander-inchief of his Majesty's forces in the late war with Cochin-China. The mortality is said to have been not so great among the Chimese as among the other portions of the inhabitants. It is thought that within a radius of 25 or 50 miles not less than 30,000 have been swept off by this fatal scourge within the last two or three weeks."

LABUAN.

A letter from Labuan says: "We are progressing but slowly here yet, for such an overstated account of the sickness of the place has gone abroad that few venture to come this way; and yet I do not think that 40 deaths have occurred since the first Englishman set foot on shore; but, truly, it is not the healthiest place in the world. The public offices and guols are all but finished. The Mæander arrived on the 23rd of August. She had been to Manilla, and ran upon a reef near Balambangan, while on her way to this place, but got off again. After taking in coal and water, she will proceed in a few days to Singapore en route to the Pacific. We have no news from Sarawak; the H.C.'s steamer Nemesis and H.M.'s ships Albatross and Royalist are there. By this time I imagine Sir James Brooke's affair with the Sakarran pirates is over. I understand it is his intention shortly to visit some of the numerous rivers between this and Sarawak. The restless and worthless Pangerans at Bruni are carrying on a fine game at present, firing cannon into each other's houses pour passer le temps, with other amusements of a similar description. This month they hold their fast, eating only at might, and keeping constantly within doors. The two Malays mentioned in my last have been executed, which has had its effect on the natives, who all allowed the sentence to have been just; none, not even their relations, would speak to them after their committal, for they said they must have forgotten their God when they committed murder-a hypocritical expression, I fear, for little do the Malays think of a Supreme Being; all their thoughts are how to propitiate the Devil. The Messrs. Motly, agents for the Eastern Archipelago Company, have commenced to work the coal, but until they get a shaft sunk, will not have any stock on hand. They came out overland, leaving their implements to follow them—a very great pity indeed, as a short supply of coal here will seriously affect the colony."-Friend of China.

NETHERLANDS INDIA.

A letter from Batavia of the 26th of September gives some account of a late eruption of Mount Merapia, a volcano in the district of Kadoë, believed to be extinct. The eruption began on the morning of the 14th of September, during a violent hurricane, and lasted until the evening of the 17th. The mountain vomited forth gigantic flames and large quantities of stones and ashes. This matter, impelled by the action of the wind, was apread through the whole district of Kadoë, and also those of Djokjakrata and Soerakarta. At several points the soil was covered with ashes to the depth of three inches. The river of Blongkeng was almost wholly filled up, and it is feared that its waters must overflow in the rainy season. The inhabitants fled, and no life was lost; but the loss of property, including crops of rice, tobacco, and indigo, with whole fields of corn, was immense.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

A great anti-transportation meeting was held at the Circular Wharf, on the 11th June, for the purpose of protesting against the landing in Sydney of convicts arrived by the Hashemy. Upwards of 5,000 persons were present, notwithstanding the torrents of rain which fell at the hour of meeting. Several strong resolutions were passed, with these concluding words: "For these, and many kindred reasons, in the exercise of our duty to our country—for the love we bear our families—in the strength of our loyalty to Great Britain, and from the depth of our reverence to Almighty God, we protest against the landing again of British convicts on these shores."—South Australian Register, July 4.

PERSIA.

Letters from the Persian frontiers of the 14th October, published in the Journal de Constantinople, state that the chiefs of the half-independent tribes of Jelalee, Haideranlee, and Zilanlee, charged with the protection of the frontiers, had quarrelled among themselves, in consequence of which it was feared that no check would be placed on the brigands who infest the road. Prince Hamza Mirza, Governor of Azerbaijan, had vainly attempted a reconciliation, and the tribes were about to have recourse to arms, when Mr. Stevens, the English consul, intervened, and by his conciliating spirit succeeded in inducing them to sign a treaty binding them to peace for the future under pecuniary penalties. The letters add that tranquillity prevailed in the province of Azerbaijan, and that affairs were going on well in Khorassan also, but that, nevertheless, the Government of the Shah was concentrating troops from all parts at Teheran.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

THE Annual Report, made at the general meeting of the Asiatic Society of Paris, presents the customary view of the state and progress of Oriental literature during the year 1848-49.

Mr. J. Mohl, the Reporter, after some prefatory observations upon the obstacles thrown in the way of literary inquiries in Europe by political convulsions, and the dangers incurred by the civilized community, in that disastrous year, referred to the valuable papers which had, nevertheless, appeared in the Journal of that Society. He then notices with commendation the Bibliotheca Indica, a collection of Oriental works published under the superintendence of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, which supplies what Oriental literature at present greatly needs, correct texts, and he regrets that the work is not upon sale in Europe. "A book," he observes, "in whatever part of the world it may appear, is no real acquisition to science, until it is accessible to European scholars." M. Mohl next laments the non-appearance of M. Von Hammer Purgstall's General History of Arabian Literature, a work of immense toil and difficulty, and which will prove of inestimable value. The conclusion of the Essay upon the History of the Arabs before Islamism, by M. Caussin de Perceval, which treats of each of the great Arabian tribes and principalities, and makes additions to the biography of Mahomet,—retaining in its narrative the picturesque style of the original authors,—brings down the history of Arabia to the middle of the Caliphat of Omar, A. D. 640, when the submission of the Mesopotamian tribes accomplished the union of the Arabs into one nation, under the government of a single chief. Ulterior researches, M. Mohl remarks, will probably furnish further historical data, from ancient songs, such as the Divan of the Hoodailites, and from hitherto undiscovered works which there is reason to think still exist in the south of Arabia.

"It is certain that the Himyarite inscriptions conceal facts important to the early history of Arabia, and these inscriptions will infallibly be interpreted as soon as a greater number of copies shall be obtained." This opinion induced the French Government to despatch M. Arnaud to southern Arabia; but his ill-health and the troubles of Yemen have hitherto frustrated his efforts; though hundreds, and probably thousands, of these inscriptions exist. M. Gottwaldt, of St. Petersburg, has published a Latin translation of the Annals of Hamza-Ispahani, A.H. 350, one of the earliest essays made by Arabian literature in universal history based upon a chronological system. Hamza treats in succession of the histories of the Persians, Romans, Egyptians, Jews, and Arabs, and we owe to him extracts of much value from works now lost. Important as these Annals are, they are unhappily imperfect, and it is apparent from the data obtained by Hamza from those historical works on Persia which had survived the Arabian conquest, that the true history of Persia had already perished under the Arsacides and Sassanides, and been replaced by a tradition systematically falsi-The history of the Arabs is likewise the subject of other publications, namely, M. Dozy's collection of unedited Arabian rorks, including a part of Arib's History of Maghreb; and M. Matthiessen's fragment of a history of the khallf Motassem, by an unknown author. Arabian geography has been enriched by several works. M. Wustenfeld has made further progress in his edition of Caswini, the Eastern Pliny, including that author's Marvels of the Creation, a compound of theories and observa-tions, facts and fables. M. Defrémery has published some extracts from the Travels of Ibn Batuta in Persia and Central Asia, comprised in two chapters of the complete work hitherto known only from the abridgment published by Professor Lee.

M. Reinaud has produced, under the title of Memoir, Geographical, Historical, and Scientific, on India, anterior to the eleventh century, compiled from Arabian, Persian, and Chinese writers,-a work of great labour, in which he has combined the materials furnished by Chinese travellers in India, with historical facts derived from Sanscrit literature, - which abounds in matters whence a strong light is diffused upon the moral history of the nation, the origin and development of its ideas and institutions, which form the pith, as mere chronicles constitute the bark, of history. M. Dorn, of St. Petersburg, has published a further portion of his collection of documents respecting the history and geography of the Caucasus, derived from Arab, Persian, and Turkish authors. Arabian jurisprudence has been illustrated by a translation by M. Perron of the Principles of Khalilebn-Ishak, which will assist those who investigate the institutions of the Arabs; it contains the principles of Musulman legislation, civil and religious, according to the Malckite rite.

After noticing a few other works,—including the Corpus Ignatianum, or Letters of St. Ignatius, by M. Cureton; the Apostolical Constitutions, of Mr. Tattam; the work of M. Tuch, of Leipsic, on the inscriptions on the rocks in the Peninsula of Sinai, which are shown by him to be Arabic, and the writers to have been Sabsans, —M. Mohl speaks more at large upon the discoveries made in Mesopotamia, claiming for France the fame of having opened the way to this new avenue to historical science. With respect to the interpretations of the cuneiform inscriptions, he observes that M. Botta has endeavoured to prove the identity of the Babylonian and Assyrian writing, and M. Grotefend appears to have arrived at the same result. M. Saulcy has published a memoir, in which he gives the transcription of a genealogical list of various proper names contained in the inscriptions of Van, with a complete translation of one of the incriptions of Schulz. His interpretation is based upon the supposition that the language belongs to the Semitic family. On the other hand, Sig. Luzzato, of Padua, in a memoir on the Sanscritism of the Assyrian tongue, assures us that he has read, by means of the Sanscrit, most of the Assyro-Persepolitan inscriptions, and some of those of Van and Khorsabad. His theory seems to be, that Babylonia was occupied in the first instance by a Semitic people, and that invaders of the Sanscrit race had, at two several times, imposed themselves upon the original population. The Median inscriptions, which have been read by Major Rawlinson, are the subject of two long memoirs in the Journal Asiatique by M. Saulcy, who, doing justice to the labour of M. Westergaard, has made considerable changes in his alphabet. He concludes, with all who have devoted their attention to the Median language, that its basis is the Turkish, —a curious, but by no means improbable, fact.

In modern Persian literature, M. Mohl mentions with high praise the publication, by Mr. Forbes Falconer, of the text of the Tohfet-al-Akrar, of Jami, the great Persian poet of the fifteenth century, and almost the last who deserves the name of a classic; and Sir H. Elliot's Bibliographical Index to the Historians of Muhammedan India, which, he says, "forms really a history of the historical literature of Musulman India, replete with new and curious matter, and if the author's plan have no other result than the composition of this work, he will have rendered a signal service to science."

In Turkish literature M. Mohl specifies but two works. The first comprises the text, with a translation and commentary, of The Delights of the Mind, a work of Omar ben Suleiman, a Turkish Sufi, who lived in the sixteenth century, printed by M. Krel, at Leipsic. The aim of the author is to reconcile Sufyism with the Koran and the philosophy of Aristotle. The other work is a philological treatise by M. Schott, of Berlin, upon the Finnish-Tartar family of languages of the Altai, in support of the author's hypothesis of the identity of the Turkish with the Finnish race. His notion is, that four branches of the same nation issued from the Altai, who have formed the Tungooses, the Mongols, the Turks, and the Fins.

The labours dedicated to Sanscrit literature have for some years past been almost entirely confined to the Védas, - a zeal which promises to render accessible a monument equally antique and important to the history of the human mind. "Certain European critics," observes M. Mohl, "reproach the Védas with being barren of facts, and it is true that they speak neither of battles, nor conquests, nor famines, nor of that catalogue of calamities which forms the staple of chronicles; but we see there a picture of the origin of civilized society, the first essays of human thought, the germ and earliest shape of ideas which India and Greece elaborated at a later period, and which have become the rule of the human mind. These are more important than material facts; these are moral facts, which have exercised a greater and more durable influence than political events." He notices the progress of the edition of the Rigvéda, confided by the East-India Company to M. Müller, and the translation of that work by M. Langlois; the editions of the Yajur Véda, by M. Weber, of Berlin, and of the Sáma Véda, by M. Benfey, of Göttingen. M. Mohl adverts, in passing, to the publication of the Rigvéda, with a Commentary in Sanacrit and Bengali, in a Bengali journal of Calcutta. The publication of the texts of the  $V\acute{e}das$  is but the first step in this study; they must be accompanied by the Upanishads, a series of which, with a translation, has been commenced in the Bibliotheca Indica. "This grand Vedic study, before which we so long receded, is now advancing with extraordinary rapidity; but many years and many efforts of intellect and knowledge will be requisite to exhaust a source so deep and so abundant."

The Report then notices the publication, by Mr. Trithen, of the Sanscrit play The Máhavira Charitra, by Bhavabhúti, an author of the eighth century, which, like the other dramas by this writer, translated by Professor Wilson, personifies a passion, namely, heroism; and also the Rev. Mr. Garrett's edition of the Bhagavat-Gita, in Sanscrit, Canara, and English, printed at Bangalore. A more extended notice is taken of the great work of Mr. B. H. Hodgson upon the Aborigines of India, which, from the talents of the author and the interest of the subject, M. Mohl thinks, will become an object of eager study in Europe. "It will be a great triumph for comparative grammar," he adds, "to have been able to resolve the problem of the peopling of India before the arrival of the Sanscrit race."

M. Dulaurier has commenced the publication of a Collection of the principal Malay Chronicles, beginning with that of Pasey, on Sumatra. Each of the numerous petty Malay states possesses its chronicle, beginning generally with the conversion of the country to Islamism, and furnishes, from that period, accurate data respecting countries little known. The antiquities of the territories occupied by the Malays are to be sought for in the ancient books written in Kawi, and the conquest of Bali, by the Dutch, will open to the investigations of the learned the only island which has preserved the Indian religious creeds.

Buddhistic literature has made a considerable acquisition in the translation from the Tibetan, by M. Foucaux, of the Roya Tch'er Rol Pa, a legend of Buddha, which is itself a literal version of the Lalita Vistara, a Sanscrit Buddhic work, the last edition of which dates in the second century before our era, and is considered the most authentic account of the life of Sakya Muni. "It is probable," observes M. Mohl, "that the first disciples of Buddha, in promulgating his doctrines after his death, recorded their recollections of the history of their master, which, by degrees, became incorporated with legends, through the remarkable facility with which the Buddhists blend divine and human matters, and interweave real life with anterior existence. This prevalent habit of the sect easily explains the strange shape which the biography of Buddha assumed at an early date; but its mythological legends do not falsify the natural and human portion of the tradition." M. Schiefner, of St. Petersburg, has published an interesting memoir on this effort of modern Buddhistic science, in Tibet, to collect all that antiquity has left respecting the history of the founder of Buddhism.

respecting the history of the founder of Buddhism.
Chinese literature had been somewhat bare of fruits: the only works in this department mentioned by M. Mohl are Sir G. Staunton's pamphlet on the question by what term the idea of the Deity ought to be expressed in Chinese; and some small ele-mentary books published at Hong kong and Chusan. He, however, announces works in preparation by the sinologists of Paris. M. Bazin has dedicated several years to a history of Chinese literature under the Yuen dynasty; M. Stanislas Julien is preparing a translation of the travels in India, during the seventh century, of Heuen-tsang, a Buddhist pilgrim, like Fa-heen, but whose narrative is much more detailed than the Fuh-kwo-ke; lastly, M. Biot is printing his translation of the Chow-le, one of the most curious of historical documents. "When, in the twelfth century before our era, Wan-wang overturned the reigning dynasty of China, and founded that of Chow, he confided to his brother, Chow-kung, the exposition of the doctrine and the establishment of the practice of the new government. Chow-kung expounded the governmental doctrine under the form of epigraphs, in connection with the kwa of Füh-he, and they became, at a later period, the first classical book of China, the E-King. At the same time he established the practice of the government by organizing the administration and forming six separate ministerial departments, to which he made the whole administrative hierarchy subordinate, defining the rights and duties of each. He composed a book, in which he gives a detailed description of this organization, which has been long in vigour, and of which certain fundamental parts still subsist in China. This book is the Chow-le, and it is difficult to over-rate the interest of such a work, composed 3,000 years ago, by the very author of this great organization, and which exhibits a minute and accurate view of all the branches of the imperial administration."

M. Mohl concludes his excellent Report by directing attention to the prominent part which has been taken in this literary movement by learned societies, which, in spite of the discouragements they sustain from political and other causes, he believes, cannot perish, since "they have become an integral portion o' the literary organization of all civilized countries, and are now indispensably necessary to the progress of science."

THE CHURCH AT SARAWAK, BORNEO.—The first beam of the first church (English) ever erected in this new dependency of the British empire was laid on the 28th of August last, in presence of Sir James Brooke, the Rajah of Sarawak, and suite. The foundation sleeper was an enormously heavy block of iron-wood, which was slung into a trench by the Rajah. The work had then been for some time in progress, but there had been great difficulties to overcome in collecting, preparing, and carrying the heavy materials, and in levelling the hill for the site.—The Builder.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, December 10, 1849.

THE calm which our Indian possessions now enjoy is favourable to the discussion of a subject of much importance—the state of their finances; and this subject has of late engaged the attention of public writers in India and at home.

The last annual Indian accounts, it must be acknowledged, afford little that is encouraging, as respects the past, the present, or the future. It appears that, in the four years ending 1847-48, there has been a constant excess of expenditure over income, amounting in the aggregate to 4,226,000l., or, upon an average, to upwards of one million sterling a year. The worst of the matter is, that whilst the revenues show no tendency to increase, but rather the contrary, the charges, as might be expected, are augmenting. The income of British India, which was in 1846-47, 18,653,000l., in the following year sank to 17,619,000l., and the expenditure increased a million and a half between the years 1844-45 and 1846-47. It is admitted that any material retrenchment in the expenditure is impracticable; that the military charges cannot be reduced; and that a diminution of one-half of the civil salaries would save little more than 300,000l., whilst the inferior branches of the public service in India have been already pared down to the minimum.

What then is to be done? This is a question which must not be evaded. Traders may float upon the bladders of credit, and railway directors may "cook" accounts, in order to "make things pleasant," whilst the real state of their affairs remains known only to themselves; but national finances, at least in this country, are disclosed to the world, and if not, the encroachment of charges upon receipts is pretty loudly proclaimed by the necessity of borrowing, the interest upon the loans giving an accelerated impulse to the growth of expenditure.

It is plain that an annual deficiency of income, in a country where the cost of government is alone clastic, must in time create insolvency and beggary; that means must be devised at least to equalize the two sides of the account, if not to extinguish the debt already incurred. This, however, in the circumstances of Indian finance is no small difficulty.

Large expectations are entertained of the productiveness of the Punjab revenues, under a proper system of management, and we are far from being disposed to underrate them. Still it must be recollected that, whilst the augmentation of the charges consequent upon our annexation of that country is immediate, the returns are remote. Moreover, all our territorial acquisitions in India have inspired the same agreeable anticipations of large balances of income, which, through some unforeseen or inscrutable causes, have not always been realized. The last acquisition, that of Scinde, was expected to pour a perennial stream of tribute into the Indian exchequer; whereas we find, from the annual accounts, that it continues to be a yearly increasing drain upon it. The deficiency to meet charges in Scinde, which in 1844-45 was 31 lakhs, in 1846-47, the last year of which accounts had been received, had swelled to 38½ lakhs, or 385,000l.

In England recourse can be had, in such an emergency, to various expedients for adjusting the balance when it inclines too much on the side of outlay, by a few salutary retrenchments, or a small increment of taxation; but in India none of these expedients are available. Retrenchment, in any material degree, we have shown to be impracticable; on the other hand, the peculiar system under which the bulk of the Indian revenue is raised, and the character of the people of India, seem to oppose insuperable obstacles to the further extension of taxation there. Some experiments in this way have, indeed, been suggested. Considering that the revenue there is wholly or mainly supplied by one class, the landholders, whilst the opulent merchants and the mass of the people pay nothing for the protection they enjoy, it has been proposed to lay an income-tax upon one of these two classes, and a poll-tax upon the other. The Friend of India, admitting the justice of an income-tax upon the moneyed classes,—the banians, traders, contractors, merchants, and bankers, who derive their whole wealth from British arms and British institutions, and yet render back not one penny,-justly considers such a tax impracticable, but advocates a poll-tax, which, at a rupee a family, would, it is computed, yield 1,300,000l. a year. This tax, we believe, would be less practicable than the other, whilst it would be more odious and more oppressive.

It is well known that the Government have, in a great degree, estopped themselves from increasing the demands upon the land of India, and the other sources of revenue being comparatively small, even improvements in the condition of the country,—the augmentation of wealth, the increase of trade, the prosperity of agriculture,—will exert but a slender influence upon the revenues of our old possessions in India.

This state of things wears, therefore, a somewhat serious aspect. The annexation of the Punjab provinces to our territories would be a very serious evil were there not strong grounds for believing that a surplus revenue to a large amount may be expected from thence. As we have already said, some time must elapse before the capabilities of that country can be accurately estimated; and in the meanwhile it behoves our Indian Government seriously to consider what remedy can be devised if this should unhappily fail.

At the Cape of Good Hope matters appear to have reached such an extremity that the colonists have assumed attitudelittle short of actual resistance to the Government; they have "cut off the supplies," in the most material sense of that phrase, by refusing to sell provisions to the army, navy, and Government establishments, in the hope of starving the representative of the Queen into an unconditional compliance with all their demands. Sir Harry Smith, in the difficult and delicate predicament in which he was placed, seems to have acted with judgment and prudence, combining forbearance and conciliation with firmness; and it is to be hoped that he will have received instructions for his conduct in time to prevent a collision, which, in the excited state of the colony, the slightest indiscretion or precipitancy might occasion.

However arbitrary and offensive may have been the measure of the Home Government, and however commendable the repugnance of the colonists to the introduction of convicts amongst them, their later proceedings are utterly inexcusable, and will grievously damage their cause amongst sober and reflecting persons. The concessions made by Sir Harry Smith, amounting to a suspension of the measure, pending a reference and almost a remonstrance to the home authorities, should have satisfied the Cape colonists, whose demand, that the Neptune should be sent away, in spite of the representations made to them of the evils to be apprehended from such a step, was needless and unjustifiable.

We conclude that the orders on their way to the Cape will put an end to this semi-rebellion, by authorizing and making provision for the removal of the convicts,—thus affording a complete triumph to the colonists. This is a result which, however salutary in its immediate effects, will be attended with remote consequences of much gravity and importance. It threatens to impose an interdict upon the transportation of convicts. What colony will hereafter voluntarily receive these excretions of our society; and what colony can be justly compelled to admit them, after the South Africans have spurned them from their shores, setting the Government at defiance with impunity?

This unhappy incident has notoriously been produced by the gross mismanagement of the Colonial Department, and it is time that a stop should be put to its blunders or its caprices, which have left scarcely a single colony without some cause of discontent or dissatisfaction.

ONE of the most extraordinary, and at the same time one of the few pleasing, incidents of the great Californian gold mania, is the immigration of Chinese into that region, not with a view of engaging in the diggings, but as legitimate traders, traffickers, and labourers, ready to turn their hands to any occupation that will afford an honest profit, carrying with them into their new country the orderly, temperate, and industrious habits which have distinguished these enterprising settlers in all parts of the East. The number of the emigrants, who go direct from their own shores, is represented to be great. They do not appear, like some of the eager and improvident gold-seekers from Europe and the American continent, to calculate upon finding in California all the accommodations of the homes they leave; these thoughtful men transport even their houses, which are framed at Hong-kong. They are described as twenty feet square, one story in height, and twelve feet from the floor to the ceiling. "From early morn until late in the evening," it is said, in the letters from California, "these industrious men are engaged in their occupation of house-builders, and the quietness and order, cheerfulness and temperance, of their habits, are noticed by every one. Search the city through, and you will not find an idle Chinaman, and their cleanliness exceeds that of any other people we ever saw."

The influence which these settlers will probably exert in the way of example, and the contributions which their industry will make to the social comforts of the strange and motley community congregated at the diggings, may possibly exhibit the strange example of Asiatics, who are reputed by the self-confidence of Europeans to be an inferior race, humanizing and civilizing them.

As a counterpart to this agreeable picture, we find, by the last arrivals from America, that a Mr. R. W. Walker, a representative to the Alabama Legislature, from Tuskegee, had given notice that he would, early in the session, bring forward a Bill, authorizing the State to purchase 100 negroes, to be sent to California, to work in the gold mines, the profits of their labour to be devoted to the payment of the public debt of Alabama. A proposal like this, made to a Legislature, proves the utter apathy of moral feeling which the spectacle of negro slavery is sure to engender in the society where it exists. It would be bad enough if the gold-diggers were to import their own negroes, and make these wretched people their thralls; but for a State, having borrowed money which it is unable or unwilling to repay, to purchase negroes, and extract from their toil in distant mines the means of discharging their debts, is a refinement in barbarism (if the solecism be allowed) which we were not prepared to expect even from slave-holders in America.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—To remedy, in a measure, the just complaint so frequently made of the paucity of European officers in the Bengal army, and with reference to the late annexation of the Punjab, I beg leave to suggest to the Hon. East-India Directors an important alteration in the formation of the native infantry, which would very materially add to the efficiency of that arm, and at the same time enable the Government to embody sixteen or twenty new regiments at comparatively small cost or trouble.

At present, every regiment of native infantry contains 1,000 privates, and is divided into ten companies; the complement of European officers under the rank of field-officer being 6 captains, 10 lieutenants (including 2 for regimental staff), and 5 ensigns. My plan is, to form every regiment into 8 instead of 10 companies of 100 privates each, and make the following alteration in the complement of European officers to each regiment:—

- 8, instead of 6, captains (i.e. allowing one captain to every company).
- 10 lieutenants (1 to a company and two for regimental staff).

  4* ensigns (1 to be posted to each flank and centre company.)

I would also urge the expediency of forming a staff corps; of ordering the names of all military officers holding civil or political situations, or employed in the pay, survey, stud, commissariat, and Judge-Advocate's departments, to be struck off the rolls of their regiments, and their places therein to be at once effectively filled up.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

On Hy.

P.S.—Certain sixteen of the seventy-four regiments of Bengal native infantry have a rifle company, in lieu of No. 8 battalion company. How much better on every account would it be to cause these sixteen companies to resume the uniform and arms of a battalion company, and to form two efficient rifle battalions!

At a meeting of the Students' Literary and Scientific Society of Bombay (an association of young native men, brought into existence by the efforts of Professors Patton and Reid, of the Elphinstone College), held on the 7th September, Pranlall Mathúradás read an essay on the steam-engine, which led to some discussion, in the course of which it was proposed that it would be advisable for the Committee of Natural and Physical Sciences to prepare a report regarding the practicability or otherwise of the project lately broached by Mr. James Bourne, in his pamphlet on the Indian River Navigation.

According to MM. Ehrenberg and Humboldt, the yellow dust, which falls like rain on the Atlantic, and is sometimes transported to the middle of Europe, consists of microscopic animals, which may float for years in the upper strata of the atmosphere, until brought down by vertical currents or other causes, still susceptible of revivification and of multiplying their species. Has this fact any connection with the cholera?

THE LATE SIR CHARLES FORBES, BART.

The following biographical sketch of the late Sir Charles Forbes, which appeared in the Morning Chronicle, is so correct in its details, that we transfer it to our columns instead of inserting an original memoir, in which, though we might have enlarged upon his amiable qualities,—his benevolence, his private charities, his magnanimous vindication of the natives of India,—we could not do more justice to the character of this respected gentleman:—

The deceased baronet was the son of the Rev. George Forbes, of Leochel, by the only daughter of Gordon Stewart, Esq., of Inverary. He was of good family, and had noble blood in his veins, which was proved in 1833, ten years after he had been created a baronet on account of his own personal worth and claims. On the 12th of January in that year, a jury were assembled at Aberdeen, of whom General Hay, of Rannes, was chairman, when, in accordance with the forms of Scottish law, Sir. Charles Forbes was served "as the lawful and nearest heir-male general" to Alexander, the third Lord Forbes, of Pitsligo. This Lord Forbes was the father of the Lord Pitsligo who was attainted of treason for rebellion, and whose direct male heir had long since failed. Beyond the barren honour of a descent thus acknowledged, Sir Charles Forbes does not appear to have in any way profited by the recognition of his right in abeyance. His descent was from William of Dauch, grandson of Sir Alexander Forbes, of Kinaldie and Pitsligo.

Sir Charles Forbes was born in 1773. He was very early devoted to those commercial pursuits, in connection with India, in which he afterwards became so important and distinguished a member of the mercantile community. In the year 1800 ha: married a daughter of Major John Cotgrave, of Madras; and in 1809 he became the head of the house of Forbes and Co., of: Bombay, the most distinguished firm of its class in the Presidency. This position he continued to hold, although he had. for many years ceased any local connection, up to the time of his decease; and it is not too much to say that the name of no man stood higher in the commercial world, not merely for wealth, but. also for all that can ennoble and exalt its possessor-for the highest honour for a spotless public character—and, above all-for a liberality and generosity of the most enlarged kind, joining. to the munificence and largeness of mind of the "merchant prince," in his patronage of public undertakings, the most extensive and benevolent private charity and personal liberality. No one who had the means of knowing him in his private capacity but will readily bear testimony to the more than alacrity with which he responded to any appeal for his aid, and to the many acts of personal generosity, which were the frequent, almost the constant, occupation of his daily life. By none will his loss be more regretted than by those who were immediately dependent upon him, on whom he was wont to shower his favours with a liberal but not an indiscriminating hand.

In India he was respected and beloved in no common degree. He was one of those brighter and better examples of our countrymen in the East, who see in the natives a race seemingly entrusted to our care and guidance, whom we are bound to protect by legislation to the utmost of our superior enlightenment. When Sir Charles Forbes first began to show himself the champion of the cause of the East-Indian population, matters were not in all respects so well ordered in our Indian possessions as they are now, and there was good scope and cause for a real friend of India. His exertions were as untiring as his influence was great; and the best evidence of the value of both is, that, on his leaving Bombay, he was presented, on behalf of the matines with a magnificent service of plate. Nor was this granatives, with a magnificent service of plate. Nor was this gratitude short-lived, or his services held as paid for by one act of thankfulness. As late as seven-and-twenty years after, a very large sum (estimated at £9,000) was subscribed by his grateful clients, for the erection of a statue in honour of him. To Chantrey was entrusted the execution of this design, and his genius as a sculptor has seldom been more successful than in expressing the dignified and benevolent features of the late baronet. The statue is and benevolent features of the late baronet. erected in the town-hall of Bombay, between those of Sir John Malcolm and the Hon. Mountstuart Elphinstone. The letter addressed to Sir Charles Forbes, by the principal native and other inhabitants of Bombay, on notifying to him the subscrip-tion and its object, is one of the noblest tributes ever paid to a man who had no claims from brilliant military or civil service to dazzle the eyes of admirers. The following passages from it sufficiently convey the fine tone of gratitude in which it is couched,—the language in which the tribute is conveyed very much enhancing its value. They say:—

Eight ensigns are really required, or one to every company.

"Twenty-seven years have now elapsed since you parted from us; but so vivid are all your recollections, and so great is the interest you take in all that concerns India and the welfare of its inhabitants, that it would seem almost as if you were still present amongst us, directly participating, as you formerly did, in all our anxious cares for the amelioration of our condition, and the extension of our social privileges. This feature of your character is highly honourable to you, as it is a rare and remarkable one, for our experience has fully shown us that but few men, however estimable, retain a recollection of their Eastern friends when they have returned to their native country. New connections, new friends, new ties, break the links of their regard; and if they do not forget us, they cease to take that warm interest in our affairs which we had hoped for and anticipated. To this common failing of humanity your conduct has ever formed a distinguished exception; time and absence, instead of lessening your regard for the natives of India, appear to have the effect of increasing it. To your steady and uncompromising advocacy of our cause we feel that we in a great measure owe advocacy of our cause we leet that we in a great include the important civil rights of sitting as jurymen and acting as her Majesty's justices of the peace. It is felt and acknowledged by all, that, unless you had stood forward as you did, many years would have elapsed before these important concessions would have been yielded to us. Our individual character and capability for appreciating such high distinctions of social life, if not altogether disbelieved, was at least reluctantly acknowledged by those authorities who have the control of our destinies in England, and the prejudices existing on the subject could only be overcome by such exertions as your zealous interest in our cause, your personal knowledge of us, and, we may add, your peculiarly prominent position as an acknowledged and unvarying friend of India, enabled you to afford. Reverting to the earliest period of our connection with you, we are proud to acknowledge its beneficial influence on all that relates to our worldly prosperity and the prosperity of this island. Your penetration, intelligence, and enterprise as a merchant, afforded a stimulating example to commercial undertakings which was previously unknown in Bombay, and which, being followed by others, has been productive of the best effects in developing the capabilities and resources of the country. At a period when natives were held less entitled than they now are to the courtesies of European society, your condescending kindness and friendly treat-ment on all occasions of personal intercourse effected much, in your person, to attach them to European character and customs, and paved the way for many social advantages which they now enjoy, and for which we and our posterity must ever feel grateful."

He never missed an opportunity of aiding the cause of the natives. On one occasion (we believe it was in 1839), the Bishop of London had indulged in some public remarks on the character of the Hindoos, which Sir Charles Forbes considered to be unfounded and uncalled-for. He as publicly repelled those imputations, which he justly regarded as having originated in deceptive representations made to the right reverend prelate, who had not the personal experience in India necessary to enable him to test their accuracy. These remarks of Sir Charles Forbes attracted much attention at the time, and they were deemed of sufficient importance to call forth a public declaration corroborative of their truth, which was signed by sixty-six officers of high rank, all of whom concurred in supporting his opinion as against the Bishop of London.

It was not only in a private capacity that the late Sir Charles Forbes was the steady friend of India. For twenty years during which he occupied a seat in the House of Commons, he never lost an occasion to advocate their cause, and urge their merits as subjects on the attention of that assembly. was a Tory in politics, and a known opponent of all the arts by which cheap popularity is acquired, gave his views more weight. He was, also, necessarily, a very important member of the Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock, where he took part in almost all the stormy discussions which prevail there. He was much respected, because his integrity, independence, and uprightness of character were well known, so that even those who opposed him in opinion paid a deference to it. He did not hesitate to oppose even his own party on East-India questions; but he was distinguished by the frankness with which he would avow an error. For instance; among others, he had all along advocated an open trade with India,-advocated it, as he did everything he undertook, with warmth and vigour. But in 1833, after some experience of the working of the plan, he declared that he and others had lost so much by it, and he had so little faith in it, that he felt bound to make a public recantation. Those who dispute the correctness of his judgment will at least admire his frankness.

In 1823 Sir Charles was created a baronet (Sir Charles Forbes, of Newe and Edinglassie, Aberdeenshire), and he was afterwards made Deputy-Lieutenant of his county. In April, 1833, he was elected Lord Rector of the Marischal College and University of Aberdeen for the ensuing year.

Up to the latest period of his existence, his private charities continued to be exercised; and there have been few men in a private station who have left the world with so general a good word.

CONVERSIONS IN INDIA.

Amongst the communications on the subject of "Conversions in India," which have appeared in the daily papers, the following, addressed to the Times, and signed "Arthur C. Rainey, late Captain Bengal Army," is so distinct in its evidence, and that evidence is so important, that it deserves the utmost attention:—

- "Sir,—Having for many years held a commission in the Indian army, rising to the rank of senior captain of my regiment, and having long served as an interpreter in three of the native languages of the East, my testimony to the points noticed by your correspondents 'Sepahee' and 'An Infantry Officer' will not, I think, be uninteresting either to yourself or your readers, whose object surely is the truth.
- "1. For a period of years, stretching from 1831 to 1643, my attention was more or less directed, systematically, on the spot, to the subject of missions, and to the operations of all missionary agents, both from England and America, without reference to any bigoted peculiarities of denominational differences. In this way, during ten or twelve years' impartial examination of the subject, I had ample opportunity of testing the merits of the question of missions to the heathen. I narrowly observed their modes of proceeding, saw the results attending their exertions, and, from my knowledge of the native languages, and personal intercourse with converts, enjoyed advantages of investigation such as could not be surpassed. Writing, then, at this moment, not from the memory of what I may have heard from partisans on the one side or partisans on the other,—from no hearsay evidence,—but from ocular demonstration of what I have seen and heard, and examined for myself,—with operations as freeh upon my mind as though of yesterday, connected with Church missions, Scotch missions, Baptist missions, London missions, and American missions, I have no hesitation in declaring that a surprising and a real work is going on.
- "2. From 1830 to 1834, especially, the number of intelligent and educated young men that abandoned heathenism and embraced Christianity in Calcutta was very remarkable. With these I have often conversed, spent whole days in their company, and should have been among the first to expose it if I had seen grounds to doubt the reality of conversion in any with whom I was thrown into contact.
- "3. I have been personally present when some of these came forword publicly, and, for the first time, made an open confession of the Christian faith. On more than one occasion I have acted as sponsor to the converts at their baptism, according to the formula of the Church of England; an office I would not have ventured to undertake without personally satisfying myself, in the case of adults, of the reality of the profession, so far as man may judge.
- "4. I have been present when scenes have taken place, in which your convert and his agonized heathen relatives have combined to produce, not in public, but in the privacy of domestic scenes, such as tragical impression, that nothing but the conviction that a man must leave father and mother, and brothers and sisters, when they interfere with his admission into the kingdom of heaven, has prevented me from interposing the weight of my influence to prevent the convert from proceeding with his determination to confess Christ before men. And as I write, Sir, the very memory of these real things, these facts that I have witnessed, brings new conviction to my mind, that nothing but a real work of God upon the soul could have enabled those human beings, with sensibilities of a far keener order than most Europeans in our latitudes, to tear themselves away from all that was dear to nature—for what? To become—so far as this world is concerned—outcasts from their homes, their parents, in some cases their wives, their children, and, not least, their nation.
- "5. I will only just add, that at Kishnaghur, in Bengal, a place I have frequently visited, there are at this moment several thousand persons who have abandoned heathen superstitions, with no possible motive for doing so in such masses (in a great measure secluded from European, except missionary, influence) beyond conviction.
- "I do not by any means claim for these converts a higher tone of Christianity than elsewhere; on the contrary, just rescued from the abominations and deceit of the basest superstitions, great allowances must be made for them, more especially when it is remembered that in most cases they are still surrounded by the evil influences of their heathen countrymen from without, and have to contend with investerate habits acquired from their infancy, that have grown with their growth, and which present a formidable foe within, which, no woader, does now and then break forth, and seem to belie their conversion."

MISCELLANEOUS.

HAILEYBURY .- The Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India have appointed the Rev. Thos. Dale, M.A., Rob. Eden, M.A., and Wm. Stone, M.A., examiners of candidates for admission into the East-India College next term. The examination is appointed to be held on Thursday, the 3rd of January.

PROFESSOR H. H. WILSON has been elected a Foreign Associate of the French Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres, in the room of Sir Graves C. Haughton, deceased.

W. JEFFCOTT, Esq., has been appointed Recorder of Prince of Wales' Island, and Chief Justice at Madras.

THE REV. HENRY MELVILL, B.D., Principal of the East-India College, Haileybury, has been elected by the Haberdashers' Company to the "Golden Lectureship," at St. Margaret's, Lothbury.

LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF PORT NATAL.-Downing Street, Nov. 27.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Benjamin Chilley Campbell Pine, Esq., to be Lieutenant-Governor of the district of Natal, in South Africa.

DIRECTOR OF INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANIES.—At a Court of Directors held at the India-House on the 29th November, Mr. J. C. Melvill, the Secretary, was appointed the ex-officio director of the Indian Railway Companies, in pursuance of the Acts and of the respective contracts with these bodies.

IMPORTATION OF TIN.—An importation of 2,300 slabs of tin has taken place by the vessel John Bibby, arrived in the docks from Canton. The vessel Fortitude, since arrived from Whampoa, has also brought 1,246 slabs of the article as part of her

ETHIOPIAN MSS .- CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.-M. Rocher d'Hericourt, who has lately returned from a journey in Abyssinia, has brought with him about a score of MSS. in the Ethiopian language, all of vast antiquity and great literary value. They are folio in form, bound in red leather, with the Greek cross and strange ornaments on the covers. In some of them the writing runs right across the page; in others it is in columns; in nearly all it is firm and bold in character. Some of the MSS, are on history, religion, and science; one is a complete and very curious treatise on the mysteries of Eastern astrology, and one, which appears to have been written at the beginning of the 11th century, contains a copy of the Bible, which differs in some respects from the ordinary version. To obtain these treasures, M. d'Hericourt passed a long time in Abyssinia; had to employ daring, cunning, persuasion, and force; to go through many extraordinary adventures, and endure many hardships and persecutions. He has, besides, obtained a mass of curious information on the religion (which it seems is half-Jewish, half-Christian), the manners, and the government of the singular people who inhabit Abyssinia; he has ascertained all that could be learned on their country, of which so little is known; and has collected all the facts calculated to throw light on geology, mineralogy, botany, and other branches of science. But what is more practically important than all is, he has brought with him numerous specimens of a plant, the root of which, reduced to powder, is a cure for hydrophobia, both in men and animals. Of its virtues M. d'Hericourt had practical proof: four dogs and a man having been bitten by a mad dog, they were, by application of this remedy, cured of the hydrophobia which ensued; whilst a fourth dog (bitten at the same time by the same animal), to which the remedy was not applied, perished in all the agony of that terrible disease. The virtue of the plant, and the manner of preparing it for use, were explained to the traveller by a potentate of the country, who assured him that it was there generally used, and never The specimens brought over by M. d'Hericourt have been submitted to the Académie des Sciences, and a committee of that learned body has been appointed to test their efficacy. -Literary Guzette.

TRAVELS IN THE INTERIOR OF AFRICA. - We are informed that Government has determined to afford effectual assistance to Mr. Richardson, the African traveller, in prosecuting his travels and researches in the great desert of Sahara, Soudan, and the regions of Bornou and the Lake Tshad. We understand that it will be part of the duties of Mr. Richardson to endeavour to bring the chiefs and princes of the interior of Africa into relations of commerce and amity with this country. Mr. Richardson is enjoined to embrace every opportunity of impressing upon the minds of the people and princes of Africa that legitimate commerce is preferable to that of the traffic in men. Mr. Richardson will be accompanied by Drs. Barth and Overweg, Prussian savans, who are charged by Government to draw up a scientific report. This will render the mission complete, and the interests of science will be equally consulted with those of commerce and philanthropy .- Times.

CHINESE IRON. - The Mencius, arrived at the port of Liverpool, from Hong-Kong, has brought 2,990 pigs of iron, as a portion of her cargo, consigned to a firm of eminence. a very interesting importation from the Chinese empire.

How to DEAL WITH THE CAPE COLONY .- The Times, in an article upon Cape affairs, observes : - " It appears to be put to us, 'What do you propose?' We simply propose that our formal relations with the Cape shall be adapted to the actual state of things, and to the concordant desires of the British people and the colonists. Let the Cape be admitted to have de jure the power it exercises de facto. Let it have self-government. With certain reservations on points affecting the imperial power, let the colonists have the entire control of their own affairs. Above all, let them settle their own quarrels with the Caffres. or the Griquas, paying for our troops and stores, should they happen to want them. There can be no doubt that this will lead to a greater economy of treasure and of blood, as well as to more pleasant and creditable relations with the neighbouring tribes. The emigration to the Cape, its rate of production, and its use of our manufactures, will not flag under an independent regime. We predict a very different result. The proposition, happily, is no novelty. It is old enough in discussion, and now presents itself afresh in the present position of the colony. We had only to wait till the pear should be ripe. When the colony is strong enough, wise enough, united enough, and resolute enough, to drive out of port a ship under her Majesty's orders, and shut up her Majesty's representative in his house,-all, too, with a good show of right on its side,—there can no longer be any doubt that the pear is ready for gathering."

REMAINS OF NIMEVEH.—Letters have been received from Dr. Layard, dated Mosul, October 15, at which place he arrived on the last day of September. Dr. Layard intended to recommence his excavations, on the scene of his former labours, as soon as he should be able to assemble his Nestorian diggers from the mountains. At present the country is in a very unsettled state, and it is scarcely safe to venture out of the city gates. At the date of his letters he had about sixty workmen exploring the ruins; and many bas-reliefs-of which the store seems inexhaustible-were discovered. But all had suffered from the effects of fire, and they will scarcely bear removal. Of these, accurate drawings will be made by Mr. Cooper, the artist attached to the expedition. Amongst the bas-reliefs most recently discovered by Dr. Layard, is a representation of the removal of one of the gigantic bulls, showing that they were sometimes, if not always, moved to the palace after being carved. An immense number of men draw a sledge which runs upon rollers, impetus being given to it behind by an enormous lever worked by cords. A cast will be made of this very curious subject, in the event of its being found impossible to remove it. It is probable that the fine pair of colossal lions, still standing at Nimrud, will be moved during the present expedition. Dr. Layard paid a second visit to the periodical festival of the Yezidis, or Devilworshippers, and was admitted to all their ceremonies. this occasion he also saw the celebrated Melek Teou, the bronze bird.—the existence of which has been a matter of speculation to travellers,—and which he describes as a very curious relic.— Athenœum. The Urania, arrived in the St. Katharine's Docks, from Bussorah, has brought several packages of marbles, as a portion of her cargo. These marbles are a further portion of the Assyrian sculptures brought to this country for the purpose of being deposited in the British Museum; and the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury have issued the necessary directions to the proper authorities for their removal from the Docks to the Museum, for the purpose of being placed in that national establishment. - Times.

SENHOR AMARAL. - Advices from Lisbon bring the Viscount of Moncorvo's note in reply to Lord Palmerston's upon the Macao affair. It was asserted in Lisbon, in well-informed quarters, that this correspondence had tended to aggravate the indifferent terms upon which Lord Palmerston and the Portuguese Amhassador at this Court were said to have been; that the latter had, after appealing to Lord John Russell, assured his Government the affair was likely to be more favourably considered by the British Cabinet than indicated in Lord Palmers-The Portuguese appear very sensitive ton's first despatch. upon the point, and complain that his Lordship treats them with illiberality and chicane in his endeavour to establish the English Government's jurisdiction over its own subjects in Macao, by virtue of the treaty of peace with China, when they contend no such pretension had existed before that treaty, and that it ought not now, in the absence of express stipulation, to be held to alter a fact previously existing and tacitly recognized for centuries.

COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA .- We believe that, ere long, steps will be taken by the directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Company to accelerate considerably the communication between Southampton and the Isthmus of Suez, either by the employment of more efficient vessels in point of speed, or by improvements in the machinery of those vessels already on the line, so as to produce more satisfactory performances, and additional regularity in the passages. With ships of the Hindostan class, employed on both sides of the Isthmus of Suez, it may safely be assumed that the course of post between Great Britain and Calcutta, and likewise the communication with all parts of the East, might be shortened by from seven to twelve days, and the time is perhaps not far distant when the introduction of such an improvement in the mail service will be indispensable. - Times.

COCKERELL, LARTENT, AND Co. - A circular was issued on the 4th inst. to the creditors of this firm, informing them that a first dividend of 21 per cent. under their estate would be payable on the 10th inst. With reference to the smallness of this dividend, the Money Article in the Times of the 6th gives the following explanation, not very complimentary to the Calcutta house: "We have felt it a duty to the public, as well as to the character of a firm which occupied for so many years a prominent position in the city of London, to endeavour to ascertain the cause of this result, especially after the opinion expressed by the friends of the house in October, 1847, that there was a reasonable prospect of all demands upon it being met, provided time were given for winding up the concerns of the Calcutta firm without their being forced to a liquidation through the Insolvent Court of that presidency. It may perhaps be remembered that, in confirmation of the opinion offered at that time, the balancesheet of the Calcutta firm to the 30th of April, 1846 (the lastreceived in London), was exhibited, showing that there were no uncovered creditors of any amount other than the London house, with the exception of about 7,000% due to the Union Bank of Calcutta. The correspondence received from the firm in Calcutta for the preceding twelve months was also exhibited, in which it was repeatedly stated that the house in London was their only creditor, and that they were prepared, and in fact agreed, to place that debt in a gradual state of liquidation at the rate of 50,000th per annum. The house in London, guided by information of the above description, were induced to make every exertion in their power throughout the fatal year of 1847 to carry through their engagements. Their expectations, however, carry through their engagements. Their expectations, however, altogether failed, and it appeared, upon the suspension of the house in Calcutta, that, instead of the produce of the years 1847-48 having been free, as the firm in London had been led to believe, for meeting the returned bills, it was pledged, together with other parts of their estate, general and personal, for its full value to the Union Bank. Under this state of things their affairs were taken into the Insolvent Court against the wishes and interests of the London house, and as the major part of the real estate belonging to the Calcutta firm had been pledged in connection with the payment of the balances due to the partners, who had retired about the year 1811, the attempt to realize such assets by forced sales in a period of universal discredit proved most disastrous, and occasioned the destruction of almost the whole property upon which reliance was placed for a dividend. The claim of Cockerell, Larpent, and Co. upon the Calcutta firm has, we understand, been admitted for 500,000l., upon which the only dividend has been less than 5,000l.

THE ship Indian has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Bombay.

BOOKS.

A Railway Caution, or Exposition of Changes required in the Law and Practice of the British Empire to enable the poorer Districts to provide for themselves the Benefits of Railway Intercourse, and to forewarn the Government and the Capitalists of Brilish India that they may avoid fatal Errors, &c. By Major J. P. Kennedy, Military Secretary to Sir C. Napier, &c. Calcutta, 1849.

In Major Kennedy's letter to the Marquess of Dalhousie, prefixed to this pamphlet, and which is the only part of it that has a direct application to Indian railways, he insists, with justice, upon this point:—that "there is scarcely any branch of the public administration of a country which requires more cautious and providential forethought than that which regulates the first introduction of railway intercourse." If the principle be defective at the outset, grave errors arise in practice, which are irremediable, a truth of which we have had sad experience in England. He considers one of the most striking errors in the English system to be, that these great works are regarded as private enterprizes, instead of being classed amongst national works, whether constructed from private or public sources, whereby the expenditure would have been economized, the cost of traffic reduced, and the capital invested would have produced more extensive results.

The peculiar and general fitness of railways for India scarcely need to be pointed out; amongst their advantages Major Kennedy enumerates the vigour which they will infuse into the civil administration, that will go far to remedy the inconvenience attending the position of the seat of government, at the eastern extremity of India.

In accompanying Sir C. Napier on his journey from Calcutta to the North-West Provinces, Major Kennedy passed through the country selected by the East-India Railway Company for their line, and he says, "I have never seen any other country of which the general features present such natural facilities for railway construction as the north-western half ' of that line; which "offers almost a ready-made bed, upon which to place the ballast and then the rails; nor does the lower half, towards Calcutta, contain difficulties beyond the average that are met with in Great Britain." Assuming that the initiatory and permanent Assuming that the initiatory and permanent arrangements for the conduct of railway proceedings shall be as they ought to be, he is convinced that the north-western half of the East-India Railway Company's line may be opened for a single track at 3,000'. per mile, and the south-eastern half at 7,000% per mile; or an average of 5,000% over the whole length of the line.

With respect to gradients, Major Kennedy earnestly recommends the Government to lay down, as a fixed principle, that no steeper gradient than 1 in 300 shall be employed, unless in case of urgent necessity. He says :-

- "The natural course appears to be to commence on the portion of the line between Allahabad and Delhi, where it is certain, "1st. That no fundamental error can occur;
- "2nd. That the mileage outlay would be singularly small;
  "3rd. That the execution would be rapid, and would enable a return upon the outlay to be quickly obtained;
- "4th. That the persons first employed in the work would acquire some experience, before attempting the more difficult portion between Calcutta and A lababad;

  "5th. And that thus time would be given (which should be diligently employed) for investigating the very grave questions, both engineering and commercial, that the intricate district between Calcutta and Allahabad naturally suggests. In this latter portion, about 500 miles in length, there is the choice between an inundated and a drier line; a level line or one containing steep inclinations; a line without commercial depôts, or one that would afford much profit to the undertaking, and advantage to trading districts.

"There can be no doubt that the cautious course would be to commence at once where there is a certainty of going right, and at the same time to investigate more narrowly, where there is almost a certainty of going wrong, if the project, as it now stands, be executed."

Most experienced persons in India concur in Major Kennedy's opinion that the natural course is to commence on the portion of the line between Allahabad and Delhi. Some, however, suggest Benares in place of Allahabad as the lower terminus, because from that station, by great exertion in keeping open channels over the Bullea Flats, light steamers might ply all the year round, night and day.

He considers that the carrying a double line throughout from Calcutta to Delhi, as advocated by the managing director, is a lamentable infringement upon what was understood to be the principle adopted by the Company, namely, to avoid every kind of outlay not essential to the safety, efficiency, durability, and permanent economy of the after-working of the line. "The interests of the Indian and British public, as well as the interests of the Company itself, are deeply involved in a strict adher-ence to this admirable principle. Because if, from any unne-cessary outlay, the mileage cost of construction be raised above the remunerative powers of the available traffic, this first broad essay in railway construction in India will be the last; and not only will the proprietors be disappointed in their dividends, but the industrial, the mercantile, the trading, and travelling classes of India will lose the power of extending this first essential to their success, which a different course in the scale of construc-tion might with certainty secure." He urges that the stationhouses, &c. should be the plainest class of strong buildings, and that there should be "everything that is essential, but nothing superfluous:" a course, it may be added, directly the reverse of that pursued by many railway companies in England. He re-commends that land should be taken for a double line, and that it be fenced for a double line (the fences growing ones), but that the cuttings, masonry, &c. should be made for a single line only.

Major Kennedy enlarges upon the very favourable circumstances of India for the introduction of railways, and expects that the sound application of English experience will afford the means of guarding against waste and errors. As a further caution, he has appended to the Letter a mass of details (forming more than two-thirds of the work) relating to the mismanagement of the Waterford and Limerick Railway, of which Company Major Kennedy is a director.

Professor Kosegarten, in editing the text of the Pancha-tantra, found, upon a comparison of M. de Sacy's edition of the Kalila with his Indian MSS, many Indian sentences in the Kalila, rendered with great exactitude. "This circumstance," he observes in a letter to M. Reinaud, "deserves attention, since the Kalila itself is but an Arabian translation from a Pelilevi translation of the Sanscrit text.

In the year 1680, a member of the House of Commons remarked that the high wages paid in this country made it impossible for our textures to maintain a competition with the produce of the Indian looms. An English mechanic, he said, instead of slaving like a native of Bengal for a piece of copper, exacted a shilling a day. - Macaulay.

TIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTERLY NEW.

*** To the First Part of this Dictionary, the preceding editions of which have met with general approbation, as well in Europe as in India, the author has by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, been enabled to make such extensice additions, that the number of words and phrases, now given and explained, exceeds by many thousands that contained in any other Hindustani and English Dictionary extant. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper character, together with the pronuenciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character poculiar to each of those languages; and much attention has been paid to the insertion of the names of Plants, as well as of other natural productions, with the technical terms at present adopted for them in Europe.

IN Europe.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the English words in most general use, as well as numerous phrases, with the corresponding Hindustani annexed; and so much additional matter has been now introduced, that although the work is printed in a smaller type, the present Edition comprises POURTEEN SHEETS MORE Of letter-press than the last, and it is greatly reduced in price.

A LIVER COMPLAINT CURED by HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Extract of a letter from John McLean Ferguson, Esq., dated Melbourne, Port Phillip, May 9th, 1849:—"To Professor Holloway. Sir,—I had teen afflicted nearly two years with the liver complaint, accompanied with flying pains in my shoulder, dimness of sight, and difficulty of breathing. After expending upwards of £20 in medicine, without fluding any relief, I was induced to try your Pills, and by their use, and strict attention to the prescribed regimen, I am effectually cured. Grateful for the same, I publish this statement, in the hope that others so effected may have recourse to your invaluable Medicine, and thereby derive a similar benefit."

Sold by all druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VINE HEAD of HAIR.—ROWLANDS' MACASSAR INE HEAD of HAIR.—ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.—The extraordinary efficacy and happy amalgamation of its purely exotic materials have rendered it justly renowned throughout the world for its remarkable virtues in nourishing, preserving, and beautifying the human hair. It insinuates its balsamic properties into the pores of the head, nourishes the hair in its embryo state, accelerates its growth, cleanses it from seurf and dandriff, sustains it in maturity, and continues its possession of healthy vigour, silky softness, and luxurious redundancy, to the latest period of human life. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; so that, in numerous instances wherein other remedies have been tried in vain, Rowlands' Macassar Oil has superseded the ornaments of art, by reinstating, in full plenitude, the permanent gifts and graces of nature. In the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachios, it is also unfailing in its stimulative operation. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair, and rendering the use of the fine comb unnecessary. Its invaluable properties have obtained the putronage of Royalty throughout Europe, and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s, 6d, and 7s.; or family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CALITION—On the wrapper of each bottle of the genuing article are these 38, 6d, and 78; or raminy obtates required to Samenia and Table are these size, 21s.

CAUTION.—On the wrapper of each bottle of the genuine article are these words, in two lines,—ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL. The same are engravedd on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 29,028 letters, Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

THE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. HOWARD, of 17, George Street, Hanover Square; it is the introduction of an entirely new description of ARTHFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble natural teeth, as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found very superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, and will support and preserve the treth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. The invention deserves the notice of the scientific, and is of importance to many persons, and those who are interested in it cannot do better than avail themselves of Mr. Howard's skill as a Dentist.

AN OLD MERCANTILE BUSINESS, of 45 years' connection in INDIA, to be DISPOSED OF, for an allowance per amount out of the profits. It will be shown to net an annual profit of £2,000 to £3,000.—Apply by letter to 6., Meaars. SOTHERAN, SON, & DRAPER, Booksellers, 50, Lombard Street, City.

MURRAY'S

HOME AND COLONIAL LIBRARY.

Complete in 37 Volumes.

This Series of attractive and useful Works, by approved Authors, was designed to furnish the HIGHEST LITERATURE of the day, at the lowest possible price, and was commenced in consequence of the Acts which had passed the British Parliament for the protection of Copyright, and the rights of British Authors and Publishers, by the entire exclusion, both in GREAT BRITAIN and HER COLONIES, of foreign pirated editions; and the volumes have been issued at a price which places them within the means not only of the Colonists, but also of the less wealthy classes at home, who thus benefited by the widening of the market for our literature.

The aim of the Publisher was to produce a Series of Works as entertaining as romances, but conveying at the same time sound information.

The "HOME AND COLONIAL LIBRARY" having thus been sustained during a period of Six Years with unabated success.

Mr. MURRAY, auxious to guard against the objection of overloading the Subscribers with too large and cumbrous a series of books of one size, has decided on concluding the Work with its Thirty-seventh Volume. He is thus enabled to offer to the public a compact and portable Work, the bulk of which does not exceed the compass of a single shelf, or of one trunk, suited for all classes and all climates,—of which the interest, value, and popularity, is not likely to be impaired by lapse of time.

At the same time, the large circulation of the "Home and Colonial Library," and the continued demand for back numbers, convince him that there is an unabated desire on the part of the public for reading, at once cheap, popular, and instructive; he is therefore preparing speedily to put forth a New Library, which, though equally portable, shall be even more elegant in typography than the last, and shall surpass, or at least maintain, its literary value and general attraction.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

"WE are now," says the Delhi Gazette, "as uninterruptedly quiet in India as its best wishers could desire." This may, in short, be considered the sum of the political intelligence brought by the present mail.

The subject of most general interest in the military circles was the relief; that for the Bombay corps having been promulgated: it is published in another column. This arrangement, the most extensive which has ever occurred in the Indian army, appears to have been received with general satisfaction, though a few regiments have allotted to them a larger and more disagreeable march than they may have expected. The Punjab is to be garrisoned exclusively by Bengal troops. No extra allowances are to be made to those serving within the Country of the Rivers, unless they are employed on the extreme frontier beyond the Indus. In Bengal the relief involves, as we have said, the movement of twenty-two regiments of cavalry, fifty-nine of native, and three of British, infantry: in Bombay, of three regiments of cavalry, three of European, and twenty of native infantry; or a grand total of eighty-five regiments of infantry, and twenty-five of cavalry, -besides upwards of thirty troops and companies of artillery. This entails an extra charge of 300l. a month for each regiment on the march; and as the average over all is probably about thirty marches, the move will cost about 300,000l. "It would be surprising," observes the Englishman, "that so large an expense should be voluntarily incurred at a time when the utmost effort is making to economize in every department of the public service, were it not obvious that it is necessary to put an end to any misunderstanding on the part of the soldiery as to the Punjab allowances, the sudden withdrawal of which, from regiments stationed there. was so near occasioning a mutiny a few months ago."

The three hill corps have become regiments of the line. A report had been got up that the Sirmoor battalion had refused to belong to the line; but the Delhi Gazette is enabled to deny the report, "upon undoubted and proper authority."

The Governor-General was at Nalaghur on the 3rd of November, on his route to the provinces, taking Lahore in his way, and visiting Mooltan. He intends to proceed down the Indus to the sea-coast; and it is said to be doubtful whether he will try the benefit of a sea voyage, or proceed at once to Europe; for the fact of his increasing indisposition is not concealed. The plans of the Commander-in-Chief remain unaltered. He has visited Agra, Meerut, and Delhi, travelling, observes the Delhi Gazette, "without any of the 'pomp and circumstance' which, we think, should accompany a man of his rank, as upholding the dignity of the British Government and his own importance in the eyes of the natives, and appears to think that the usual preparations for his reception are irksome and useless: he is, however, the admiration of the officers and men. and has won their good opinions in almost every instance." We subjoin the following incident, reported by a correspond. ent of the Bombay Times at Meerut :-

"As he passed through the other day, two or three parties, having something to ask, or explain, requested an interview; but Sir Charles declined to see any one, saying that At prescht he way a mere traveller, but that on his return from Agra he would make a longer stay, when he would see every and any body. When here, he stayed at the hotel, about which there is a good story current: On arriving, the chief, according to his expressed intention, made straight for the dak bungalow, and had put one pijamma'd leg out, and was preparing the other to follow it, when a little girl ran out of the room he was about to enter, and said, 'You can't go in there; mother's dressing.'—'Oh!' replies Sir Charles, 'certainly not,' and prepared to go to the next; but again the little girl stopped him, saying—'But you can't go there either—father's sick.' This was too much for the old chief's patience, and he replied, 'Well, my little girl, next time your sick father and undressed mother come to the dak bungalow, I hope they will be content with one room.' Having said which, he turned round and made for the hotel, not in the best humour at losing the expected corner of his well-beloved dak bungalow."

Sir Charles was expected at Peshawur on the 25th of November.

Sir Henry Lawrence was to have reached Peshawur on the 27th or 28th October, and was in expectation of completing the inspection of the Punjab frontier, by going from Peshawur through Kohat, Bunnoo, and the Derajat.

The chief interest connected with domestic topics centres in Calcutta, where the Legislative Council and the Supreme Court have been somewhat busy in their respective functions. The Gazette contains an unusual number of unusually important Draft Acts of the Council, of the subjects of which we take the following summary from the Hurkaru:—

"First in interest for the Anglo-Indian public is a proposed enactment for abolishing the exemption which European-born British subjects have enjoyed, from the jurisdiction of the Company's Criminal Courts. When, in 1836, a law was put forth under the auspices of Mr. Macaulay for subjecting persons of this class to the Civil Courts of the Company, it was fiercely opposed and denounced under the title of the 'Black Act.' It might have been expected, then, that the outery raised against a law subjecting only the property of Mofussil Europeans to the control of the local courts, would have been revived with increased vehemence when it was proposed to commit the persons and liberties, everything but the lives, of the privileged class, to the tender mercies of the Company's magistrates. But the metropolis, excited almost to insurrection by the Act of 1836, looks with calm indifference on the more formidable proposal of 1849. The public is silent; the press objects not to the principle, but only to the machinery by which it is to be carried into effect.

"Another draft, intended probably as a rider to the one just noticed, is for extending the practice of trial by jury in the Mofussil courts; but as under its provisions the majority of a jury would almost invariably consist of natives, it is hardly likely that an European prisoner would avail himself of the option of being tried by such 'peers,' in preference to leaving his fate in the hands of his countryman, the magistrate or judge.

"A third proposed Act, which also probably has reference to the

A turn proposed Act, which also probably has reference to the one first mentioned, provides that any accused person claiming privileges or exemptions as a European subject of her Mujesty, shall make good his claim to the satisfaction of the judge.

"A fourth draft is of an Act designed to extend the just, humane, and hieral principle that no man shall be deprived of his right to property on account of any change in his religion, and is, of course, intended for the protection of native converts.

"A fifth draft is of a long Act 'for giving privileges to registered companies;' but what the privileges to be thus be-towed are, beyond that of suing and being sued under the corporate designation, we leave our readers to discover, if they possess ingenuity enough."

In the Insolvent Debtors' Court, Sir Thomas Turton, whose defalcations as Ecclesiastical Registrar have spread ruin and misery amongst thousands, having applied for the benefit of the Act, had his application rejected by the Court, and is now the inmate of a jail. His debts amount to about 120,000l., of which 80,000l. consists of sums abstracted from the funds officially under his charge.

Colonel Pew, chief debtor of the Benarcs Bank, also applied to the Court, and with more success, for the benefit of the Act.

"The Benares Bank was established in 1845 (says the Bombay Times); its capital was proposed to be 50,000l. raised by the sale of 1,000 shares of 50l. each. The first instalment of 25l. each was all that was ever paid on the shares, and even this was so on many occasions by borrowing the amount from the Bank on the security of its own serip. Unfible to call up the fail price of the shaffs, the Bank determined on issuing new offes, and this it continued to do till, in 1848, the total amount of shares was 6,000, giving a nominal capital of 150,0001, of which, however, no more than 90,0001, was ever paid up—much of it having been so by loans from the Bank. The sole business of the Bank was money-leading, the maximum interest drawn by it ten per cent.; and out of this dividends of twelve per cent. were proposed to be paid! The selling price of shares was fixed by the directors, who sold their own at premiums of from twenty-five to fifty per cent.! When they found they had more of these than they could manage, a vast mass of them were cancelled—that is, sold at ten per cent. premium to the Bank, from which they had been bought at par and paid for with the Bank; money! Colonel Pew's share of this transaction realized for him 10,0001, in a forenoon. Out of 90,0001, the entire assets of the Bank, from 70,0001, to 80,0001, were borrowed by him on the most unstable securities. The Court, notwithstanding, saw no fraud in the case, and threw its protection over his person. He was a few years since a man of enormous wealth, but he was mad on the subject of speculation; and thus has ruined himself and hundreds of those who went along with him."

Two public trials by special commission are in progress, the accused being civil servants charged with very grave official crimes. The first case is that of Mr. H. Palmer, the superintendent of stamps at Calcutta, the charges against whom are as follows:—

"That Mr. Palmer wrote to Rajah Suttachurn Ghosal, on the 8th of February, 1849, offering an appointment in the Stamp-office to any one who would assist him with Rs. 45,000: that in April or May last, he intimated to one Rada Madub Mookerjea that a loan of Company's Rs. 30,000 was necessary as a condition to a nomination to the office of tavildar of stamps: that he entered into joint pecuniary transactions with a subordinate officer in his department, viz. Doorga Persaud Mookerjea, the then tavildar, for the purpose of raising loans for his own benefit, or that of Doorga Persaud Mookerjea; and that on the 2nd of August, 1847, he jointly with Doorga Persaud Mookerjea borrowed Rs. 500 from one Byrub Chunder Paulit, upon a promissory note, which was renewed in favour of the same party for Rs. 400, on the 11th of May, 1848."

The other case is that of Messis. Pringle and Pearson, the Judge and Magistrate of Purneah, who are charged by Mr. Cruise, a resident in the district, with offences almost too numerous to mention—attempt to murder, violence, perjury, and subornation of perjury being among them. These accusations are supported by depositions of extreme length, which are yet incomplete.

The Madras papers contain few matters of prominent interest. The reports from Hyderabad represent the affairs of the Nizam as in the same disorder as before the new minister's appointment. He has been unable to fulfil his promises to the Resident of finding money for the arrears due to the contingent, and the latter functionary has consequently been obliged to draw on the general treasury.

From China, the intelligence in confined to the subject of piracy and the death of Admiral Sir F. A. Collier, the naval Commander-in-Chief. The position of affairs at Macao remains unaltered.

Some particulars respecting the proceedings of the Baptist missionaries in Siam, reported by one of themselves, and published in their own periodical, are given elsewhere. They wear, to our mind, a very strange appearance; but we at present refrain from any further comment upon them.

TRIAL BY JURY THROUGHOUT INDIA.

The draft of a proposed Act was read in council for the first time on the 26th October, amending and establishing throughout British India the "Trial by Jury," whereby it is enacted, that every person who, at the time of his committal for trial before a sessions judge, claims to be tried by a jury, shall be entitled so to be tried; that all persons of reputed intelligence, respectability, and consideration, between the ages of twenty-five and fifty years, are qualified to serve on juries; that all qualified persons are liable to serve on juries, with certain exceptions; that whenever any jury trial is to be had, five persons shall be chosen by lot at the time of holding the sessions, from those who attend on their summons; in default of a sufficient number, the judge shall make up the jury from the persons present in court, or whom he shall cause to be summoned for the purpose; that either the prosecutor or the prisoner may object to any of the persons chosen to be of the jury, stating the ground of his objection; if it is allowed by the judge, the juryman objected to shall be set aside for that trial, and another chosen in his stead; that one of the jury shall be appointed by the judge to act as their foreman; that, all the evidence for and against the prisoner shall be taken in the presence and hearing of the jury, who shall also be entitled to suggest questions to the witnesses, which, if proper to be put, shall be put under the direction of the judge; at the end of the trial the judge shall explain the evidence to the jury, and thereon the foreman shall declare, for the verdict of the jury, whether in their opinion, or in the opinion of a majority of them, the prisoner is guilty or not guilty; that, as soon as the verdict is given, the judge shall declare his approval or disapproval of it; if the judge approves of a verdict of not guilty, the prisoner shall be discharged: if the judge approves of a verdict of guilty, he shall proceed to pass sentence on the prisoner, or send the proceedings for final sentence to the nizamut or foundaree adawlut, as the case may be, according to law; and the jury shall have no voice in deciding on the amount of punishment to be awarded: if the judge disapproves of the verdict, he shall refer the case with his observations to the nizamut or foujdaree adawlut; that an appeal shall lie to the nizamut or foujdaree adawlut against the decision of the judge in not setting aside a juryman objected to: if on such appeal the objection is sustained, the Court may order a new trial; that, after the passing of this Act, no futwah shall be required in any case from the law officer of any Court.

A NEW MILITARY RETIRING FUND.

Some months ago we noticed with approval a plan of a Lieutenant-Colonels' Retiring or Bonus Fund, on an entirely new and, as it appeared to us, highly feasible principle. The principle was that the bonus should be raised in each instance by the majors of the army, instead of by an universal subscription from all ranks. The proposed fund evidently contained an element of success which all preceding schemes of the same kind had wanted. It required that seventy-eight officers only should be consenting par-We have been informed ties, instead of some seventeen hundred. that, notwithstanding the refusal of a few regimental majors to support the scheme, the fund has come, or is about to come, immediately into active operation, and that several lieutenantcolonels have announced their readiness to accept the bonus. We hope that this may be so, and that army promotion may receive the fillip in consequence, which at present it so urgently requires. We shall be happy to do any thing in our power to forward the working of the scheme. As an auxiliary to to the Lieutenant-Colonels' Retiring Fund, and to ease the burden of supporting it in some small degree to the majors of the arms, a committee of offers in the north west requires are the army, a committee of officers in the north-west provinces are endeavouring to procure subscriptions, to be carried to the general fund, from the senior captain and senior lieutenant of regiments. Every retirement of a lieutenant-colonel gives promotion of course to one captain and one lieutenant as well as to a major. The senior captain and lieutenant, therefore, of regiments are giving their money for no remote or intangible object if they subscribe to this Retiring Fund. The benefit to be derived is just as tangible to them as to the majors. Instead of remaining six or more years in the position of senior captain and senior lieutenant, the operation of the fund, if its success is at all proportionate to expectation, will be to promote them in four years. To the senior captain of regiments in particular the working of the fund must be most advantageous, and it may be expected that class will not grudge to forward their own obvious interests by subscribing to it.—Englishmen, Oct. 24.

LAW.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS COURT, OCT. 27.

In the Matter of Sir Thomas Turton's insolvency.—Sir Thomas Turton filed his schedule in the Insolvent Court. The total amount of liabilities which it exhibits is about twelve lakks of rupees—of which about three-fourths arise in respect of the deficit in his official accounts. Of the remainder the chief portion consists of loans taken up from the Laudable Society, and others, collaterally secured by the deposit of Union Bank shares. The whole of the assets were conveyed last year to trustees for the benefit of his general creditors, but the unadministered portion will now be made over to the official assignee. An application being made for an interim order,

Sir L. PEEL, C.J. delivered the following judgment :plication was made to me yesterday by Mr. Morton on behalf of the insolvent, who had filed his schedule two days previously, for a protection order from arrest under the late Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in India. An attachment for the nonpayment of money had been granted against Sir Thomas Turton on the Equity Side of the Court, in a suit in which he is a defendant. At the time of the application for the protection order, the insolvent had not been taken under the attachment, and was not in actual custody. It was argued by Mr. Morton, in support of the application, that the proper course for the Court to adopt, and that most consistent with the practice, would be to issue the order, and to leave it to the aggrieved parties to move to rescind it. In support of that argument, he quoted a passage in page 70 of Mr. Skinner's work on the Insolvent Act. I do not at all dispute the accuracy of the learned author, and I entirely agree that the general rule is as he has stated in his work, which is learned and accurate, and likely to be very useful. But the learned author, as it appears to me, did not mean to state that the rule was without exception. In the majority of cases, the Court would not possess the knowledge of any disqualifying conduct. The judge of the Insolvent Court cannot, any more than any other judge acting under the English law, make his actual knowledge, extrajudicially acquired, the ground of any decision. Though he chance to unite in his own person the characters of judge in district courts, the knowledge derived from the evidence before him on a cause in one court is extrajudicial in the other, and the facts must be presented to him by legal means; no lawyer would contend to the contrary. But though I fully admit I have invariably acted on this view of the law, that the Judge of the Insolvent Court must proceed secundum allegata et probata, yet, in my opinion, he may use his actual knowledge, however acquired, for the purpose of exercising those powers for the eliciting evidence with which the law invests him as a judge of the court. He may, therefore, before he makes a protection order, call for the attendance of the insolvent, and for the production of the documentary evidence in the cause. It is the corrector course in every case to inspect the schedule before a protection order be granted. It is documentary evidence in the cause already on the files of the court. In a late cause in the Insolvent Court, I stated that when any protection order was about to be applied for, and the insolvent had been previously discharged under a former petitition, it would be proper for the officer of the court to bring the previous discharge to the notice of the Court, in order that the judge might send for and inspect the schedule—which was a clear intimation of my opinion that such would be the duty of the Court in a case apparently requiring more than ordinary caution. The distinction for which I contend may be illustrated by an analogous case. A juror cannot make his private throwledge of the facts of the case the basis of his concurrence in a verdict; he must tender himself to be examined as a witness in the cause. But he may put questions to the witnesses; and if a witness be produced who to his knowledge care companying to the desired facts. duced who to his knowledge can communicate the desired facts, he may elicit those facts by appropriate questions. The source of his knowledge is unimportant or general. So it is with a judge: for a judge deciding on facts may do what the juror may do in the case supposed. I have not the least doubt of this, and should never have hesitated at any time to act on this opinion. The debts in the schedule are mostly due to the estates which were under administration by Sir Thomas Turton as ex officio administrator under the statute. These were in no way under the administration of the Supreme Court. It had no power over any unless a bill were filled in Equity. It had merely a limited statutory power over the custody of the assets and the accounts. Yet, as the exofficio administration was conferred by statute on an officer of the Supreme Court, and the Court had power in a proper case to suspect or remove that officer, and had also power to vary its rules as to the custody of the assets, I should not have hesitated at any time if I had had any knowledge or ground to think there was misdealing with the assets, or any non-observance of the rules of the Court as to the assets on the part of the Registrar, whatever the source of my knowledge or suspicion might have been, to do all that I could legally do to ensure for the future more correct conduct of the office. There is no inconsistency whatever between my present decision and any opinion at any time expressed by me : and I must have been misunderstood if it has been supposed that I doubted of my power, or mistook my duty in this respect, in consequence of any erroneous opinion as to the sources of knowledge whence a judicious act must emanate. Entertaining this opinion, I sent for the schedule immediately on Mr. Newmarch's application, which preceded that of Mr. Morton. I have carefully perused it. It is impossible for me to make the order asked for: the schedule discloses very many and flagrant breaches of trust, knowingly and deliberately committed; long contined without even the excuse of pressure of circumstances, and studiously concealed. It is true that in the vast majority of cases the sums abstracted are small; and that by reason of more persons than one generally being interested in the sums abstracted, less individual suffering will result than might have been expected; but this consideration slightly, if at all, affects the character of the offence. It is, therefore, my painful duty to state that an insolvent of this character can expect no lenient consideration of his case. It may be of use here to explain the principle on which the Insolvent Court proceeds, when it retains at the later stage of the hearing the petition of the insolvent for relief, notwitstanding it has evidence before it of disqualifying conduct. In such cases it acts not out of regard to the insolvent, but for the protection of the interests of creditors. As for instance where there are distributable assets in hand, which the dismissal of the petition might place beyond the reach of creditors. Yet, though it may, for such sufficient reason, retain the petition of the insolvent it by no means follows that in such a case an insolvent, who has merited punishment will escape it. The appropriate penal provision of the Act may be applied at the request of any aggrieved and opposing creditor. The power of the Court to punish without the co-operation of an opposing creditor, which it possesses under the 50th section, is limited to the cases therein enumerated, and does not apply to breaches of trust, however flagrant. Yet, if the insolvent be a trader, and there has been the commission of such breaches of trust, and though there has been no opposition, the Court has still some power, though at a later stage, to mark its disapprobation for such conduct, by withholding the final order in the nature of a certificate.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER'S APPOINTMENTS .- The Calcutta Englishman complains that one of the first appointments which has fallen into the gift of Sir Charles Napier has been bestowed on an officer, Capt. Capel, 53rd N.I., who "has done less regimental duty, and had more leave than almost any other officer of his standing in the service." The question naturally arises, is this the result that was anticipated from the much talked of "service returns?" Is Capt. TAX UPON BEARDS.—The Hurkaru translates from a native paper an amusing item. A Hindoo widow, possessed of a large property near Purneah, attempted to pull down a musjeed (Mussulman mosque), and the Mohammedans resisted her servants. Upon which, the widow laid a tax upon every Moslem beard in her Zemindaree, and ordered all who refused to pay it to be immediately shorn of the cherished ornament.

Fancy a journey of between 1,300 and 2,000 miles, occupying several weeks, and involving an expense treble that of travelling in England! Fort William, Nov. 2, 1849. — The following general order by the Most Noble the Governor general of India is to be substituted for that, dated Simla, the 18th October, 1849, regarding the rates of pay and allowances of the troops in the Punjab, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 27th idem, at page 1052 :-

Pay and Allowances.

Simla, Oct. 25, 1849.—The Punjab having now become a British province, the troops will, from the dates hereinafter mentioned, receive the same rates of pay and allowances as in the other provinces of the presidency of Fort William in

Bengal.

2. The troops, which shall cross to the west of the Sutledge and Beas, after the date of this order, shall receive the usual marching and cantonment rates receivable in other divisions of the army; with the exception of troops, who may be stationed across the river Indus.

3. These troops, being on the extreme frontier of a newlyconquered country, and required to be in constant readiness to move at a moment's notice, will for the present, and until further orders, continue to receive Scinde allowances.

4. The native mustered establishments, including dooly bearers and others attached to troops, stationed across the Indus, will in like manner, received field batta when so

5. The troops now serving in the Punjab will continue to receive Scinde allowances, until, in the course of relief, they shall cross to the eastward of the Sutledge or Beas.

6. Companies of sappers and pioneers or other native troops, and natives attached to troops and companies of European artillery now serving in the Punjab, and who may not be relieved, will continue to receive Scinde allowances until the 1st of January, 1850.

No. 396 of 1849. - The following addition is to be made to the last para of the general order by the Governor-General, dated Simla, the 18th October, 1849, publishing extracts of letter from the Hon. the Court of Directors, No. 15, of the 22nd August, 1849, regarding medals and bars:

After the word "Goojerat" to be added—
"Observing — We are of opinion that the distinctive bars should be limited to these services, being those which were especially named in the votes of thanks by the houses of Parliament, by the General Court of Proprietors, and by our Court.'

COURT-MARTIAL. MAJOR THOMAS COOKE, 17th N.I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Oct. 19, 1849 .- At a general courtmartial assembled at Lahore, on Friday, Sept. 28, 1849, Major

T. Cooke, was arraigned on the following charges :

First. - For unofficer-like conduct, especially unbecoming an officer commanding a regt., in having, at Jugraon and at Mullickpore, in the months of Feb. and Mar., 1849, played at chess and at cards with Captain L. G. Da Costa, 58th N.I., for large stakes and bets, in the course of which play he lost to Capt. Ca Costa the sum of Rs. 26,000, or thereabouts; such conduct being in direct disobedience of repeated general orders prohibiting gambling in the army; viz. g. o. by the C.-in-C., dated respectively Sept. 25, 1820, Aug. 16, 1831, and June 26, 1845.

Second.—For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Mullickpore, about Mar. 17, 1849, and at Lahore, about Apr. 21 and May 21, 1849, tried to evade the payment of the large sum he had lost to Capt. DaCosta, by endeavouring to induce him to accept a much smaller amount on various pretences; by offering Capt. DaCosta whatever money he, Maj. Cooke, might win at Simla in the present year; and by declaring that he could never pay the whole sum he had lost; and in having further demurred to pay on account of certain calumnious reports to the prejudice of Capt. DaCosta's character, which he, Maj. Cooke, had spread about; for spreading which he afterwards, about May 23, 1849, apologized to Capt. Da-Costa.

Third .- For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in having, in a letter addressed to the maj. of brig at Lahore, dated Lahore, July 21, 1849, given inaccurate statements of the transactions between himself and Capt. DaCosta, in the following instances:

First. - In having, in the said letter, made a false statement in the following words:—" Merely as an amusement we did play together at chess and at cards for one rupee per game; that afterwards, when under excitement, some large bets were made, ending in my having lost Rs 26,000, this being a larger sum than I could immediately command, I requested Capt. DaCosta to wait till I could draw the money from England, when the debt should be paid, but he replied that he would prefer half paid down, and it ended by my giving a bill for Rs. 10,000, a buggy, and horse, and cash, equalling together Rs. 13,000," whereas in truth the parties played for large stakes, besides making large bets, and Capt. DaCosta did not state he would prefer half paid down, neither was any prompt payment either offered or agreed to in respect of the greater part of the amount; but he was induced to agree to the specified arrangement by Major Cooke declaring, on his honour, that he would never be able to pay more of the debt he had incurred than the said sum of Rs. 13,000, and further induced thereto by Major Cooke retracting and apoligizing for the calumnious reports he had spread about regarding him.

Second.—In having, in the said letter, disingenuously and falsely stated as follows:—" He (Capt. da Costa) then considered his character injured by me, and applied to his commanding officer, who applied to me, and expressed himself in writing perfectly satisfied, but Capt. da Costa was not so, and referred the case to Brig. Godby, but subsequently recalled the reference of his own accord;" thereby insinuating, that Capt. Da Co-ta had no ground for making that complaint, whereas he, Major Cooke, had injured the character of Capt. Da Costa, and the commanding officer of the 58th N.I. did not express himself satisfied till Maj. Cooke had expressed his regret, while Capt. Da Costa, who still pressed his complaint upon the attention of superior authority, was at length induced to withdraw it solely by Maj. Cooke's subsequent retraction of all that he had said to the prejudice of Capt. Da Costa, and making an apology for it.

Finding .- On the 1st charge, guilty.

2nd charge, guilty; and guilty of the preamble to the 2nd charge.

3rd charge, 1st instance, not guilty, and acquit him.

2nd instance, guilty; and guilty of the preamble of the 3rd charge.

Sentence. - To be dismissed from the service.

Confirmed. (Signed) C. J. NAPIER, Gen. C.-in-C. Head-Quarters, Simla, 17th Oct. 1849.

Remarks by H. E. the C.-in-C.-I cannot approve of the finding of acquittal on the 1st instance of the 3rd charge, which appears to me to be sufficiently proved.

Recommendation of the Court.—The court beg to recommend the prisoner to the merciful consideration of H. E. the C .- in-C., on the following grounds :-

1st. Because the prisoner showed a disposition to pay, as evinced by his attempt to borrow from Rs. 18,000 to Rs. 20,000 from the N.W. Bank agency, on April 21, 1849.

2nd. Because he did not originate the reports against Capt.

DaCosta.

3rd. On account of the excellent character Maj. Cooke has hitherto borne, as shown by the handsome testimonials which have been placed before the Court.

Remarks by his Exc. the C.-in-C .- It is with pain that I express my inability to discover any just grounds for disturbing the sentence pronounced by the Court.

The name of Maj. T. Cooke will cease to be borne on the rolls of the 17th N.I., from the date of the publication of this order at Lahore: a report of which is to be made to the adjutant-general of the army, and to the assistant adjutant general at the presidency.

MARKETS.

The import markets have been very dull and inactive. Cotton piece goods have generally been neglected, and dealers show but little anxiety to operate. Mule twist, on the contrary, is looking up; the lower numbers, 20 to 40, as is usual at the commencement ture of a thicker and warmer cloth, have improved in value; Nos. 50 and 60 are also very saleable; with respect, however, to Nos. 70 and upwards, stocks are increasing, and prices remain depressed. # MISCELLANEOUS.

THE REV. MR. MAHON. - The Government Gazette announces the removal of the Rev. Mr. Mahon from the office of garrison chaplain at Fort. St. George. This, we suppose, is to be regarded as a brief but forcible expression of the opinion formed by the local government on the much-disputed question as to the propriety of the rev. gentleman's refusal to afford Christian burial to an English soldier because he had not the assurance of a coroner's jury that the man had not killed himself.

CAPT. WATT, 23rd N. I., will, the Spectator hears, be brought to trial on account of the recent affray with the Moplas.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to Sept. 24, reached Occupation of the Nerbudda Stations by Madras Troops. A recent letter from Kamptee mentions that rumours of an immediate occupation of the Nerbudda stations by the Madras troops are said to have arrived there from the Commander-in-Chief's camp. The 8th L. C. and the 29th and 32nd N. I. are spoken of as the corps intended to furnish the relief.

spoken of as the corps intended to fairned the lener.

Tarrer.—The Custom House authorities, in conjunction with the Board of Revenue, are busily engaged in revising the It is understood that the present plan of imposing a fixed duty according to a permanent scale of valuation will be entirely done away with, and the ad valorem principle substituted in all cases without exception. The new rules, however, are not expected to come into operation before January next.

The Barque Orpheus, of London, Capt. Thomas Mann, having a portion of her cargo of oil on board, grounded on the Southern bank in getting out of Cochin harbour on the 12th Oct. The vessel is described as being a perfect wreck.

Accidental to Light Hutchingon. 28th N.I.— A letter

ACCIDENT TO LIEUT, HUTCHINSON, 28TH N.I.— A letter fom Sundeep, dated the 14th Oct., states that as Lieutenant Hutchinson, of the 28th M. N.I., stationed at Chittagong, was on his passage to Calcutta, his boat was wrecked on the evening of the 12th, on a chur near the island of Sundeep. Mrs.
Hutchinson and her child were drowned. Mr. H., with his kliansamah, cook, and seven others, held on to one of the planks of the boat, and were swept about by the violence of the storm all night and the following day, when they were discovered by an all night and the following day, when they were discovered by an inhabitant of the island, who sent a boat to pick them up, and they found shelter in the house of the Ijaradar of the island.

HINDU WIDOWS' PENSION FUND.—The Madras Advertiser states that the Hindus of that presidency have resolved to establish a pension fund for the benefit of their widows. We have always objected to the introduction of native members in any European assuring fund, particularly with reference to the uncovenanted service, but the present case is widely different. The great obstacle to the admission of natives has been, not so much the absence of statistical information, but the impossibility of preventing fraud. No European would be able to ascertain with certainty the fact of the death of a Hindu female, but the native Directors in this new institution will have far more ample means of information. They are admitted within precincts to which no Englishman can obtain access, and as it is almost impossible to perpetrate a deliberate fraud upon a native in money matters, we think the proposed scheme has a very fair prospect of success. The establishment of a scheme of this nature also displays a much higher tone of feeling among the Hindus of Madras, than, judging from their recent conduct, we had been disposed to give them credit for.—Friend of India.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF and staff arrived at the presidency from Bangalore, on the 20th October. Shortly after he reached Madras he inspected the head-quarter brigade, and was so dissatisfied with its disciplinary condition, that he ordered the brigade to parade weekly for field exercise. It is reported that Sir George purposes leaving again in February, taking Trichinopoly en route to Bangalore.

Corron. - A paragraph in our Overland for July has, we find from the Manchester Guardian, been made the subject of a correspondence between the Manchester Commercial Association and the Court of Directors. The paragraph in question referred to the contemplated abandonment by Government of the experiments in cotton culture at the Coimbatore farm, and though pro-nounced by the Guardian—on what grounds we cannot make out—to be "only partially true," was strictly correct. At the time we penned the announcement that the experimental cultivation of cotton under the superintendence of the officers of Government, and at its expense, was to be abandoned (at Coimbatore, that is, for we never once alluded to Broach), the local Government, in pursuance of what it considered the express injunctions of the Court, had ordered not only the discontinuance of the cultivation of cotton by Dr. Wight, in Coimbatore and Tinnevelly, but also of all dealings for the purchase and shipment of cotton, and the immediate breaking up of every establishment for any of these purposes in those districts. This information, at the time we gave it, was not "partially," but fully and literally correct. We are happy to be able to say now, that in consequence of fresh instructions from the Court of Directors, Dr. Wight has been directed to remain at his present post and carry on further operations. - Madras Athenaum, Nov. 13.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHOLERA HOSPITAL. - A subscription for a cholera hospital, to be placed under Dr. Mosgrove, has been commenced, and Mirza Ali Mahomed Khan, a rich Mussulman, has generously appropriated to this object two houses, which yield a monthly rental of Rs. 250.

AUSTRALIAN COPPER .- It appears that a small shipment of South Australian copper from the Burra Burra mines has reached Bombay from Adelaide. This is noticeable as the first consignment of what may ere long become a large and important

THE H. Q. WING OF H.M.'s 22ND REGT. reached Kurrachee harbour Nov. 4.

MACLEAN v. CRISTALL .- The defendant in this case has consented to pay Rs. 2,000 damages to the plaintiff; further proceedings, therefore, have been stayed.

THE INDIAN NAVY may be premised at present to consist of sixty vessels in all. Of these, twenty-three are sea-going steamers, nineteen built of wood and four of iron—three of 1,500 tons, and two above 1,100—one vessel of wood and ten of iron for river navigation. Of sailing vessels we have one frigate, four sloops, ten brigs, three schooners, two cutters, two tenders, and two pattimers. The total cost of this fine flotilla amounts in all to about 300,000%. a year,-or, including wear and tear of ships, losses, renewals, &c., to close on 400,000l, a year; or if we add works, to a considerable fraction over this.—Bombay Times.

THE DUKSHINA DONATION. - For some considerable time the Bombay Times has published letters from different correspondents upon the subject of the Dukshina annual donation at Poonah. It is difficult to discover from the conflicting and exaggerated statements of the writers the real matter in dispute, but it appears to be the following: - The Mahratta sovereigns of Poonah were in the habit of displaying their generosity and zeal for Hindooism by an annual gift to the principal Brahmins around their capital. Under the British rule, a part of the fund destined for this purpose has been diverted to the promotion of education, but Rs. 23,000 are still annually devoted to the support of mendicant idleness. "Young India," that is, those learned in English literature, and the pundits, have quarrelled upon the mode of distribution, and after two or three disgraceful scenes, the victory has remained with the latter. The best plan for the Government to adopt, in our humble opinion, The would be the entire suppression of the fund, unless any positive and unqualified promise was made to continue it at the period of the conquest. It is entirely a state contribution, and the state is not quite rich enough just now to throw away 2,300l. a-year in supplying lazy priests with oil and rice.—Friend of India.

CAPT. Ross, whose death was recently announced, had, for half a century, belonged to the naval service of the East-India Company, during the greater part of which time he was actively and unceasingly engaged as surveyor and hydrographer. To him we are indebted for the greater part of the surveys of the shores of the bay of Bengal from the Sunderbunds round to the Straits of Malacca, the Malay Peninsula, the Gulf of Siam, and so on by the coast of China so far as surveys could be made, on to the fortieth parellel. As a survyor, Capt. Ross was distinguished not only for the great ability and scientific attainments, but for that thorough good sense which at once indicates where especial pains should be taken, and where, when time and means are limited, excessive labour would be a profitless waste of both. He scanned with a seaman's eye the salient points before him, leaving the minutiæ to others with more leisure on hand, and performed a larger amount of substantial work than was ever before accomplished with the same command of means.

CHINA.

Macao. - The position of affairs remains unaltered. The Chinese refuse to surrender the head and hand of Governor Amaral until the Portuguese liberate three Chinese soldiers who witnessed the murder, and whose evidence is supposed to be of importance. The China Mail-a paper long suspected of being in the Chinese interest-labours with much subtlety to make out a good case for Seu. It endeavours to show that the Chinese authorities were in no way connected with the murder, and that a miserable wretch beheaded at Canton was the murderer.—Friend of China, Oct. 29.

Admiral Collier.—We regret having to announce the death of Rear-Admiral Sir Francis A. Collier, c. s., commander-in-chief of H. M.'s naval force in China. The deceased drove out in the carriage of Chief Justice Hulme on Saturday afternoon; he retired to rest at the usual hour (in the judge's house, with whom he has lived for some weeks), and on Sunday morning his servant found him dead in bed. Last spring, Sir Francis had a paralytic stroke, followed by an attack of gout, from which he never fairly recovered. - Ibid.

Piracy.—The vessels of war have been chiefly engaged in the suppression of piracy. Captain Hay, of her Majesty's brig Columbine, and Captain Wilcox, of her Majesty's steamer Fury, have destroyed a formidable fleet of 30, with their dockyards, not more than 40 miles from this colony. The chief, Chui-Apoo, had, until lately, a manufactory of gunpowder on this island. He was also engaged in the murder of Capt. Da Costa and Lieut. Dwyer, which took place in February last. The Columbine and Fury, along with the East-India Company's steamer Phlegethon, were despatched to the west coast, in search of the celebrated pirate chief, Chap-ing-tsai, and his formidable fleet, alluded to last month. The expedition has not yet returned, owing, probably, to the severe gales that have lately prevailed, and to the difficulty of discovering the pirates in their places of retreat. These piratical junks average 500 tons each, carry 12 to 18 guns, some of them 24-pounders, and chiefly of English manufacture. The pirates have hitherto always been the first to give a broadside; and they not only manage their guns well, but fight desperately.

WRECKS.—We are sorry to hear a report that the Coquette, a well-known opium clipper, was lost during a typhoon in the Chinese seas, on or about the 13th of September. Two other vessels are said to have been wrecked during the same gale, but we have not heard their names .- Hurkaru, Nov. 2.

SIAM.

(Communicated by Rev. J. H. Chandler).—August 7, 1849.—
"We have just passed through a season of that awful scourge, the cholera. It began in this city on the 17th of June. For the first twelve days of its raging, over 20,000 deaths were reported to the king. It continued about a month, and I think it may be safely said that 25,000 died in Bangkok within that time. It passed from us to the towns and villages in the country. We hear reports of its raging in some places much worse than among us. Mr. Hemenway, Dr. House and myself, of the mission circle, had slight attacks. Two English merchants, and a European writer, were taken with it; the latter only died. Only one of the disciples died. Soon after the cholera had sbated, one of the king's officers sent a letter to us, stating that it was customary when any calamity befel the country-like the cholera, and had passed away, to make presents of live animals to the king. The object of the present was said to be, to congratulate the king on the passing away of the cholers, and an expression of our good-will to the country. We were assured that it was not a religious or an idolatrous act. With this assurance we complied with the request. Our present was put at twenty fowls, ten ducks, and one pig. The Presbyterian mission were requested to make the same presents, and on receiving the same assurance made to us, they acceded to the request. But instead of sending the animals to the king, we were let off by paying the price of them. Having done this, we were requested to write an address to the king, embodying our congratulations to the king, our feelings and sentiments in regard to the cholera, and good wishes for the welfare of To this request we all acceded, and sent The presents solicited from us were rethe country. our address. quested from all European residents. All complied, except the Catholic missionaries. On informing the king of their refusal, he declared that unless they did give, they should leave the country. The Catholics refused because they believed it to be a work of religious merit. The king's officers used various efforts to persuade them to comply, but all utterly refused except the bishop. Their final refusal was made known to the king, and he immediately ordered them, eight in all, out of the country.

"It will be no great loss to Siam to be without Catholic missionaries; still I cannot but feel a sympathy for them. Had we known as much about the affair when our presents were paid for as we do now, it is doubtful whether we should have complied. The banishing of these missionaries does not speak well for the king. We can but feel anxious in relation to the future. But the Lord reigneth, and in him will we trust. Chinese converts were immersed and joined our mission church on the first Sabbath in June. Our mission circle is at present in pretty good health."—Calcutta Oriental Baptist Mag. for Nov.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

A Calcutta journal contains some curious facts in the history of the Moplas of Malabar, who have recently figured in so remarkable a manner in the affray at Malliapooram, in Cannanore.

These Moplas are, as we mentioned at the time, descendants of Arabians, who settled on the coast in the seventh century. It is said that their first colony arose at Calicut, where, having converted a petty Nair chief, named Permaul Naick, they became possessed, under his protection, of a little power. In that vicinity some Mopla families are to be found, who pride themselves on possessing still in their veins uncontaminated Arab blood. The term Mopla is that given to them by the Hindus. Amongst themselves they acknowledge none other than that of Musulmans, and from their descent consider themselves as immediately connected with their Prophet, and thereby of a far more honourable stock than the Tartar Musulmans of India, with whom they hold little or no religious communion.

The first colonists, having gained a footing, soon began to make proselytes; and thus their circle gradually increased. They brought a number of Abyssinian slaves, the descendants of whom are still to be found amongst them, in a species of bondage. These first colonists, displaying an active enterprising spirit, soon began to spread along the coast, and thereby became possessed of a considerable portion of its trade. The written character now in use amongst them is distinct from Arabic, and differs altogether from Hindustani. With them learning is almost entirely neglected, and is solely confined to the religious order, even with whom it is at a very low standard. The Moplas of the coast are all merchants and traders; those of the interior are petty shopkeepers, farmers, and cultivators. The spirit of enterprise which their forefathers possessed is eminently conspicuous in those of the coast, all of whom are engaged in adventure, some to a considerable extent; many of them are owners of ships of large burthen, and trade with Arabia and other countries, whilst hundreds of others are possessors of the small coasting patimars. The Moplas of the interior were, during the reign of Tippoo, encouraged in every species of licentious outrage on the lives, persons, and property of Hindus, Nairs, and Tiars. They became the great zemindars of the province, and lorded it over their dependants with unrestricted sway. since, they have retained an overbearing, intolerant spirit, which a Jook and word will often kindle into bloodshed and outrage. They are a much more fierce and fanatic race than their brethren of the coast, who are disposed to disavow them, and are engaged in continual feuds with the Hindu zemindars and farmers. themselves they are generally peaceful, a strong clanship existing amongst them; their evil passions are, therefore, chiefly directed against the infidel Hindus, whom they hold in utter contempt and abhorrence. In the hands of the Tunguls (bishops) all religious power is vested; with them a mighty influence exists, to be wielded for good or evil, as the whim may dictate. To be-Tungul the Mopla looks up with profound revence, and yields to him the most implicit fanatical buedience: his breath is law.

Life, and all that he pussesses, he will recklessly and blindly sacrifice at the budding of his priest; in this he resembles the Assascing of former days. The office of Tungul is hereditary, and descends only through the female line, the elder son of the nearest semale relative being heir to the sacerdotal office. In Malaber, both with Hindus and others, all property is disposed of through the same channel. Throughout the country mosques abound, but of a different form and structure to those in other parts of India. They have all sloping roofs, and few, if any, have minarets. In each mosque an Imaum or Moolah resides, appointed by the Tungul. These Tunguls hold lands; some are large possessors, for which they pay no tax. The inferior clergy are supported by the contributions of their followers. As an instance of the power these Tunguls possess over the minds of their followers, the writer relates the following anecdote: "A Tungul, having been the secret instigator of several murders, was informed by the collector that the eyes of Government were 'upon him. The collector, in his report to Government, requested the assistance of a small body of troops to seize in his stronghold this sacred villain. But the reply made by the Government was, that it would be dangerous to interfere with him, and more politic, therefore, to hint to the miscroant that his villany was known, and that any repetition would endanger him. This the collector most forcibly expressed to him, and warned him for the future. On receiving this reproof, the wily priest gave out that he meditated a pilgrimage to Mecca; thereby clothing himself with additional sanctity, and increasing on his return his power over his people. No sooner was his intention bruited abroad, than thousands flocked to see him. He was an old man, and when brought out into the open air, was placed on a raised platform, and from thence gave his benediction to the people. Money, oxen, sheep, grain, everything convertible into specie, was profusely offered to him. He was held in the deepest veneration, and to such a height of adoration had he inspired his people with, that the sick were brought to him to be cured; those who were unable to come sent their friends with money and jars of water, into which they besought him to spit, which he benignly did, at an exorbitant price. Thus prescribed for, they returned with his sacred saliva to their friends, rejoicing in a specific which, if there be any power in faith, far exceeded in efficacy that of any of our Christian quacks."

Tippoo undertook to convert by force to Islam the province of Malabar, a crusade in which he was seconded by these fiery people, whose zeal in such a cause was a passport to heaven. Proselytism or death was the only alternative offered; thus thousands abjured, and embraced the new faith. Tippoo placed the utmost confidence in these zealots, and throughout the country they became the officers and instruments of his government. The peaceable Hindus were hunted, persecuted, and plundered, and those that refused to accept Islam were barbarously tortured and murdered; their women and children being torn from them. Those that escaped the fiery persecution fled to the dense forest of Wynaad, from whence they kept up a continual predatory warfare. It was during this reign of despotism that the Mopla clan so greatly increased. Hindu children by thousands were circumcised, and thus made converts. They have since numerically progressed, until now they are a formidable people.

Every Mopla wears by his side a dagger; it is from this custom that blood with them is so easily shed,—a word, and the poniard is at hand, a dangerous weapon, more especially in the possession of a fanatic race, whose boast would be, on killing an infidel, that "only a dog had been slain."

At a meeting of the Bombay Geographical Society, on the 18th October, Dr. Buist laid before it a notice, by Dr. Giraud, of the saltness of a suit of specimens of water taken by Mr. Morris, chief engineer of the Ajdaha, at intervals from Suez to Bombay. From this it appeared that there were forty grains of salt in 1,000 grains of water in the Gulf of Suez,—there were upwards of thirty-nine grains in all the specimens down to Bombay. In the Atlantic, off the Canaries, there were forty-four grains. The Red Sea, following all its sinuosities, possessed a shore of little less than 4,000 miles of dry and arid country, continually drawing off supplies of moisture, and yielding not one drop of water by stream or rivulet in return. The Mediterranean was believed to give off at least three times as much water in vapour as that which was contributed by all the rivers which flowed into it, including the stream through the Dardanelles: the balance was made up by the current constantly flowing the variable of the stream of the Dardanelles:

.. was much more hot and dry over the Red C. over the new than the Mediterranean, and the former re-ceived all its supplies through the Straits of Babelmandeb. An amount of vapour, equal to a mass of water not less than eight feet in depth, must in this way be carried off annually from the whole of its surface. Supposing the Red Sea to average 800 feet in depth, which, taking shoals and reefs into account, was probably double the fact, a mass of water equal to the entire contents of the sea would be evaporated every century—the sea being twice as salt by the detention of its original saline matter, and the addition of as much more new as that which before As salt may be dissolved in 2.7 its weight of water, so soon as the Red Sea contained as much as thirty per cent. of salt, precipitation would commence: this state of matters, with the addition of four per cent. each century, ought to have been brought about in less than 700 years; yet during the 300 years the Red Sea has been known to us, little alteration appears to have occurred in its physical constitution, though within that period of time it ought to have been converted into one solid mass of sait.

At the same mecting, the following was stated to be the substance of a very interesting paper from Dr. Malcolmson, in reference to certain cold wells around Peshawur. Around Peshawur there are many wells, the temperature of which continues at about 58° throughout the year, when the air is above 90°. They are sunk through fertile alluvial soil to the depth of betwitt 70 and 100 feet. The water is bright, clear, sparkling, and most refreshing. During winter, when the thermometer sometimes approaches the freezing point, the wells are filled brimful from the Barra river: they are then covered over with trees and branches, and left undisturbed till the hot season, when they are thrown open to the public. In the heats of summer, when the thermometer in the shade often rises to an elevation of 112°, nothing can be more delicious than a draught of the bright sparkling water the cold wells around Peshawur supply. To persons suffering from fever, water of this temperature in such a climate is of the greatest benefit. Dr. Malcolmson considers the temperature to be the mean of Peshawur for the year: the latitude of the place is 34°; its altitude above the sea 1,000, the source of its springs probably 3,000, feet. We are altogether ignorant of the direction of the isothermal lines in these regions, and the conjecture is in all likelihood correct. Sir John Leslie, on the authority of Professor Mayer, of Gottingen, gives the mean temperature of lat. 34° at 67° at the level of the sea, and assumes an ascent of 300 feet to be equal to a reduction of one degree. This would make the mean of Peshawur 62.5°, or of the hills around 56°.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

FRIDAY, December 21, 1849.

THE Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock is not constitutionally the best possible appendage of the Government of India. A body, of which any individual, with no other qualification than the possession of money, can at any time, and for any purpose, make himself a part, is but little fitted to take a useful share in the functions of administration. Lord Glenelg, when he dealt his death-blow at the East-India Company, in 1830, speculated upon the possibility of the Court of Proprietors becoming an efficient and a really useful auxiliary in the scheme of Indian rule, substituted which he subverted; and if those who took a lead . ---- men of judgment and in the discussions of the Court week discretion, it might possibly, in some measure, realize object. Of late, however, it would seem to be the aim of the orators in that assembly to lessen its influence, to degrade its character as a council of the executive, and to make it the arena of disputations which only a great stretch of forbearance can prevent our regarding as being prompted by private and personal motives.

For some time past, subjects have been over and over again brought under discussion in the Court of Proprietors, which, perhaps, ought never to have been mooted there at all, but which, at all events, when once determined, should have been set at rest; yet, for some reason or other, these subjects are obtruded with a pertinacity perfectly nauseous. The public are, we will venture to say, disgusted with the eternal agitation of the Sattara question, the Scinde question, and the 6th Madras Cavalry question. Parliament has repelled them, the Press repudiates them; yet some two or three gentlemen, who have a few hundred pounds invested in East-India Stock, assume to themselves a right, at every quarterly Court, to inflict upon the Directors their niaiseries upon these topics, in speeches repeated for the hundredth time, and for the hundredth time refuted. We understand (though our Reporter has not deemed it necessary to notice the fact) that, in the proceedings of the Court on Wednesday last, the dull monotony of former debates (as they are by courtesy termed) was diversified by a specimen of the vulgarities of a police court. Surely the gentlemen who thus comport themselves are not aware that these exhibitions are lowering the constituency in the estimation of the public, and preparing the way for the extinction of their Court, which, if it does not correspond to the expectations formed of it, is a mere excrescence, and, in point of fact, a nuisance, which cannot be too soon abated.

The ill effect which is wrought by the Court's being inthe possession, as it were, of persons who so pervert its purposes, is twofold; it destroys, in præsenti, the utility of the Court, and it deters men of talents and experience, whose counsels would be valuable to the executive, from taking part in its deliberations, through an apprehension of. being identified with its preposterous proceedings.

WE have received private communications,—that is, communications not intended for publication,—remonstrating with us upon the views supposed to be entertained on our part upon the subject of "Conversions in India," as indicated in an article which appeared in our last issue. It issaid that these views are not the views of pious persons,.. sincerely desirous of emancipating the Hindus from the thraldom of a degrading superstition; that they are theviews of men of the world, indifferent and perhaps hostile to the spread of Christianity; and that no real Christian, who has an honest desire to see the Gospel diffused throughout India,-in other words, of discharging that solemn obligation, for the fulfilment of which India was. consigned by Providence to the British nation,—would dissent from the doctrine of Dr. Duff, that education, the dissemination of secular knowledge, and all preparatory measures, is "beginning at the wrong end," and that we must at once apply ourselves to the "only effective scheme," namely (as we understand the proposition), the open preaching and teaching of Christianity under the direct authorityof the Government.

Now, it is not our intention to enter into a polemical controversy upon such a topic, in which we regret to perceive so much of that odium theologicum which mingles, more or less, in all these religious differences, whether regarding Conversion of Pagans, or Baptismal Regeneration. It is justly vaunted of true Christianity, that charity is its peculiar characteristic; but, alas! how little of that essential quality is to be seen in our discrepancies of opinion even in matters too deep and abstruse for the human intellect to penetrate or comprehend!

In the question immediately before us, we are challenged, as it were, to show that any real Christian, who has an honest desire to see the Gospel triumphant in India, partakes of our views as to the most effective mode of accomplishing that object. In selecting an authority, it would be difficult to find one less open to exception than the late Mr. Wilberforce,—a man of genuine piety, a zealous Christian, an earnest advocate of missionary efforts, a statesman of enlarged views and great experience. In discussing this very question, when it was first agitated, in 1813, with noless a personage than the late Marquess of Wellesley, Mr. Wilberforce delivers his solemn opinion, respecting the proper means of evangelizing India, in the following words, ina letter to Lord Wellesley, dated the 6th April, 1813:-"I have always held," he says, "and still retain, the opinion, that education, the translation and diffusion of the Scriptures, and advancement in general knowledge, would be by far the most powerful agents in the great work of Christianizing the natives of India."*

These were the views and opinions of Mr. Wilberforce, and these are ours; and we shall feel no shame in having erred, if we do err, with one whose character and sentiments display the true spirit of Christianity.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,-I trust you will allow me, in a corner of your valuable paper, to point out the hardship entailed on many officers of the Indian army who revisit their native land on furlough, by the instructions lately issued from the Hon. Court of East-India Directors, relative to subscriptions to regimental bands of music, by which twenty-four days' pay (or double the amount authorized by the Queen's Regulations) is ordered to be deducted from an officer's already too heavily taxed allowance.

I will state the case of a captain of infantry in whose regiment a band is established, and who is induced to revisit home with his family. His pay is, in round numbers, 1911. per annum, but the deductions made at the East-India House on account of income-tax and Military and Orphan Funds reduce it to 167l, from which a further deduction of 12l. 12s. is now to be made, as his annual subscription to his regiments' band, leaving the officer to receive little more than 154.! When it is further borne in mind that an officer who obtains leave to Europe (unless the doctors order him home) has to defray from his own resources the amount charged for passage to and from India, it will I think be allowed by all, that this additional tax must press very heavily, and is in fact a very great hardship.

> I am, Sir, your obedient servant, Том-Том.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

CLOSE OF THE TERM.

Friday, the 14th inst., being the day appointed for closing the second Term of the year 1849, a deputation from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company visited the College, for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Principal, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the various branches of Oriental, classical, and European literature.

A special train left the Shoreditch station of the Eastern Counties Railway at 11 o'clock; and on the arrival of the Directors and visitors at Haileybury, the distinguished party proceeded to the lodge to pay their respects to the Principal (the Rev. H. Melvill). The Directors then repaired to the Councilroom, where they received the following highly satisfactory Report from the Rev. the Principal:-

"The Principal has great pleasure in being able to lay before the Hon. the Finance and Home Committee a highly satisfactory report of the proficiency and conduct of the students during the present term.

"Out of eighty students who have been under examination, only two have failed to reach the prescribed tests, and these two have failed only in one department. The other seventy-eight bave not merely passed, but a very large proportion of them have displayed attainments considerably exceeding what is actually required,-no fewer than sixty-one having obtained honours, and forty-four of these having reached the highest rank, that of 'highly distinguished.

"All the students of the 4th term have been found duly qualified for leaving College, and have all obtained honours, ten being 'highly distinguished,' and seven having passed with great credit.'

"In addition to the evidence thus afforded of general industry and attention, the Principal is happy to be able to state that the prize for English composition has again excited very great competition. No fewer than forty-three essays were sent in; and of these, whilst many are of a high order of merit, there is not one which does not do credit to the industry and intelligence of the author. It is not possible to peruse these numerous essays, remembering that the writing them is altogether voluntary, without being struck with the amount of knowledge which they display, and without auguring most hopefully of the future career of the authors.

" With regard particularly to the Oriental classes, the Visitor remarks that they have acquitted themselves with very uniform credit. There have been no failures in Sanscrit, and the students at the head of each term have displayed very respectable attainments. In the 2nd term a larger proportion than usual have distinguished themselves by voluntarily acquiring a much greater degree of proficiency than the amount of the established test requires. The 1st term also promises favourably.

" The students of the two senior terms in Persian and Hindustani have also passed a creditable examination. In the 2nd term there have been two failures in Persian; but there is reason to hope that the students who have lost their terms on the present occasion will compensate for it by greater assiduity in future.

"One student of the 4th term, Mr. J. Colvin, besides highly distinguishing himself in the ordinary course of study,-having gained the medal in Sanscrit, and a prize in Persian,—has acquired an acquaintance with the Arabic language to an extent which has rarely, if ever, been equalled in the College. other (Mr. Chapman) has also entitled himself to a reward for his knowledge of Hindee, in addition to the honours he has deserved in Persian and Hindustani, in both of which the medal has been awarded him.

"There is but one student of Telugu in the 4th term, Mr. Chase; but he has gained the medal by his successful study of that language.

" With regard to discipline throughout the term, the Principal has great satisfaction in being able to state that, though the conduct of some few of the students may have occasionally called for animadversion, that of the great body may most justly be described as having been exemplary: it has been as much distinguished by regular conformity to the rules of the place, as by diligent attention to its studies. HENRY MELVILL, P.C.

" East-India College, Dec. 14th, 1849.

After receiving the Report, the deputation proceeded to the Examination hall, where the professors and students had already assembled. The chair was occupied by Major-gen. Mr. W. C. Capper read his Prize Essay, on "The Fine Arts, considered in their Moral and Social Effects." After investi-gating the exact meaning of the term "art," the essayist took a review of those circumstances, internal and external to man, out of which the three great divisions of art, -sculpture, paint ing, and architecture,—arose in ancient Greece; and illustrated, by reference to the history of that land, the effect of these arts in promoting its moral, social, and intellectual advancement, and its material prosperity, and the effect of the docsy of these arts in accelerating its downfal. On concluding the reading of the Essay, Mr. Capper was enthusiastically applauded.

Mr. Chapman read a passage from Malcolm's Persia, translated by himself into Persian.

Mr. Chase read a translation by himself, into Telugu, of a passage in Orme's Historical Shetches of Hindostan, entitled, "The Administration of Justice in Civil Cases."

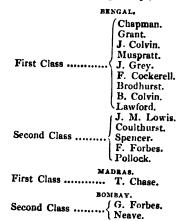

Mr. Chapman also read a passage from Dow's Hindostan, translated by himself into Hindustani.

The Chairman then distributed the medals and prizes to the successful competitors, who were warmly applauded by their fellow-students. When Mr. Chapman (who had obtained no less than six medals and two prizes) came up to receive the reward of his honourable exertion and distinguished merit, the generous gratification of the students was displayed by repeated bursts of enthusiastic cheering. This expression of feeling, so creditable to the students, seemed to give the highest satisfaction to the Chairman and deputation.

Mr. Hooper read the classification of the rank of the students about to depart for India, as follows:

Rank of Students leaving College, December, 1849.

The Chairman then addressed the assembled students to the following effect,—the entire company rising and remaining standing during the address. He said :-

Gentlemen Students,-It is with much satisfaction that my colleagues and myself meet you here this day, because the Court of Directors have received from the Rev. Principal a most favourable report, not only of your conduct here,—of the exem-plary manner in which you have conformed to the rules and discipline of the College during the past term,-but also of the high proficiency you have attained in your various studies. In the name of the Court of Directors I now beg to offer you their cordial acknowledgments and approval of your exemplary conduct. As was to be expected, your progress has kept pace with your diligence and your good conduct. Of eighty students in College, no less than sixty-one have obtained honours. Fortythree English essays have been sent in; many of which are declared to be excellent, and none without merit. This is most satisfactory; and I am sure that you will be grateful to those who have contributed so much to the progress which you have made, and that you will join with me most heartily in returning, as I now do with much pleasure, the sincere acknowledgments of the Court of Directors to your highly-gifted Principal, and to the distinguished professors of this College, for the manner in which they have discharged their arduous and important duties, and conducted your studies to so successful an issue. Gentleman, the Principal of this College, while you remain here, stands to you in the relation of a parent. It is his duty to watch over the moral and religious training of your youthful minds, as well as your progress in learning. He has proved himself eminently worthy of the high station to which he was chosen, by the admirable manner in which he has discharged his arduous and important duties. My young friends, let me entreat you not to neglect the counsel of such a man; husdreds of thousands have been edified, and I trust many saved, by listening to the sacred eloquence of Mr. Melvill. (Applause.) Let me beseech you, also, to attend most assiduously to the instruction you receive from the distinguished professors of this Institution, so that you may be worthy to join that noble service for which you are destined. I observe, by the Report of the Examiner, that seventeen students (ten of whom have earned the highest honours) have been declared qualified to proceed to India, to take a part in the administration of the Government of that country. Gentlemen, the Government of India is one of those mighty instruments which Divine Provi-Gentlemen, the Government of dence has raised up for the civilization of the human race; and well has it been for India that the Almighty Disposer of King. doms has made our country, England, that instrument to her: England, --moral, intellectual, just, generous, magnanimous England! It is the purpose of this Institution to prepare you for taking a part in the administration of that Government Government which stands in the paternal relation to 100,000,000 of our fellow-subjects. I can conceive no object of ambition more worthy of the generous mind than the power of taking a distinguished part in so noble a service. Let me, then, beseech you, my young friends, to strive to attain those qualifications for the discharge of your high duties which this Institution offers you. Gentlemen, you are now about to quit this Insti-tution,—some of you for ever. I trust you do so with a deep sense of its singular value. Let me entreat you who return to College to do so with an ardent desire to prosecute successfully your studies, and with a fixed determination to abide by the rules and discipline of the place, so that you may profit by opportunities, which, if neglected, you will never recover, and must always regret. Gentlemen, there is no part of your education here which is not exceedingly important; but as many of you will be attached to the revenue and judicial branches of the Government, I strongly recommend you to pay great attention to the law of India, both ancient and modern, for I know of nothing that will enable you so well to understand the institutions and customs of the country. On a former occasion I recommended to your notice a work which proceeded from the Law Commission in Calcutta, and which is generally known as the Macaulay Code, as well worthy your attention. I now earnestly repeat this recommendation. I also recommend a work which, although of less eminence, you will find exceedingly useful,—I mean that published by Mr. Henry Carr Tucker. I know of no work better calculated to assist a young gentleman entering the civil service of India. I also secommend you to pay some attention to the practical sciences, chemistry, mineralogy, geology, mechanics, and the general principles of civil engineering,—in order that you, in the important stations to which you will rise, may aid in developing the general resources of the country, and to direct the labour, which will be at your command, with skill and ability in the construction of public works. I have known many of our civil servants who have been remarkable for their success in this important duty; and, what is no less important, for their tact in obtaining the assistance of natives of rank and wealth in their operations. I will mention one. The present resident at Indore, the capital of the once powerful chief Holkar, Mr. Hamilton—and I mention his name with honour-has been one of the most distinguished; his labours have been unceasing, and he has been successful in obtaining the assistance of the wealthy natives of Indore, in those important works which he has taken in hand. He has been zealously instrumental in opening through Central India, roads connecting the presidency of Bombay with that of Agra; and what is more, he has enabled the merchant traveller to carry his goods in safety, and unsearched, through tracks and forests, which before were the abodes of wild beasts, and of men hardly less hostile to the traveller than the beasts of the forest. How has this been done? The roads were made at the joint expense of our own government and of the native states through which they pass, and with the assistance of those very wild tribes, the Bheels, who in former times were so inhospitable; so that the making of these roads has been made auxiliary to the civilization of that wild race of men. The roads are comparatively excellent. The traveller, at the commence-ment of his journey, pays his toll for the distance he intends to The traveller, at the commencego, estimated, not upon what he carries, but by the number of his draught cattle which he uses in the transit; his ticket for this is his warrant, and he proceeds on his, journey without impediment with confidence and delight, for the very Bheels are now his protectors, because those primitive beings have their share of the tolls in proportion to their aid in the construction of the road, and the land belonging to them through which it passes. I have information that "all Bheel plundering has ceased, all detention has been done away with; a small Bheel chief, with two miles and a half road, gets as his share of the tolls, Rs. 1,000 per annum." I read this with great joy when first it was brought to my notice, and I could not help bringing the matter to your knowledge, in order that your minds may be directed to the same course, if ever the opportunity or the necessity should arise for acting in a similar manner; and because I see in these circumstances an evidence of the truth, that civilization keeps pace with the construction of useful public works. (" Hear," and cheers.) I must also mention another instance to you of successful tuct in this department. The idow of Jusurent Rao Halkar was desirous of laying out a lac of rupees as an act of pious benevolence in constructing a ghaut or bathing place on the river which runs past the city of Indore. Mr. Hamilton heard of this, expressed his approval, and suggested to her that if a bridge across the river were built there might be gliauts on both sides. The lady said the idea was excellent, asked how she was to get the bridge built? Mr. Hamilton immediately offered his assistance; and, with his own knowledge of engineering, by the last accounts I have had, a beautiful stone bridge of nine arches was nearly completed over a rapid river on a line of great traffic, where the communication was often obstructed, the river being almost impassable, for long periods; and this work has been accomplished by the zeal and energy of a single individual. I mention these things, that you, my young friends, may be encouraged to similar endeavours to promote the public interests, if ever you should be placed in circumstances which afford you an opportunity. (Cheers.) To you, gentlemen, who now leave this college for India, I will address a few words. On leaving this institution, you have yet another ordeal to pass. It is necessary that, before you enter the public service, you should acquire a knowledge of two vernacular languages in use at your presidency; for, until you understand the language of the people, you will be unfit for public duty. You must get through this ordeal with credit, for your character and your progress must greatly depend upon the position you take in the colleges of India. Having passed, you will then become efficient members of the public service of India, and every act of public duty you perform will affect others as well as yourselves. You must maintain all the gravity and steadiness of character of a man charged with important affairs. Remember that, humble though they, may be over whom your power or your influence may extend, yet that they confide in you, that they look to you for protection and justice, and that they are your fellow-subjects of the British Forget not that it is your duty to raise them in the scale of civilization; and, unless you exhibit in your own person an example of virtue, you can never hope to be able to make an important impression upon them. You will find the natives of India possessed of many good qualities-highly intelligent, and excellent public servants; but, to avail yourselves successfully of their services, it is necessary that you should acquire a knowledge of their language, their customs and manners, and even of their faults. But it is especially necessary that you should acquire a thorough knowledge of your own duties, or you cannot perform them properly. If you possess these qualifications, you will find the natives able and valuable assistants. But you must not place implicit confidence in any man. You must hear all, but judge for yourselves. You must be punctual, regular, and methodical in the performance of your duties, and careful how you discharge them, however unimportant they may Those above you estimate efficiency for high employment, by the manner in which more humble services are performed; and it is necessary that you should show, by the sedulous performance of ordinary duties, that you are qualified for situations of higher trust. Depend upon it that punctuality and steadiness of character are indispensable. In the ordinary affairs of life, depend upon it, steady diligence is the passport to promotion. Great incidents are the exceptions, ordinary duties are the rule. All the talents you possess will avail you nothing, unless you are steady in the discharge of all your duties. With respect to the manner in which you ought to conduct yourselves towards the natives, I do not know that I can recommend to you any better course than the habitual exercise of the virtues of patience, forbearance, and justice. Be kind to them, but not familiar As on a former occasion I observed to you, so I with them. now repeat, I have never known any one habitually ill-tempered towards the natives rise to eminence in the service. They will not readily give you cause of offence. Be patient—be indulgent—be just—be generous towards then. (Applause.) There is one more piont to which I wish to direct your attention. I entreat you to be careful of your personal expenditure. I feel confident that I can trace the ruin of many men, who have been driven from our service in poverty and shame, to heedless, reckless, expenditure, and consequent debt, on entering upon life. The moment you get involved in debt,-from that moment you deprive yourself of liberty. Debt is ruin to every one in every country, but, in India, it is absolute destruction. (Applause.) Let me entreat you, then, as you value every thing that is most dear to you, to beware of the first extravagance; for upon that your character -your prospects, I had almost said-your honour-depends. (Applause.) Let me again remind you that you are to become members of a body to which England has delegated more extensive power than she has ever before committed to man the civil administration of an empire of more than one hundred million of her subjects. You are to join men, who, by devotion to the public service, high talents, energy of character, spotless integrity, have signally upheld the British name. The honour, the reputation, of that body you will have to maintain. That is to be done by following the career of those distinguished men who have gone before you, some of whom I am happy to see here this day. And I will tell you, gentlemen, how they carned their reputation. It was by their devotion to the public service—by their talents applied thereto with energy and perseverance—by their spotless integrity. And I will tell you, also, that in no service on earth is a man so sure of working out his own success as that on which you are about to enter. (Applause.) Gentlemen, before we part, I have one word more to address to you. I have endeavoured to place before you the more prominent features of your duties to your -to those by whom selves—to your profession—to your country—to those by whom you will be surrounded in the service on which you are about to

But remember that you have yet a higher duty than these-duty to Him by whom you exist, and from whom every faculty you possess is derived. Forget not Him, at any time, nor under any circumstances. He is the Supreme Disposer of events—the Ruler and Arbiter of Kingdoms. I beseech you, commit yourselves habitually to His protection. He will en-lighten your minds; He will bless your labours with success! He will support you in the hour of danger, and strengthen your hands in times of weariness; and, if misfortune overtake you, He will be your consolation. (Applause.) Under His guidance may you prosper. Farewell, my young friends. Accept the affectionate farewell of one who has spent a long life in India, whither you are now going. May the blessing of the Almighty rest upon you. (Much applause.)

At the close of the address, the deputation and visitors, together with the principal and professors, left the Examination Hall, and repaired to the college library, where a splendid luncheon was served by the college purveyor.

The Chairman gave the health of "The Queen." (Applause.)
The Chairman again rose and said—The next and only toast which he should propose was the health of the highly gifted "Principal and the distinguished Professors of the College," who had this day afforded ample evidence of their able, earnest, and anxious labours to render the institution efficient for the important purposes it was designed to effect. (Much applause.) No institution with which he was acquainted had sent forth a body of more distinguished men than the college at Haileybury, -men who had surpassed the expectations of mankind in the capacity they exhibited for the government of a great empire; and to the principal and professors of this college belonged the honour of training and having trained those distinguished men. (Much applause.)

The Principal rose, amidst much applause, to acknowledge the compliment. He begged, in his own name, and on behalf of the Professors, to thank the company for their kindness in not only drinking the toast which it was customary to propose on occasions like the present, but drinking it with a measure of heartiness and good-will which seemed to prove that they gave them credit for honest endeavours in the performance of their duty. (Applause). They asked nothing more, and they heartly thanked them for giving them this. They asked nothing more — for they did not pretend to think the College perfect: they did not mean to deny that there might be evils which they had not been able to overtake; blemishes which their discipline had failed to eradicate. But, at all events, they claimed credit for earnest and strenuous effort; they did not believe that the defects which they lamented were to be attributed either to their cowardice or their carelessness; whilst, at the same time, they were thoroughly sure that, in the College, good so preponderated over evil that the Institution deserved—what was always gained when deserved—the cordial support of the East India Company. (Applause). He would not say this, if he could not say it conscientiously. For it was no light office, that of preparing men for the Civil Service of India. If, as a clergyman, he were placed at the head of a great missionary college, he should not feel himself more intimately bound up with the best interests of millions. (Renewed applause.) He knew that there was not a man who quitted the college, who might not be expected to influence, whether for evil or for good, dense masses of his fellow-men. And, therefore, was he anxious that none should quit it without being well equipped for the great mission upon which he went. Not that he wished him to be a missionary in the ordinary sense of the word-for he did not count it the business of the civilian to ply the native with religious controversy. But, nevertheless, he would have him a missionary in a very high and noble sense. He would have him preach Christianity through its most eloquent sermon,—purer morals, loftier integrity, warmer charity.

(Loud applause.) This was his wish—this was the wish of the This was his wish—this was the wish of the (Loud appiause.) This was his wish—this was the wish of the professors, on behalf of every student who quitted the college. They might be often disappointed, but, whilst encouraged by the approval of those whom they served, they would still persevere. They knew there were already many in India, who answered to the description; and it should not, God helping, be their fault, if the number were not continually increased. He asked forgiveness for having touched on these points. he sometimes felt-though the kind remarks of the Chairman had gone to remove the feeling-as though the importance of the College were underrated, as well as its deficiencies exaggerated. Now, they make no complaint upon this latter point. They were rather thankful to their enemies, if such they had, for magnifying their faults. They had no wish but to correct them; and therefore were they obliged to any who would not suffer them to overlook them. But the importance of the College—he magnified his office! The vast, the magnificent, empire of India demanded from England the benefits of Christian civilization; and it was mainly in and through this College that a response was given to the thrilling appeal. But he would not detain them further. He thanked them for the kindness with which they had heard him; and once more he begged to acknowledge most gratefully, in the name of the College, the favour which had been shewn them on the present occasion. (Loud and continued applause.)

and shortly afterwards returned to town The next term will commence on the 19th of January.

The Pollock Medal,—in presenting which, the Chairman spoke as follows: "Gen tleman Cadet Craster,—In the name of the Court of Directors, I present you with this medal, which has been awarded by the Lieut.-Governor and the Public Examiner to you, not only as the first scholar, but as a steady and exemplary soldier. The Pollock Medal was struck in commemoration of the eminent services of Major-General Sir George Pollock, G.C.B., an officer of the army to which you are destined. The conquest of Cabul was achieved by that army, under his command. That was a conquest worthy of commemoration; and this medal was presented to this Institution by the inhabitants of Calcutta, in honour of the services of that gallant general. It is, therefore, a reward highly appropriate to you for your distinguished and exemplary conduct."

The series of examinations commenced with Mathematics; the Cadets' progress in which will be understood from the following subjects of the course, upon which they were respectively questioned :-

For the Infantry Course.—Geometry, including Problems; Arithmetic and Algebra; Logarithms, Plane Trigonometry, and to Geometry and Analytical Trigonometry; Mechanics, including Statics and Dynamics, to the end of Projectiles.

For the Complete Artillery Course.—The remainder of Dynamics, Hydrostatics, and Hydrodynamics; theory of Curve Lines and Conic Sections.

For the Minimum Engineer Course .- Theory of Equations and Expansion of Series; Differential Calculus.
The full credits attached to Integral Calculus, Spherical Trigonometry, and Astronomy, in addition to the above, for the Complete Engineer Course, vary according to the proficiency of the most advanced Cadets.

In the Fortification Department, the proceedings were confined, at this season of the year, to the sand modelling hall and to the examination hall. To the former, the Chairman and company repaired, after the Cadets had dined, and a splendid model of an Indian hill fort, named Kurnalla (seen from the island of Bombay), which was captured from the Mahrattas in the years 1818-19, on a scale of a quarter of an inch to a foot (traced by Gentlemen Cadets De Vitré and Soady), was explained by Cadet De Vitré. A beautiful model of the attack of Valenciennes (traced by Gentlemen Cadets Craster, Trevor, Mayne, Twiss, Swanson, and Manson), as conducted by the allies under the command of his Royal Highness the late Duke of York, on a scale of the eighth of an inch to a foot, was explained by Cadet Craster; while another large model, covering nearly half the spacious hall, exhibiting the attack of two fronts of the modern system, scale quarter of an inch to a foot (traced by Gentlemen Cadets Brownlow, James, Tierney, Harvey, Lindsay, and Smith), was explained by Cadets James and

Civil Drawing.—The	exhibition of water-colour paintings in this department was exceedingly good, particularly those by the Gentleman Cadets of the 1st and 2nd classes. A very beautiful large painting of mountain and lake scenery, by Gentleman Cadet E. Tierney, gained the first prize. Gentleman Cadet M. James had a similar subject, the same size, that was very little inferior; and a smaller drawing by the same gentleman, for depth of tone, clearness of colour, and freedom of penman, for depth of tone, clearness of colour, and freedom of pencilling, would have done credit to a student of much longer standing. Gentlemen Cadets G. Craster, E. Pogson, J. O. Mayne, J. Soady, W. Lumsden, H. Trevor, H. Lindsay, W. de Vitré, A. Brownlow, and several others in this class, had each subjects in which very great talent is evinced.

The prize in the second class was given to Gentleman Cadet James Stewart for a large and splendid painting of forest scenery. Other subjects, by Gentlemen Cadets T. B. Heathorn, P. Stewart, D. Limond, &c., are very effective and well-finished paintings.

In the Lithographic department we noticed several specimens that afforded much satisfaction.

After the reports had been read by Mr. T. R. Clarke, of the Cadet department, the Chairman addressed the Cadets as follows:

"Gentlemen Cadets, - You are aware of the deep interest which the Court of Directors have ever taken in this institution. would have been gratifying to them, and most acceptable to me, could I have met you here this day, as I had the happiness of doing at the close of last Term, justified by the report of the Lieut. Governor in bestowing upon you the unqualified approba-tion of your conduct throughout the whole of the term now closed; but I regret to say that this institution, by the misconduct of a few erring youths, has not, during the whole of the Term, maintained that high character for discipline which it was wont to bear. But, gentlemen, do not mistake me. An end must be put to this. This College cannot exist but in a perfect state of discipline, in a state such as is calculated to elevate your minds to that high standard of moral and intellectual attainment which will render you fit to become officers of the Indian army. It was, therefore, the reluctant duty of the Lieut. - Governor, confirmed by authority of the Court of Directors, to remove from the establishment those who were prominent in disobedience; and it is my duty to tell you all that it is the firm intention of the Court of Directors to continue this course, if this institution shall at any time become unfit for the noble purpose for which it was founded. Having thus discharged the painful part of my duty, I will now proceed to that which I rejoice to say is so much more suitable to the high reputation of this institution, and immeasurably more agreeable to myself,—that of awarding due praise to those who have merited commendation. To the Lieut.-Governor, the Public Examiner, the Professors and Officers of this institution, who, associated with the Lieut.-Governor, have zealously and anxiously performed their duties, I beg to offer the cordial thanks of the Court of Directors. And, Gentlemen Cadets, you who have faithfully fulfilled the duties which your presence here imposes upon you (and I am happy to say it is but a few individuals who have not), to you, gentlemen, I beg to express the affectionate approbation of myself and my colleagues.

Go on, my young friends, take your stand on the side of order and of virtue, in despite of temptation. Show to the ignorant, the vulgar despiser of discipline, that you aim at higher objects, —stations of distinction and honour in the noblest service of your country. The result of the examination just terminated is, that forty-seven young officers have been declared qualified to join the army; of these, six have attained the standard fixed for the Engineers, and thirteen for the artillery. I am happy to add that, notwithstanding the unfavourable circumstances to which I have adverted, this is more than a full average of the result of former Terms (hear), and I accept this with confident assurance that those who may have erred in time past have seen their error, and, like ingenuous youths, have endeavoured to atone for it in the best way they could, namely, by additional diligence in the prosecution of their studies. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, those of you who have been selected for the Engineers will proceed to Chatham; you will there be placed under a most distinguished and accomplished officer of Her Majesty's army, Colonel Sir Frederick Smith; and let me warn you, that you will find, at that large military station, temptations more powerful than you have yet experienced. (Hear.) But I trust that you, who have seen the consequences of misconduct in others, will in all things strive to show, even to your senior comrades, that you are already familiar with the high bearing of the British officer. Gentlemen, remember that, at Chatham, you are only allowed a certain limited time to remain, and let me urge you to employ every moment of that time in acquiring a knowledge of those practical as well as scientific branches of your profession without which you will be unable to take your place in the Engineers of the army of India,—a body which, by its late achievements, has earned and received the high eulogium of some of the first Engineers in Europe. (Hear, hear.) I am now referring to the military branch of your education; but there is another branch, which, though less brilliant, is not less important,—that of Civil Engineering (Hear.) To this I earnestly recommend your attention. A great siege, even in India, now-a-days, is a great wonder. Your duty, as a Civil Engineer, will be your daily employment—in the execution of public works, as roads, bridges, canals, embankments, railways, and buildings of every description—comprehending, in fact, almost every thing known or practised in Civil Engineering; and let me call your special attention to this, - that in India you will not have the advantage which in England the Civil Engineer possesses. He designs and superintends, but he obtains from ethers, often, his materials and his machinery, either halfwrought, or wholly completed, ready to be put together. in India, will have to prepare your own materials. You must be able, from the mine, from the quarry, from the forest, to collect and prepare yours; for you may be so situated as to be without any other resource; and you may have to teach and to in-struct your workmen. You will see, therefore, how necessary it is for you to become acquainted not merely with the mode of constructing a work, but with the material, and the mode of preparation and formation of every part and piece of which it is composed. You must not only be able to design, but to execute. and to execute with the means at your command. That, in my epinion, is the test of the accomplished Engineer. And, my young friends, let me remind you that inferior attainments will not do. You have the honour and the credit to sustain of a corps which, for science and for practical energy, has not been surpassed. (Hear.) To you, gentlemen, who are selected for the Artillery, I would say a few words. Remember that the military profession, though in modern times, pursuing the principle of the division of labour, it has been considered as of various distinct branches, is yet, as a whole, but one. Hence the necessity that every officer should make himself master of every branch of military duty. You must, therefore, be military engineers, and you must know the duty of infantry officers as well as that of officers of artillery. Suppose the officer who commanded at Moultan had lost his engineers,—and they are, you know, well exposed at sieges. He was an artillery officer, -could he have arrested the progress of the siege because of the loss of his engineers? Or if, instead of admirable success, he had failed, would he have been excused because he was an artillery officer, and not an Engineer? Then, my young friends, prosecute your studies, and suspend them not until you have acquired a full knowledge of every branch of military science. And, gentle-men, you who are to join the Infantry, that all-powerful arm of war, I say the same to you; remember what I have just said.

You also will one day be eligible for command. No man can be a good infantry officer who is ignorant of the science of his proassion. But in addition to this, besides a knowledge of guns, and mortars, and batteries, and approaches, and saps, and mines, and all manner of missiles, the infantry officer, in an especial mannes, must study the living instruments of war, man, the human machine, so that he may guide it effectively to the accomplishment of his purpose, whether as individuals or in masses. You will not be able to command a company, even, with credit to yourselves and due benefit to the state, unless you have made the character of the soldier your study. Be assured, gentlemen, that the efficiency, the very life and soul, of an army depends greatly on this. See the history of our best officers, of our greatest generals, and you will find that each and all of them. were practised men in the science of human feelings, and especially of those of the soldier. The strength of all modern armies lies in their infantry; hence you see how vitally important it is to your country that you should, both morally and physically, know how to wield so powerful an arm. The military history of India is full of incidents demonstrating this,—that of the last campaign in the Punjaub is worthy of your special study; for there was, in that campaign, a peculiar feature,—the opportunities it created for individual distinction. This was earned by officers of our army, some of them not many years older than yourselves, youths who have sat on the forms you now occupy. (Applause.) Study the conduct of those young officers. tached on civil duties, in the wildest provinces of the Punjaub, far from succour, each depending upon his own resources, see how they gained the affections of the people around them. Then, when danger arose, how, by their firmness and their energy, they inspired those rude tribes with confidence in their skill and valour. Every day of peril confirmed this,-they were foremost in every field-they saw, and they rewarded the faithful and the brave, and they led them to victory. Their position was criti-cal; but it was thus they secured their safety and their renown. Yes, my young friends, learn this,—when peril comes, the path of honour is alike the tower of strength and the post of duty. (Applause.) Gentlemen, you are now to leave this institution. I trust you will do so with a deep sense of its extreme value. Few institutions have sent forth a greater proportion of distinguished men, some of whom we have the pleasure of seeing here this day, returned to their native country with distinction and with honour. (Applause.) Of those gallant men who, at the recommendation of their illustrious chief, Lord Gough, were rewarded by Her Majesty with promotion and honour for their services in the late campaign, no less than forty-six had been educated at Addiscombe. (Applause.) Well, then, my young friends, you who have yet to return here, do so with a firm resolution to conform to the rules of this noble institution; demonstrate with manly dignity your conviction that obedience is the first duty of a soldier, the very foundation of discipline. Without habitual discipline, an officer is a disgrace to an army; without discipline an army is a disgrace and a danger to its country. (Hear.) You, gentlemen, who have finished your course of study, I cannot take leave of you without offering you a few words of counsel. You have hitherto been under the care of others; you are now to be left to yourselves. You are to join the Indian army: The achievements of that army, within a period of amazing briefness, have won for the arms of England unfading honour. That army has conquered for the Crown of England a magnificent empire. You, my young friends, now so young, will one day be the guardians of that great empire.

To you, gentlemen, and the discipline and the honour of that army, and the continuance of its renown. How is this to be attained? I have told you before, and I tell you again, it is by the untiring energy, the self-devotion, the daring courage of its British officers. It is by commanding the confidence, by winning the affections of your men. You will thus secure the faithful energy of the native army; and it is thus you will lead them to incessant victory. No matter what odds-But, gentlemen, remember the fight has been to conquer. attainments required of you before you be worthy of the com-mand of such men. They are strangers to you in manners, in customs, and in religion. You must acquire their language first of all; you must learn their customs; you must respect their religious ceremonies; you must not only be their officer, but They will lean upon you as such. their friend. They will tell you their wants and their grievances, and you will listen to them and procure them redress. You must know every man in your company, and call them by their names. You must be just, and kind, and patient with them, but not familiar; and you must exact from them freely every duty. An army of full 259,000 men, backed by upwards of 30,000 of the illustrious army of England, for such is the Indian army,—an army so officered and so united, so disciplined and so led, can never be overthrown. (Applause.) With respect to your treatment of the people generally, let me recommend to you the most patient forbearance. They will not willingly offend you; let not, therefore, any misapprehension on their part, or on your own, ruffle your temper towards them. You will thus secure their respect and your own comfort. I repeat what I before told you, that I have never known a man habitually ill-tempered towards the natives rise to ninence in the service. And, gentlemen, let me call your attention to another point; it is one to which I attach the highest importance; and that is, economy in your expenditure. I hardly ever hear of the ruin of an individual which is not traceable to pecuniary embarrassment. I most earnestly warn you. gentlemen, against this. From the moment you get into debt, from that moment you are a slave; beware, then, my young friends, of the very first step towards so fatal a course; that is the step upon which your success in life, your life itself,—your honour, dearer than life, depend. And now, gentlemen, let me address to you a few words more before we part. I have endeavoured to place before you some of the prominent features of the duty you owe to your profession and to your country; but remember, my young friends, you have a higher duty still, that which you owe to Him in whom you exist,—the strength of armies, the God of battles. Let me beseech you, do not forget this. Commit yourself habitually to His protection. In the time of danger He will uphold you, He will bless your labours with success, and He will support you in the day of trouble. Farewell, my young friends, and may the blessing of the Almighty rest upon you!" (Much applause.)

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held at their house in Leadenhall-street on Wednesday, the 19th instant.

Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, the chairman of the Court of Directors, was in the chair.

A letter from Major-General Sir J. Thackwell, dated 27th Sept. last, offering his most grateful thanks to the Court of Directors and proprietors for the resolutions adopted by them on the 23rd and 24th April, 1849, conveying their thanks to the army of India engaged in the recent victories gained in the Punjah, was read.

The Chairman then acquainted the Court that the warrants for the half-yearly dividends payable on the stock of the East-India Company, due under the 17th section of the Act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, would be ready for delivery on the 7th of January next.

The Chairman then called on Mr. Sullivan to proceed with his motion for the production of certain papers of which he had given notice.

Mr. Lewin rose to a point of order. On the last court-day he had notices of motion on the paper, which were, however, postponed, and he now wished the Court to decide whether or not he had precedence of Mr. Sullivan's motion.

The Chairman said, as no notice in writing was given of the hon. proprietor's motions for this court-day, no publication as required by the bye-laws could be given, and therefore it was not competent for the hon. gentleman to bring them forward on the present occasion.

Mr. Levin considered that his having postponed his notices to this court-day was equivalent to a written notice. Besides, he had written by post to the secretary to say that he intended to bring forward his motions this day.

The Chairman said the proper course to be pursued was to hand in a written notice in court; that not having been done, be considered the question on the point of order to be disposed of.

After some further discussion, in which several hon. proprieters took part, the matter was allowed to drop.

THE MARQUESS OF TWEEDDALE-MADRAS.-THE OTH LIGHT

CAVALRY.

Mr. Sullivan then rose to move that copies of all correspondence relative to a court-martial held on the 5th Sept. 1844, on certain sepoys of the 6th Madras cavalry, be laid before the Court, and copies of all opinions given by law officers on the subject. He returned with considerable pain to the motion which engaged their attention at the last court-day, in relation to the proceedings of the Madras Government in the case of the 6th Madras cavalry. If it were asked why he should meddle in those troubled waters, which had been first stirred up by his hon. friend Mr. Lewin, he would frankly say it was because that gentleman, who had been a most able, honourable, upright, and talented public servant, had, by his unfortunate language in that court, rendered himself so justly obnoxious, that even if he had an angel's cause to plead, he would be unable to do it justice. Moreover, his hon, friend laboured under the imputation of harbouring vindictive feelings against the noble lord who was implicated in the charge involved in this matter. Now, as he (Mr. Sullivan) did not labour under any such imputation, he had taken upon himself the odium of bringing the subject once more before the Court. On the last court-day, by the course which he then pursued, he had drawn upon himself a atorm of

But what was his indignation from the Court of Directors. conduct on that occasion? He contented himself with reading a printed statement put forth by the parties who alleged that they had been aggrieved, without pledging himself to the truth of the allegations which that statement contained, confining himself to this observation only, that the main of those allegations were supported by documents, and that where such documents were wanting, it was in consequence of the complaining parties having been denied access to them. He then ventured to warn the Court that if they treated allegations of this kind with indifference, they would expose themselves to the imputation of having sanctioned two rules of justice in India; one for European officers and another for the sepoys. (Hear, hear.) When he had done this, he expected that the Court of Directors would have assured the proprietors that every attention should be given to those allegations, and that they would pass judgment upon them without fear or favour. But what was the argument with which he was met? Why, when he was in the very middle of his speech, the Deputy Chairman got up and called him (Mr. Sullivan) to order; though it must have been quite evident to the Court that he was perfectly in order, as the question before the Court was, whether certain sepoys should be furnished with copies of the proceedings of the court-martial, every word he advanced showing the necessity of granting those copies as an act of justice, and that it would be unjust to refuse them. But what was the Chairman's reply? He said that the question had been several times already brought forward, and had on every occasion been scouted out of court; that all the proceedings had been strictly legal, and that the army had been glad to get rid of such bad men. He further told the Court that he (Mr. Sullivan) was altogether mistaken in supposing that these men had been allowed to return to their duty; and he finally refused to produce the papers. Now, on hearing the speech of the Chairman, two convictions were left on his mind; the first was, that the Chairman was grossly ignorant of the facts of which he spoke, and the second was, that there was a determination on the part of the Court of Directors to shelve this question. But he (Mr. Sullivan) immediately took a different determination, that the question should not be shelved; and he had had the best of the battle; for there they were, after a quarter of year had elapsed, again discussing the subject. The only way to get rid of it was to give a satisfactory answer to the allegations advanced by those who sought justice at their hands. In order that they might do so, he now intended to move for copies of all papers relating to the question. He found that the Marquess of Tweeddale affirmed that he acted with the sanction of the home authorities. If so, then it might turn out that a great portion of the burden now cast on the shoulders of that noble lord would have to rest on the shoulders of the Court of Directors. The second part of his motion was, that copies of all legal opinions that had been taken on the subject should be produced; for if he understood the Chairman aright, he said, on the last occasion, that he had positive legal opinions sanctioning these proceedings. (Hear, hear.) The way to shut his (Mr. Sullivan's) mouth was to produce those legal opinions. If these proceedings were all legal, his mouth was shut. (Hear, hear.) He was not speaking or judging of the expediency or humanity of those proceedings; he was looking only at the legality and justice of what had been done. But if the Court of Directors had the law on their side, then he would say that it was directly contrary to the law which had been promulgated by the Commander-in-Chief in India. Lord Gough, in his order dated Umballah, 30th March, 1844, said:—"The course which it was intended to adopt in dealing with the corps in Ferozepore, would have been pursued with respect to the ringleaders amongst the disaffected in the 7th L.C. and 34th N.L. had circumstances permitted; but in these two regiments the guilty parties had, in every instance, and for a length of time, been allowed to retain their arms, and perform their regular routine of duties, without any steps being taken to mark them as offenders against discipline; and hence a recourse to trial by courts-martial would, in their case, have been illegal." He understood the Chairman to say that he had legal opinions maintaining that, if a man committed an offence within the term of three years, he was liable to be brought to a court martial; while the law of the Commander-in-Chief was this, that if a man committed an offence on the 1st of January, and was detected on the 2nd, and was allowed to discharge regimental duty on the 3rd, he could not be tried for that offence on the 4th. But he understood the Chairman's argument to be, that if a man committed an offence on the 1st of January, 1850, and was detected on the 2nd of January, 1851, he might be tried on the 3rd of January, 1852, although in the meantime he had acted as a good soldier, had done his country service, and had shed his blood in conflict. But if such were the legal opinions possessed by the Court, then those opinions ought to be promulgated, in order to show what was the real status of the military law. He was perfectly willing to believe that every man connected with the court-martial in question was actuated by the purest, most patriotic, and most disinterested motives. (Hear, hear.) But non constat they had not done a most reprehensible act; non constat they had not acted most irregularly and illegally, and more particularly because it was done from ignorance, as they all knew that the most dangerous acts were illegal acts done under false impressions. He was aware that he was now about to trespass on dangerous ground. The 9th section of the military code of Madras said that no sentence of death should be given against any offender by any general court-martial consisting of less than thirteen members, except the court was held out of the territory of that presidency, nor unless nine of the officers present should concur therein. Major Oliphant, on the former occasion, observed that by another section of the military code a native officer had the option of being tried by a court-martial consisting of seven officers, and that if he made his election to be tried by those seven European officers, he would be debarred of the privilege of the section he had first quoted. But this was clearly a non sequitur, his hon. friend having overlooked the fact that the materiality of the law was not that the court-martial should consist of thirteen members, but that nine officers were to concur in a sentence of death. He would ask any legal man whether it was competent for a court to pass sentence of death in which it was impossible that nine members could concur therein? The clause which gave the option to the native soldier to be tried by a courtmartial composed of less than thirteen members, was perfectly silent as to the proportionate number of the members of that court whose concurrence should sanction a sentence of death.

The Chairman. - But suppose the soldier made his election to be tried by the lesser number?

Mr. Sullivan.—In that case that court could not try him for a capital offence.

Major Oliphant.—Then the man who elected to be tried by such a court would escape capital punishment altogether. That could not be the law. The reason why the alternative was given, clearly was, that as thirteen officers could not always be got together, therefore seven should be equivalent to thirteen. He would not say that the Act of Parliament was very clearly drawn up, but it must appear to every man of common sense that, in the case of the court-martial consisting of seven, a majority of that court would have the power of passing sentence of death.

Mr. Sullivan was not a lawyer, but it appeared to him that in this instance the sentence of death was an illegal sentence. The Chairman next observed that two of the prisoners were tried for having taken illegal oaths; but there was not one word about oaths in the charge. He then told the Court that the men had done no duty beyond the ordinary duty.

The Chairman. - I repeat that statement.

Mr. Sullivan. - But what said the court-martial itself in the recommendation to mercy? It stated that having performed a most painful duty in passing sentence of death on those men, it, in consideration of the great length of time which had elapsed since the commission of the offence-being a period of nine months-and considering that during that time all duties were performed by them, therefore the court recommended them to mercy. Now were they (the Court of Proprietors) to take the dictum of the Chairman, or the statement of the court-martial who tried the prisoners, and then recommended them to mercy? (Hear) But it might be asked, cui bono this mischievous agitation? It would, however, be a most extraordinary question to ask. Was it nothing to the British government in India, whether their native army were well affected or disaffected; whether they were loyal or disloyal; whether their rights were violated or not? He was aware that they could not revise the proceedings of the court-martial; they could not revive the dead; but there were certain things which they might do.

They might publish their sentiments upon the subject to the army. They might tell that army that these were proceedings which the Court of Directors much regretted; and that if they had had the power they would have prevented their occurrence. He begged, in conclusion, to remind the Court who were the parties in this case. There was a noble lord of high rank, great influence, and wide connexion, on the one hand, and there were the widows and orphans of the sufferers under the court-martial on the other: and he would ask were they (the Court of Directors) prepared to pass over all these proceedings as if those complaining parties, whose cause he now advocated, had suffered no loss at all? (Hear, hear.) The hon. gentleman then moved for the production of the papers in the terms above given.

Mr. Lewin seconded the motion, and recapitulated the facts of the case, which were briefly these. Seventeen soldiers of the 6th regiment of Madras cavalry were tried for mutiny; of whom two were shot, one acquitted, thirteen banished for life, and one pardoned. The mutiny originated in an order of the government to withhold their accustomed stipends. The sepoys refused to saddle their horses; this lasted four days; but the complaints of the men having been listened to, and the pay restored, the men returned to their duty. The Marquess of Tweeddale addressed a letter to Major Lichfield (the commander of the regiment), in which he said he was happy to understand that the men had returned to their duty, and that they appeared to be sensible of their late misconduct. But as his lordship could not allow the regiment, under the reproach of such unworthy and unsoldier-like behaviour, to continue at a station where it might be required for employment on actual service, he had ordered it to be sent into cantonment at Arcot. If Lord Tweeddale was justified in passing this order, he was not justified in putting the men on their trial afterwards. It was practically a disposal of the whole case; and there was no law which allowed them to be tried again. It was laid down by Simmonds, that these men ought to have been brought to trial when first their offence was known.

Major Oliphant.—Were any of the men individually named as being offenders?

Mr. Lewin could not say; but they must have been known; and yet for nine months after their alleged offence they were employed in her Majesty's service, doing duty on the frontier before they were brought to trial. There was something disgusting in the character of a government which, while meditating the destruction of these men, could still receive their services. The hon. proprietor then commented at some length upon the mode in which the court-martial was constituted; and the evidence got up against the sepoys, and forcibly condemned the injustice of their not having been allowed counsel to conduct their defence. He contended that, if they had had counsel, all the witnesses would have been proved either to have been coerced or suborned. The hon, gentleman expressed his perfect indifference to the charge of his being actuated in the course he had taken on this question by vindictive motives. He strictly adhered to facts, and to the merits of the case; and he should never quit the subject until justice had been done.

Mr. Weeding opposed the motion, because it could no good. A popular assembly was not a fit tribunal to revise the sentence of a military court martial, more especially when they had among their executive body men whose experience, discernment, and judgment qualified them to detect the errors of such courts. The duty of the proprietors was to submit to the judgment of such men in these matters. The mover of this proposition had disclaimed casting the least imputation on the honour and character of the gentlemen composing the court-martial. Of course he intended to include the commander-in-chief, for what possible motive could that noble lord have, except a high and imperative sense of duty in preserving the discipline of the army, for the course he had adopted?

The Chairman. - We have heard a great deal from the two hon, members on this subject. It is the third time it has been discussed; and certainly if any subject on the face of the earth could be unsuitable to be discussed in this Court, in my opinion. this is one. The discipline of the Indian army is too precious to be sacrificed by being exposed to the censures of a tribunal which certainly has not the means, however it may be considered to possess the power, of entering into a question of such great importance. It is, I presume, not denied that, with respect to maintaining that discipline, the Commander-in-Chief has absolute power. The case immediately before the Court was one of a most serious character. We know very well that a mutiny of a very gross description was committed by a regiment which before that time had done good service and had always distinguished itself. The Governor-General of India, hearing of the circumstance, recommended that the regiment should be disbanded; but the Marquese of Tweeddale, himself an old soldier, knew that it was impossible that the whole of the regiment should be equally guilty of so abominable a crime; and from a generous feeling of that nature, the noble Marquess was induced to refuse to disband the regiment, and to determine to enter into an investigation, in order to find out who were the ringleaders. It became, therefore, necessary to order the regiment to be placed in a situation in which that investigation could be carried on. The mutiny occurred at Jubulpoor, 900 miles from the presidency. It was impossible that any investigation could take place there; the regiment was therefore ordered to Arcot. It is said that, because the men did duty between the period of the act of mutiny and their being brought to trial, they ought not to have been made amenable before a court-martial. But the plain answer to that is, that the duty which the military law intends in such a case, is not merely that of marching from one town to another, but when the men are put upon military service, as, for instance, when they are called into the field against an enemy. It is a military duty of quite another character, which can alone excuse the men, or be considered as an absolution from the crime for which they are chargeable. In regard to the general order of Lord Gough, I understand that to apply to the case of individual criminals who had been pointed out, and who had been put to duty, and not brought to trial. It is the individuality which constitutes the difference between the two cases. No individual soldier in the sixth Madras cavalry was ascertained to have been guilty of mutiny. It was the regiment, as a whole; and no individuals of that regiment were found out until the inquiry at Arcot. The two cases, therefore, are not similar; but my hon. friend, by confounding the two cases, has mistaken the law applicable to them. Lord Gough's general order was not applicable to the sixth Madras cavalry; therefore the Marquess of Tweeddale was perfectly right in doing what he did. My hon. friend has said that, if the legal authorities in this country were against him, his mouth would be stopped. I will read to him the opinions which have been given on the subject.

Mr. Lewin, will you read the case on which those opinions are founded ?

Mr. Serjt. Gazelee .- Of course, the opinions are of no use without the case.

-The legal opinion of the Attorney-General, the The Chairman .-Solicitor-General, and the Company's standing counsel was procured on a particular occasion. I cannot produce that opinion as required by my hon. friend, because it would constitute a precedent which I altogether deprecate in the strongest terms in which it is possible I can express myself; but I will read for the satisfaction of the Court the opinion that was pronounced on that particular occasion. The hon. Chairman then read the opinion, which was to the following effect :-- "We have considered the accompanying papers relative to a court-martial held on the 5th of September, 1844, on certains parties belonging to the 6th regiment of Madras cavalry, and with respect to the several points on which our opinion is desired, we are of opinion, first, that the transmission of the letter dated January 4, 1844, from the acting Adjutant-General at Madras, under the instructions of the Commander-in-Chief to the officer commanding at Jubulpoor, conveying a certain route to the 6th regiment, would not, in case any soldiers belonging to her Majesty's army had been previously guilty of an act of mutiny have made it illegal or irregular to institute a subsequent inquiry into the conduct of the regiment, with a view to ascertain who were the instigators of the mutiny, and eventually to arraign them before a court martial; secondly, we are also of opinion that, although the offenders had for a length of time, to wit, nine months, been allowed to retain their arms and perform their duty without proceedings having been taken against them, there was not, by reason of those circumstances, according to the principles which apply in the case of her Majesty's forces, any illegality or irregularity employed in the punishment of the soldiers engaged in the mutinous proceedings at Jubulpoor." This opinion is signed by Sir William Follett, Sir Frederick Thesiger, and Loftus Wigram. I do hope that, after this opinion, my honourable friend's mouth is stopped for ever. (No! No!) If we are to take the law of my hon, friend and of those who act with him, and set aside the law of the Solicitor-General and Attorney-General of England, then, indeed, we may go on with the discussion of this case; but if we are to depend upon the law laid down to us by those authorities, then I hope and trust the Court will feel themselves bound to be guided by the opinion which I have read to them. (Cheers.) I am surprised that my hon, friend Mr. Sullivan should have pursued the course he has done on this occasion. It is a case of the utmost importance, involving as it does the discipline of the Indian army; and I again express my earnest hope that the Court will be satisfied with the opinion I have just read. (Cries of "Question."

Mr. Sullivan had no intention to stand up against the law of England, but he would like to know what was the case laid before the lawyers.

The Chairman said that the whole of the proceedings of the court-martial and every document which was in the possession of the Court of Directors were laid before the counsel.

Mr. Serjt. Gazelee said that in a case in which life and death were concerned he was not disposed to rest upon the opinion of lawyers. No doubt they had given the law correctly, but the question was not one of law but of justice. On reading these proceedings it was clear to him, not as a lawyer, but as an individual, that the Court of Directors had not acted fairly towards these unfortunate men. He would not pursue the discussion, but would leave the case with the Court of Directors, in the hope that they would do some hing for the widows and orphans of those people whom they were bound to protect.

After a few words from Mr. Grant and Mr. P. Gordon, the motion was put and negatived.

THE AMEERS OF SCINDE.

Colonel Dickenson then brought forward the following motion, of which he had given notice :-

"That this Court, deeply lamenting the prolonged exile of the Princes of Scinde, and the failure of those endeavours from time to time made for the termination of their unmerited sufferings, most earnestly recommends to the Court of Directors that an opportunity be afforded such of them as survive to be heard in their defence before some competent and impartial tribunal to be nominated by the Government of India, and, if innocent, that they be reinstated in their private rights; also, that a like consideration, where the same may appear equitable, be extended to the heirs of such of the Ameers as have died in captivity."

"That this Court, deeply lamenting the prolonged exile of the Princes of Scinderation, where the have died in captivity."

"That the following papers be laid before the Court of Proprietors:—

"Copy of the treaty entered into by Captain Seton, in behalf of the Bombay Government, with the Hydrabad State in the year 1808."

"Copy of the instructions furnished the Envoy who was deputed to Hydrabad to annul the above treaty."

bad to annul the above treaty."

"Copies of the returned letters to the late Nur Mahomed, chief Ameer of Hydrabad, alluded to in the Governor-General's despatch to the Secret Committee, under date 21st February, 1838."

"Copies of other unpublished letters from Nur Mahomed, about the same time, explanatory of his unwillingness to accede to the Governor-General's time, explanatory of his unwiningness to acceed to the Governor-General's proposals."

"Copy of the unpublished portion of the Secretary to the Governor-General's letter to the Resident of Scinde, under date 6th September, 1838."

"Statement of the respective portions of territory which were guaranteed by separate treaties to the Hydrabad Ameers by the treaty of the 11th March, 1830."

"List of the Ameers who have been consigned to exile, showing the sti-pends which they have from time to time received."

The hon, and gallant member reminded the Court of the previous proceedings which had taken place on this question, and expressed his regret that, after the promise made in 1846 by the Court of Directors, that the whole affairs of Scinde should be fully inquired into, the case of these unfortunate Ameers remained unredressed, and their sufferings unmitigated. But increased as the difficulties of the case were, by the non-fulfilment of those promises, there was, nevertheless, in this most righteous cause a principle of vitality well calculated to keep alive hope, and to stimulate them to continued exertions. For this advantage they were principally indebted to the Court of Directors themselves; for it was generally understood that a majority of that body, after the most patient consideration of the case, had recorded their opinion that the wrongs which had been inflicted on these exiled princes were alike inexpedient, unjust, and impolitic. No one had attempted to justify, or even to palliate, that most arbitrary decree, which consigned those unfortunate individuals to exile an exile which to them must be deemed worse than death. One of the most distinguished men had triumphautly exonerated all those princes from the whole of the charges which had been heaped upon them. He therefore did hope he should have the support of that Court in favour of those friendless men, who were made the victims of the insatiable desire of the British power for territorial aggrandisement in India. Were the papers he now called for produced, he would have no difficulty in showing that the accusations made against the Ameers were utterly without foundation. In all similar cases, involving exile and deposition, the accused parties had been allowed the benefit of some sort of trial; but these Ameers never had the benefit of a commission, or of the opinion of any impartial man. Their case was unprecedented in the annals of any country in the world. Other princes, after exile, had been restored to their dominions, and the British Government had never had reason to regret those acts of mercy. It would be absurd to say that the country of the Ameers would be disturbed by their restoration. As to the chief Ameer, there was not a word in the whole Blue Book that was not in his favour. He had been described by Sir Henry Pottinger as being almost an Englishman. There was not a shadow of evidence to justify the continued cruelty towards that individual. In conclusion, he called upon the Court to give that publicity to their opinions on this matter, which was absolutely necessary to the preservation of the lives of these unjustly treated princes.

Mr. Sullivan seconded the motion, reminding the Court that the only crime alleged against these men, and for which they had been banished, and their power destroyed, was the having written certain letters, the existence of which, up to this day, had never been proved. In the course of the few remarks made by the honourable proprietor, he availed himself of the opportunity to pass a high eulogium on the character of the late Sir Charles Forbes, whom he described as being the type of every thing that was honest and high principled, and who, for sixty years, was the untiring advocate of the people of India. (Cheers.)

Mr. Weeding opposed the motion, and said this was another instance in which hon. members could be found to advocate the cause of the autocrats of India, forgetting the people of India. Instead of lamenting the seizure of Scinde, and the exile of the Ameers, he for one heartily rejoiced in it, inasmuch as it had given an opportunity to the people of Scinde to emerge from that state of barbarism under which they existed under their native rulers, and to acquire, by being under the protection of the East-India Company, the means of improving their condition, and advancing in civilization and prosperity. The hon. proprietor then recapitulated all the acts of duplicity of which the Ameers were accused of having been guilty towards the British government in India, and concluded by expressing a hope that they would not be allowed to return to their country.

Mr. Lewin observed that during the war in Affghanistan the Ameers of Scinde were of the greatest possible assistance to the British army. Without their help that army would have been annihilated. Was it at all probable, therefore, that they should have since taken part against the British power in the way they were accused of having done?

Mr. Clark could not consent to give a silent vote, as he had always supported the cause of the Ameers of Scinde. It was clear that Lord Ellenborough had determined to take possession of their country, and that determination was seconded by Sir Charles Napier, who commenced hostilities at the very moment when Major Outram was carrying on a negotiation with the Ameers, and which in a few days he would in all probability have brought to an amicable arrangement. If the papers could be produced, he for one would do every thing to effect it.

After a few words from Mr. P. Gordon,

The Chairman reminded the Court that this question had already undergone numerous discussions, and after the decisions that had been come to, he did not see what purpose or object the motion of the gallant colonel had in view. The Court of Directors on two occasions had sent out orders to India with a view of endeavouring to make the condition of the Ameers of Scinde as comfortable and convenient to themselves as it was possible. What more than this could be done he (the Chairman) could not imagine. Under all the circumstances, and remembering that papers had already been given in abundance both to Parliament and to the Court, he could not consent to the production of any more documents, and he hoped the Court would see the expediency of a refusal.

After a few words from Colonel Dickenson in reply, the motion was put and negatived.

Mr. P. Gordon gave notice of a motion for the next general court-day. That the Court of Proprietors petition the Queen to allow them the honour of nominating her Majesty to be their governor. (Loud laughter.)

THE KING OF DELHI.

Mr. Sullivan then rose and made a motion (of which however there was no printed notice on the paper) for the production of all the correspondence that had taken place between the Marquess Wellesley and the Emperor of Delhi, and between the Government of India and the Court of Directors, during the years 1803, 1804, and 1805, in relation to the recognition of the rights of the Emperor of Delhi as the Great Mogul of Hindoostan. The hon. proprietor said he was induced to make this motion in consequence of having seen certain extracts from Indian newspapers, containing statements to the effect that, in consequence of the vast debts owing by the present King of Delhi, a negotiation was going on between that sovereign and the Government of India, by which it was contemplated that on the Indian Government discharging the debts of the King, he and all the members of the royal family should give up for ever all right and title to the land, villages, and houses of which they might be in possession in and about the city of Delhi; that the pensions of the individual members of the family should cease on the demise of the present members; that schools should be established in the palace at the expense of the king for the benefit of the children, and that the king should defray the expenses of the palatial garden. He (Mr. Sullivan) had heard that the Governor-General had actually announced it to be his intention not 'only to do all that was said to be meditated in those papers, but to deal with the rights of the royal family of Delhi as had been recently done, with the sanction of that court, with the rights of the family of Sattara. He, on hearing this, had thought it his duty to take the earliest opportunity of raising his voice against what he conceived to be a second serious violation of the most sacred rights of the native princes of India, and that without the least pretence of justification. That this would be a violation of a sacred right he felt persuaded would be proved by the production of the papers for which he intended to move. And to shew the court that those papers ought to be laid before them, he would give a rapid sketch of the connection between the British power in India and the court of Delhi. In 1803 the then Emperor of Delhi, having placed himself under the protection of Lord Wellesley, that noble lord entered into certain obligations with the then Mogul. What was the nature of those obligations?

It was to that point he desired the attention of the Court. First, it was shown that Lord Wellesley knew that the Mogul was a political character, notwithstanding his total deprivation of any real power. Still his royal authority was ackowledged by almost every class of people in Hindoostan, and the princes who bore titles in India still considered that the only legitimate power from which they could be derived was the Mogul. Under these eircumstances the Mogul had ever been a dangerous instrument in the hands of the Mahrattas and other states. It became, therefore, a matter of policy with Lord Wellesley to make arrangements with the Mogul, and the papers he asked for would shew what those arrangements were, and that they were intended to be of a permanent character. The honourable member then read very lengthened extracts from the various documents, for the production of which he was then making application to the Court, observing that the greater portion of those papers had become public historical records. In the arrangements made by Lord Wellesley, the permanent support of the Mogul and the royal family was a prominent stipulation. It was a very important national object that the titular emperor of Delhi should be known to all the in-habitants of Hindoostan. Lord Wellesley carried out his arrangements with the Mogul, but his successors flagrantly violated the pecuniary part of them, upon the plea that there was no specific contract, but that it was a mere intimation of an intention to do certain things. There certainly was no formal treaty, that being impossible. Equals treated with equals; princes with princes; but subjects did not treat with princes, and the British Government in India had formally acknowledged the Mogul as their sovereign. But when it was contended that there was no specific contract, it was obvious the instructions which Lord Wellesley addressed to the resident of Delhi, on the 23rd of April, 1805. were entirely overlooked, in every paragraph of which the territories assigned to the royal family were mentioned. This was the story which the papers he seked for would tell; but those papers would furthermore remove the mischievous impression that the Mogul was a creature of the Company's power, and that he had received everything, and had given nothing. But history would tell a different result. The negotiation of 1803 was but a renewal of the connexion. In the year 1764, the Mogul granted to the British Government Beneres; in 1767, he granted Orissa; after that the northern circurs; and confirmed all the Company's possession in Bengal and the Carnatic. And at what time was it that the Mogul made all these concessions? It was when England was just emerging from a desperate struggle with France; and when it was considered that the Mogul might be made a great means of offence in the hands of France. In return for these benefits the East India Company, in 1805, settled a pittance upon the Emperor which they had since diminished little by little till now it was proposed to annihilate it altogether. hon. proprietor then pointed out the dangerous policy which ap peared to be in contemplation, and warned the Court of the fearful consequences that might ensue to the whole British empire in India, if so reckless a course were adopted.

Lieut .- Gen. Briggs seconded the motion, and expressed his regret that the Government of India should make these repeated attempts to infringe upon selemn treaties one after another. Their strength in India depended upon public opinion. They had only about 740 European civil servants administering the whole affairs of the social government of that country, the population consisted of 150 millions. Of those 740 persons, about one-third only were invested with power; so that each individual had to admirister civil justice among no less than 600,000 inhabitants. He hoped the Court would do all they could to resist the strong anti-Indian spirit which at present threatened to drive them out of the country.

Mr. Lewin suggested that the natives in India should be represented in parliament.

The Chairman.—The question which has been raised by the hon. mover of this resolution, I have to inform the Court, is under consideration by the Government of India, and the authorities in this country. The Court of Directors attach great importance to the subject, and the proprietors may feel assured that they will give it their serious attention. Under these circumstances, I hope the Court will not insist upon the production of any papers of this description, and I feel myself under the necessity egativing the motion.

After a short conversation, the motion was put, and the Court divided:

	For the motion
The	Majority motion was consequently lost.	7
The	Court then adjourned.

IRON FROM CHINA. - A short time back a paragraph was circulated regarding an arrival of iron at Liverpool from China, the supposed produce of that country. It appears, however, to have been a quantity of English pig iron returned, vii China, from Bombay, and which had been sent out probably as ballast. The only importations of foreign pig iron that have ever arrived from China are those of the Indian Iron Company, from their works at Porto Novo, near Madras, whence they have been shipped for England, and taken round, vii China, by the cotton ships loading from that presidency. Several of these consignments have arrived from time to time—a large one last week, per Coromandel, from Hong-Kong.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS .--The Lord Dalhousie, for conveyance of stores to Calcutta, and the Herefordshire, for the like purpose, to Bombay. - The tender of the ship Indian, conditionally accepted on the 28th ult., for freight of stores to Bombay, has been cancelled.

The Chinese paintings on leaves are thus prepared: freshly peeled leaves, placed under a slight pressure, are laid in clean water, which is changed daily for a month, until the fleshy part of the leaf is entirely macerated and washed out, leaving only the reticulated nerves. The skeleton leaves are dried under a slight pressure, and the interstices filled with agar-agar varnish, when they are ready for the painter.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5a. in boards. SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

*** To the First Part of this Dictionary, the preceding editions of which have met with general approbation, as well in Europe as in India, the author has by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, been enabled to make such extensive additions, that the number of words and phrases, now given and explained, exceeds by many thousands that contained in any other Hindustani and English Dictionary extant. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper character, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages; and much attention has been paid to the insertion of the names of Plants, as well as of other natural productions, with the technical terms at present adopted for them in Europe.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is entirely new. It comprises the English words in most general use, as well as numerous phrases, with the corresponding Hindustani annexed; and so much additional matter has been now introduced, that although the work is printed in a smaller type, the present Edition comprises yourteen sheets and so much additional matter has been now introduced, that although the work is printed in a smaller type, the present Edition comprises yourteen sheets and so much additional matter has been now introduced, that although the work is printed in a smaller type, the present Edition comprises yourteen sheets and so much additional matter has been now introduced, that although the work is printed in a smaller type, the present Edition comprises yourteen sheets and so much additional matter has been now introduced, the properties of the bakhni.

"Those who wish to have an Encyclopædia of information on Eastern and "Those who wish to have an Encyclopedia of information on Eastern and Southern history, government, literature, manners, productions (natural and industrial), commerce, everything, in fact, but physical science, and not without a good deal even on that, will here find what they require. If read, it will impart to the student nearly all that is known on the subject to which it relates, and afford him, withat, much entertainment. The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1949, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premium to compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

THE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. HOWARD, of 17, George Street, Hanover Square; it is the introduction of an entirely new description of ARTHFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wites, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble natural teeth, as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found very superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, and will support and preserve the treth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. The invention deserves the notice of the scientific, and is of importance to many persons, and those who are interested in it cannot do better than avail themselves of Mr. Howard's skill as a Dentist.

HINDUSTANI, PERSIAN, ARABIC, SANSKRIT, &c., Taught, on Moderate Terms, at No. 58, Burton Crescent, from 10 A.M. to 1 P.N., by DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., Professor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London: Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris, and Author of the following Works, just published, on the

HINDUSTANI - ENGLISH & ENGLISH - HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

IN ONE VOLUME, ROYAL SVO. PRICE £2. 12s. 6d.

**S** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical 'ype. whereby he is analysed as ley before the public, in one volume royal octave, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustanies also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

"If condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces

"If condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable,—if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forber's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patrons and students of Hindustani literature."—Friend of India, October 19, 1848.

Grammar of the Perstan Language. To which is added, a Selection of Easy Extracts for reading, together with a copious Vocabulary. By Duncan Forbes, LL.D. Second edition, greatly improved and considerably enlarged. Royal 8vo. cloth 12s. 6d.

*a,* A knowledge of Persian is absolutely necessary for reading the best compositions in Hindustani. The preceding Grammar, with its Selections, will amply suffice for this purpose: when the student has finished the Hindustani Grammar, with its Selections (in the Persian character), he will find it greatly to his advantage to devote a month to the Persian before he commences the Hagh-o-Halatar.
